CEYLON.

The Ceylon journals contain no local news of importance. The Governor was still at Kandy.

The non-arrival of the steamer Haddington, with the outward mail, had excited much uneasiness. The cause of the delay is explained elsewhere.

The ceremony of consecrating the church and church-yard at Newera Ellia took place on the 24th February, and was performed by the Bishop of Colombo, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Wise and Mr. Symons.

CHINA.

THE LONDON MAIL of Dec. 24th arrived at Hong-Kong on Feb. 12th, per Malta.

The affairs of the empire are not known to be in a much more desperate condition than they were at the date of our last despatch. Fears were entertained, before the commencement of the year, for the safety and quiet of Canton; but, as mentioned on a previous occasion, we need not fear for Canton whilst Kwei-lin-foo, the capital of Kwang-si (the adjoining province), is in the hands of the Imperialists. Our Chinese correspondent indeed, writes: "Tien-teh has ordered his troops to proceed from five different points to attack the city Kwei-lin-foo; in consequence of which the Tartar-General is in a great fright, and has sent despatches to Sen, demanding an immediate supply of men and money. The despatches were received here yesterday."—Friend of China, Feb. 27.

Up to this date (January 31) the disturbances in Kwang-si have been increasing, and the insurgents have strengthened their side by the capture of Yung ngan-shan, a superior district town Pingloh fu, about 40 miles west of the Cassia river, and southwest from the chief town of the prefecture. Their real force and position are difficult to ascertain; for the authorities in Canton have taken particular pains to prevent the publication of all news relating to the outbreak. It is estimated that upwards of 30,000 Imperialists have been sent to the province to suppress this rising.—Chinese Repository.

Jan. 29.—Various rumours are afloat about the rebellion in Kwangse. It is quite impossible to give any reliable account, but it is clear that the rebellion has attained a very serious height, since it is certain, from official decrees published at Peking, that three several millions of taels have been forwarded to the seat of war, from the private treasures of the emperor, at different periods since the commencement of the rebellion, independent of the vast sums supplied by the provincial treasuries and the board of finance. The fact would seem to be that many active chiefs must be engaged in this irruption, or, as is common in Chinese rebellions, the leaders would have been bought off long since. A great battle is rumoured to have been fought some weeks back, and different reports attribute success to both parties—the probability therefore is that neither has achieved any material results, but that the opposing parties,—imperialists and rebels,—are much in the same position towards each other as heretofore. We anxiously await more authentic information on the subject.—N. China Herald.

Governor Bonham was expected to leave for England, on leave of absence, by the next mail. Major-Gen. Jervois was to act as governor during his absence, and Dr. Bowring as Plenipotentiary and Superintendent of Trade.

The troop ship Akbar, with Major Graham, and some men of the 59th, and a detachment of sappers and miners, had arrived at Hong Kong. H. M.'s steamer Sphinx, had also returned from the north, having visited Loochoo, where Capt. Shadwell, after some negotiation, was admitted to the capital, and presented a letter from Lord Palmerston to the Regent, with whom Capt. Shadwell had an audience.

H. M.'s ship Hastings, Rear-Admiral Austin, had sailed for Rangoon.

The American war steamer Susquehanna, to form part of the Japan expedition, had arrived at Hong-Kong.

SIAM.

The expectations of great improvements in the government of Siam, which were indulged on the accession of their present majesties Somdet Phra Chom Klow, and Somdet Phra Pin Klow Chow Yu Hua, to the throne of that kingdom, appear to be in fair way of being realized. The Singapore Free Press, of the 30th January, has two important documents issued by the senior king, sitting on the throne Amarawinichai Mahaisuriyaphan, and of a tenor widely different from any public documents hitherto received from Siam. The present rulers, who have long been associated with the American missionaries, and are accustomed to appreciate European intelligence, have abandoned the policy of exclusiveness, so long pursued by the Indo-Chinese races. The first proclamation enunciates principles and ideas which would reflect honour on the most liberal of European dynasties. Its first object is the increase of the material interests of the kingdom. After alluding to the depression of the internal trade, it announces the determination of the monarch to extend the commercial resources of Siam. "The priest," his Majesty observes, "of all merchandise have fallen," and he considers that the best mode of alleviating this evil is to remove a portion of the harbour dues. He, therefore, directs that the former duty on square-rigged vessels of 1,700 ticals on every fathom's length of the ship's beam shall be reduced to 1,000 ticals. Moreover, the old laws which fettered the movements of the trader through the country are abolished, and he is permitted to dwell or wander about whithersoever he will. The prohibitions against the export of rice are also removed, foreign merchants being allowed to freight their ships in part with rice, "being governed as to amount by the fruitfulness and unfruitfulness of the seasons producing it." Lastly, the introduction of opium is to be permitted under strict regulations which are detailed in the second proclamation.

At the same time that the brother-kings have made these regulations for the extension of commerce, they have also promulgated others which will tend more directly to the advancement of their people in the path of civilization. The dislike of the old king to the admission of missionaries frequently placed the American mission in great difficulty, and effectually prevented them from penetrating into the interior. In future, however, they will be allowed to travel about at pleasure, to preach to whomsoever they will, to have their own chapels and their own cemeteries, and thus in life and death to set the people an example of a purer faith, and to introduce through the length and breadth of the land the ennobling truths of Christianity.

AUSTRALIA.

The Australian papers teem with news from the gold districts, accounts of new diggings and rich yields, of large quantities of gold bought up by the traders or found by gold seekers, and, withal, accounts of depopulation of less favoured localities, of crime at the diggings, of ineffectiveness of the police force, and of Lynch law. Both in New South Wales and Victoria the general success of the miners seems to have been uninterrupted; but it is in the latter colony that the most striking results have been realized. In the week ending the 12th of December the amount of gold brought to Melbourne under escort was 23,000 ounces, and, coupled with what was also brought by private hands, the total value was supposed to have been equivalent to little short of 100,000*l*. New deposits of great richness had been discovered, and it was found almost impossible to retain any one at an ordinary occupation.

In reference to the Victoria gold fields, the Melbourne Morning Herald of December 10th says: "Letters were received in town yesterday from the police magistrate at Gipps Land, stating that the whole dividing range between Sydney and Victoria, and known as the Snowy Mountains, for 300 miles in extent, is one vast gold field. There was upwards of a ton and a half of gold in Mr. Commissioner Powlett's tent, waiting for the escort, up to Saturday last, and it is expected that to-day's escort from the Mount will not be able to bring down one-half the quantity offered. It is intended to increase the military force here to 100 men."

A private letter from Sydney states that "the precious metal arrives in daily increasing quantities, and the estimated export has risen from 4,000,000*l* to 8,000,000*l* per annum. There is also a report to the effect that as far as I have been able to ascertain from personal communication with the diggers of various degree, the labour is by no means so tremendous as some would make it out."

Mr. Hargrave, the original discoverer, had returned to Sydney on the 12th December, after an absence of six months on a tour of exploration, during which he had gone over about 3,000 or 4,000 miles. His report was in the hands of the Governor, but its nature had not transpired.

Labour was becoming very dear, as the average yield at the mines was 8*l* per mile per week, and persons could obtain 2*l* per week and various by taking had there been no gold.

A despatch had just arrived from the Home Government, revoking the order making New South Wales a place to which convicted criminals might be sent. It was immediately forwarded by the Governor to the Legislative Council, and was received with loud cheers.

COPE OF GOOD HOPE

The intelligence is to the effect that from Cape Town, Gen. Somerset and Col. Glynne's troops were in Caffraria, destroying the enemy's forts and devastating their country. On the 11th of February, without any alarm, and hostilities were ordered to be renewed with the utmost energy.

In the meantime, Mr. Brownlee, the Commissioner, had received a communication from the Galka chiefs, asking an extension of the truce; but he told them they must cross the Kei. He adds, in his despatch: "While the chiefs expect to gain their ends by a show of humility and submission, they are at present quite determined not to move from this country."

Sir Harry Smith had published a memorandum, in which it is stated that an amicable arrangement had been concluded with the Trans-Keian chief Bokoo, his son Mapassa, and their tribe. In answer to his message for peace, Kreili was told that Sandilli and the Gaikas must first vacate the Amatolas and cross the Kei. Another memorandum says that the patrol under Gen. Somerset had destroyed nearly the whole of the cultivation of the Gaika district. The Caffres complain that this "new" mode of warfare is not a "proper" one.

Col. Eyre's despatch of the 18th of February says that he has destroyed Sandilli's kraal and extensive corps near the Kieskamma River and in the Helebi Kloof. Some waggons proceeding with an escort of the 43rd regiment from King William's Town to Col. Eyre's division in the Amatolas, with supplies, were attacked at night at Bailey's Grave, and, after firing for several hours upon the party, the enemy succeeded in shooting Surgeon Davison and three men of the 43rd regiment.

No certain intelligence had been received from Gen. Somerset's division. It was rumoured that he had been attacked on the 19th of February, and that the 74th and 91st had suffered; firing was heard in that vicinity at the time, but a letter dated at Gwall, on the 19th, does not mention the attack, but states that the crops of the Caffres were nearly all destroyed. However, the enemy still maintained an attitude of defiance, and the Tambookies were assembling to assist Macomo.

From information from the Mancazana camp we learn that Lieut. Rutherford and twelve mounted burghers killed eight Hottentots and took three prisoners, who state that the Tambookies, with their cattle, had been pouring into Waterkloof for some time back to assist Macomo; that they mustered from 2,000 to 3,000 men, and are well supplied with ammunition; that the Hottentots were strong in Waterkloof, commanded by Jacob Prætorius and Spilman; that they had no ammunition, and had sold most of their guns to the Caffres for victuals, but Macomo will supply them when General Somerset appears in Waterkloof.

The Graham's Town Extra, of February 24, speaks favourably of the news per military post that morning. The proceedings of Colonel Eyre and Colonel Michel were producing a powerful effect upon the Caffre mind. Several friendly chiefs continued to send in the cattle secreted by hostile tribes. The enemy had resolved to continue the strife. Sandilli and Seyolo held the fastnesses of the Kieskamma and Amatola. Macomo was strongly intrenched in the Waterkloof; while Stock retained a lurking place in the Fish River Bush.

In the Basuto country, Orange River Sovereignty, several communications had passed between the Commissioners and the chief Mosheah, who was invited to Winburg, but refused, lest Sikonyella should steal his cattle in his absence. The fact of the Caffres suing for peace seems to facilitate the negotiations of Commissioners Owen and Hogg.

Marauding bands continued to overrun Mancazana, Bavian's River, Albany, and the neighbourhood of Fort Beaufort, where cattle are stolen. The old comando law is put in force there again. The Civil Commissioner was strengthening the posts at Uitenhage. Near Cradock depredations were as numerous as ever. Near Butterworth a large body of Kingos were successfully attacked by Caffres (Kreili's), who killed twenty fugitives and captured 3,000 head of cattle, and afterwards made an effort against a Wesleyan station. In Lower Albany, a very commendable spirit has been evinced in the hope that the present war will be the prelude to a lasting peace. At Blinkwater much hard fighting will be required before Macomo surrenders; he appears neither humbled nor tired of the contest.

Sir Harry Smith had been informed of the appointment of his successor, who had not arrived. Sir Harry had decided that the Constitution shall be proceeded with as a Government measure.

The General Screw Steam Shipping Company's ship Thompson, which brought this intelligence, commenced her voyage the distressing news of the total loss, on the 26th of February, of the steam vessel Birkenhead, which, on her passage from Simon's Bay to Algoa Bay, struck on a sunken rock off Point Danger, and in about twenty minutes went to pieces. Of her crew 454 souls perished, including the commanding officer, Captain Salmond; and several officers in command of the troops on board, struggled to recruit the regiments in Caffraria. The women and children were all saved. The Birkenhead was an iron steamer of 1,400 tons, built by David & Co., Glasgow, and reckoned one of the most splendid masterpieces of the Royal Navy.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Professor Lassen, in his Indische Alterthumskunde, a comprehensive review and digest of the researches hitherto made into the antiquities of India, has investigated the obscure question as to the origin of the Hindu race, which he shows, from ethnological data, not to be indigenous to India.

This name, as applied to the country so called, he observes, has no native authority. The name of the land of the Hindus, according to their own traditions, is Aryāvarta, or "land of the Aryas," which includes only central India, between the Himalayas and the Vindya range. This traditional name is detected in writings and inscriptions as connected with the countries and people of Iran. An analysis of the population of modern India presents a people whose languages are based upon the Sanskrit, as a foreign race, which, having immigrated into central India, drove its aborigines into the mountain fastnesses, and then, pressing southward, subdued some of the tribes of the Vindya; after which they extended further in the same direction.

The physical traits of this intrusive race identify them, according to M. Lassen, with the Caucasian family, and the geographical position of the older inhabitants of India relatively to the Aryas makes it certain that the direction in which the latter spread was from west to east. It is also evident that the Aryas passed the Vindya mountains first at their western termination, for, at the eastern extremity of this range, the wild tribe of the Paharias still maintain themselves, and the Odras of Orissa are represented as barbarians even in the Code of Manu. The near affinity of all the languages of Europe to the language of the Aryas (Sanskrit) is conclusive against the supposition that they were indigenous in India, since it would require us to believe that India was the original seat of all the European nations, and is at variance with strong evidence of the foreign origin of the Aryas, and their ethnological affinity to the people of Iran, whose doctrines and traditions, M. Lassen remarks, have a remarkable coincidence with those of the Hindus. His conclusion, therefore, is that the Arya inhabitants of India were a foreign race, and once lived united with the nations of Iran, and longer with them than with any other. He suggests, in the following passage, their particular locality:—

"If we decide that the Aryas of India and the people of Iran originally had an abode in common, and that not in India, we shall at the same time be prepared to find a tradition of its locality among the Iranians, rather than among the Hindus. We have already observed that the Hindus have no such tradition, although they imagine to themselves a sacred land and seats of divinites in the world of India. The people of Iran, on the contrary, plainly designate as a primitive abode their Airyanem Vaejō, or 'land of the Aryas,' which they place in the extreme east of the whole (the) land of Iran, in the region of the sources of the Oxus and Jaxartes; by the death-bearer Ahriman it had been smitten with winter, and had only two summer months, with ten months of winter. We can think of no other region than the cold highlands on the western declivity of the Belurtag and Mustag, or of the sacred mount Beresat (Bory), which is invoked in the Zendavesta as a fountain-head of waters, and of which the Hindus, perhaps, have preserved a reminiscence, inasmuch as, in their mythical cosmography, they make the great rivers to flow from this region. That the primeval seat of the Iranian is to be looked for here, is an opinion very much strengthened by the fact that we find offshoots from their stock on both sides of this high eminence; for the old settled inhabitants of Cashgar, Yarkand, Aksu, Turfan, and Kuml, are Tajik (of Buddhist descent), and speak Persian. It is here alone that the Mayas spread themselves into the interior of Upper Asia, and their strongest and most vigorous germ seems to have been planted in this high mountain."

The Hebrew tradition respecting the primitive abode of mankind, in the opinion of M. Lassen, accords with this view. It may be added, that the land of Iran, in the widest sense, as represented in the well known and venerable tradition of the Hebrews, which assigns to it the site of the Shemites, as the country of the progenitors of this second great branch of the Caucasian family of nations, the Shemites, dwell south-west of the highlands; their tradition points to the highland in the north-east, as their home. Whatever designation may be given to the tradition respecting Eden, its geography cannot be satisfactorily explained, except by such a conception of it as may be supposed to have been formed in the imagination of an nomadic people, during a foundation of the world, while at the same time the great essential features are so prominently marked, the mountainous tract, and so that the whole is embraced in a picture of simple grandeur and beauty. Such a picture, in the opinion of Eden, if it is not conceived of as composed by the nation of the Tigris and Euphrates on the west, and of the Oxus and Indus on the East. It is then the highlands of Iran, in the widest sense, which are ascended from the lowlands of Mesopotamia, of Turan, and of the Pentapotamy, and are enclosed by the Zegros mountain-range and the Armenian mountains on the west, and by the Belurtag, Hindukush, and Suleiman mountains on the east,—a conception and manner of bounding which even scientific geography need not reject. At the same time, the extreme borders of this table-land, or the country about Ararat, and the neighbourhood of the Belurtag, have a significant prominence in the most ancient traditions of the Shemites and the Aryas, respectively, as their original seats. The reminiscences of these races reach back only to the time when they had already taken possession of the western and eastern extremities of this highland. To this common father-land, to this pre-historical contact with each other of the Shemites and Indo-Europeans, to which the radical connection of their languages also bears witness, are to be referred those primitive traditions of the two races, which cannot have come into the possession of both by later intercourse between them, and are indeed too widely spread, and too peculiarly modified, to have been borrowed by one from the other within the limits of history,—such as the tradition of the four ages, of the ten progenitors, and of the Deluge."

The Sūtras of the Sāṅkhya (a philosophical system of the Hindus), entitled Sāṅkhya Tatva Samāsa, of the existence of which the late Mr. Colebrooke was in doubt, have been published by Dr. J. R. Ballantyne, at Mirzapore. With regard to this set of Sūtras, there are no materials to decide its date. Who is the author of its commentary, bearing the title Tattva-samāsasūtravṛtti, we do not learn from the commentary itself. There is, however, an interesting notice on the Tattva Samāsa Sūtras and its Vṛtti in a commentary of the Kārikā, entitled Sāṅkhyatattvavilāsa, by Raghunātha Tarkavāgisa Bhattachārya (a work not known to Colebrooke), where at its commencement the traditional belief is given as to the origin of this collection of Sūtras, and of the author of the commentary, together with the Sūtras themselves, and a short explanation of them. We think this tradition very curious, and therefore transcribe the whole passage relating to the school, from the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, No. 222:—

"In olden times, a certain Brahmana, the disciple of Kapila, Asuri by name, overwhelmed by the three kinds of pain (viz. the pain arising from one's own nature, mental or bodily, from external animated agents, and from external inanimate agencies), took refuge with the great Rishi Kapila, the teacher of the Sāṅkhya, and having told him his name and age, he said: O venerable, great Rishi Kapila, what is truth in this world, and what must I do to obtain the object of life? To this Kapila replied: I will tell you. 1. Eight producers; 2. Sixteen productions; 3. The soul; 4. The three qualities; 5. Evolution; 6. Revolution; 7. The ministers of the soul; 8. The province of organs; 9. The superintending deities; 10. The five modifications of intellect; 11. The five sources of action; 12. The five vital airs; 13. The five, whose nature is action; 14. The five-fold ignorance; 15. Disability of twenty-eight kinds; 16. Acquiescence of nine kinds; 17. Perfection of eight kinds; 18. The radical facts of ten kinds; 19. Benevolent creation; 20. Created existence of fourteen kinds; 21. Parental creation of three kinds; 22. Bondage of three kinds; 23. Liberation of three kinds; 24. Proof of three kinds; 25. Pain of three kinds,—this is the truth supreme. Having thoroughly understood this, a person will obtain the object of life, and not be subject again to the three kinds of pain. Kapila, having composed those Sūtras of the Sāṅkhya, thus instructed his disciple, Asuri by name. Asuri then saluted his teacher with the following verse: 'Salutation to the great Rishi Kapila, who obtained at the first creation the knowledge of the twenty-five principles by his birth,' and having promised: 'Now we shall explain the aphorisms of the Sāṅkhya with regard to the principles, commenced in this manner: A certain Brāhmana, by not telling in this manner his name, he was desirous of showing his humility, and having given the account according to truth, and told, that Kapila replied, he set forth the aphorisms, declared by Kapila, in the first of which the 'Producers' are named. Having in this manner engaged himself to compose a commentary to the aphorisms of the Sāṅkhya, and instructed his disciple, Pancha-likha by name. It is said in the Sūtra, in the 10th Sūtra: 'This system publishing (doctrines) the most profound and subtlely imparted to Asuri, Asuri composed it in Sanskrit, by which it was extensively propagated.' The Sūtra is under the name of Upanishad. Kapila gave the name of this commentary; therefore it is named the twenty-five principles of the Sāṅkhya by seventy-two Kārikas. Thus goes the system of the Sāṅkhya."

At Khanghur, at 3.45 A.M., on the 24th of January, three smart shocks of earthquake, following each other in rapid succession, were felt. The direction was from west to east, and the time occupied was 45 seconds. There it was attended with no danger to any of the houses, but in the Murree hills its effects have been very severe, and attended, with great loss of life and property. Accurate accounts state the number of killed belonging to the Murree tribe to amount to 340 individuals, and an, as yet, unknown quantity of cattle and other animals. The majority of the houses, and the greater portion of the walls of their capital—Kahun—fell, burying men, women, and children, in the ruins, and in a large cave a little to the north, which was inhabited by a number of families, the sides also fell in, and almost all perished. The city is now totally deserted, and so great is the terror prevalent amongst them, that they are said to be anxious to remove from the hills altogether. The effects of the shock were such that large masses have fallen from the mountains, and the celebrated Nuffosk Pass, leading to Kahun, has become blocked up. Amidst much havoc and desolation, the only advantage which has accrued is that the river Lherre, which unless when rain falls is lost immediately before its exit point from the hills, has suddenly extended many miles further than usual at this season. It is now flowing past the town of Lherre, and the inhabitants are busily cultivating from it—for there, as in all the alluvial soils of this country, the rule holds good—as the supply of water so are the capabilities for growth. This earthquake having been so distinctly felt at a place like Khanghur, situated in a desert, and fifty miles from the nearest hills, is a point of considerable interest, and the fact that the shock was not felt at Shikarpoor, Kismore, or any other place to the eastward, shows that the earth "wave" over a very short distance had become either lost, or diminished, so as to be imperceptible. Accurate accounts of its having been distinctly felt at Dadur, nearly a hundred miles to the west by north of the unfortunate Kahun, and at Guridava, sixty miles north-west of Khanghur, have been received. These two places, lying near the foot of the Hala range, are distant about sixty miles from each other, and considering that the direction of the "wave" was perfectly made out from west to east, and that a point due west from Khanghur would strike about thirty miles south of Gundava, the origin or cause of this earthquake, or the point from which the telluric undulations started, must have extended over a line, a hundred miles in length, at least. All accounts agree as to the time of occurrence, at the places mentioned, viz., the false dawn, which at this season is shortly before 4 A.M. On referring to meteorological tables which are kept at Khanghur, on two points of much interest, probably connected with this earthquake, are observable. At sunrise, on the previous day, the 23rd, the thermometer stood at 32°, whereas at the corresponding period on the 24th, about three hours after the occurrence of the shock, the temperature was 41°—an elevation of nine degrees compared with the previous morning. The sky on the preceding day was perfectly clear, and light winds blew from the N.W.; but shortly after sunrise on the 24th, dense cumuli made their appearance over the hills to the westward, and in less than twenty minutes the whole expanse became one mass of dark vapoury clouds. Before mid-day these had entirely disappeared. The maximum temperature on both days was nearly the same, viz. 69° 5 on the 23rd, and 70° on the 24th. The barometric indications did not seem to be remarkably affected.—Bombay Times.

"We dive beneath the liquid crystal of the Indian Ocean, and our childhood's dreams of the marvellous magic of fairy-land are realized. When day declines and the shadows of night possess the deep, this fantastic garden is illuminated with fresh splendour. Millions of glowing sparks,—through the microscope, little crabs and medusæ,—dance like glow-worms in the darkness. In the greenish phosphoric light, waves the sea-feather, by day vermillion-coloured. Every corner is luminous; what, perhaps, by day was brown and unsightly amid the general brilliancy, now beams in the changing radiance of red, green, and yellow light. To complete the wonders of this magic scene, the six-foot silver disk of the moon, fish shines softly through the crowd of twinkling stars."—Schleiden's Pflanze.

The artificial pearls of China, covering images of Budha, are formed by placing in the living animal (a species of Mytilus) small metallic images; which occasion irritation, and in the course of a year they are found covered by the pearly secretion. When the foreign body is suffered to remain for several years, and the muscle continues to thrive, very beautiful pearly deposits are formed.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

WEDNESDAY, April 14, 1852.

THE all-important subject of the future government of British India has been mooted, we cannot say debated, in the House of Lords, upon a motion by the First Minister of the Crown for the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the operation of the Act of 1833. The speech of Lord Derby was merely explanatory, and, with guarded caution, avoided committing the speaker to any specific plan, although he avowed that he entertained "a strong opinion" as to the course of policy which Parliament ought to pursue in this matter. Lord Ellenborough, the only other speaker, not having the same official motive for reserve, was frank, and even prodigal, in the exposition of his views.

There is, we believe, little reason to distrust the rumour, that the late Government had fully determined upon certain changes in the existing machinery of Indian administration, subject of course to any adverse opinions expressed by the committees or by Parliament. It is understood that it was their intention to maintain the double government, reducing, however, still further what remains of the direct authority of the Court of Directors, and, in particular, depriving the Court of the sole and absolute power of recalling governors. In compensation, it would have been proposed, it is said, to concede the claims of the civil service to a share in the higher functions of the Indian administration, by assigning the government of Bengal (to be separated from the supreme government) and of the other presidencies to civilians, to be chosen by the Governor-General. Further, it is said to have been part of the plan, that the councils at the subordinate presidencies should be abolished, one member representing each presidency to have a seat in the supreme council; and that the Punjab should form a separate government, making, with that of the North-west Provinces, six distinct presidencies, subject to the supreme authority in India, the Governor-General in Council.

With these views, of which Lord Derby could not be ignorant, before him, all that he proposes is to refer the whole subject to a committee, who will be supplied with the fullest information, and to abide by the decision of Parliament upon their report.

Although his Lordship abstained from disclosing his own opinions, he dropped some incidental remarks from which a surmise or conjecture may be formed that these opinions are of a "conservative" character. He acknowledged that the existing machinery for the government of India, although at first eight anomalous, had operated most beneficially to the advancement of its progress and for the interests of humanity. He thinks that the power left to the Court of Directors is not greater than it ought to be, though the absolute and uncontrolled right of recalling governors, he admits, may have led to some inconvenience. Whether the nominal authority vested in the Court of Directors should be placed in the same hands as the real, and the intervention of the Court be dispensed with, is a question, he says, requiring serious consideration; but, without declaring his own bias, he nevertheless avows that there are "strong and valid reasons for not departing from the existing system." The transfer of the whole Indian patronage from the Court of Directors to the government of the day would be, he justly remarks, to place a very dangerous and unconstitutional amount of irresponsible power in its hands; whereas, at present, that patronage is dispensed without any direct connection with political considerations; and it is, he distinctly affirmed, a subject not of complaint, but of congratulation, that old and meritorious servants of the Company, returning to their native country, should be induced, by so cheap a premium, to bring their knowledge and experience of India into the service of its Government at home, and be enabled, by the exercise of their patronage as directors, to introduce others, even their own immediate relatives and connections, into a career they had themselves run with so much honour. This Lord Derby rightly considered not to be a corrupt exercise of patronage, but, on the contrary, a beneficial one, "calculated to promote the welfare of India."

Lord Ellenborough, as we have before said, evinced no backwardness in expounding his views upon the subject; he seemed, indeed, anxious to disburthen himself. We must do the noble Earl the justice to say that, although some natural traces may be discerned in his speech of the odium in longum jacens, his suggestions are statesmanlike and practical, and the tone in which they were expressed only here and there betrays anything like asperity or acrimony. He assumed, in the first place, as a settled point, that the Indian patronage must remain severed from the Crown,—a provision which he considered to be conducive to the interests of India as well as England. He admitted, "though with very considerable reluctance," that it was necessary to continue the system of double government. These two principles, the essential parts of the existing machinery, being conceded, he proceeded to explain the organic and other changes he proposed in order to make the machinery, in his opinion, more efficient.

His suggestions are the following: 1. That the Board of Control should have the same power over the home treasury as over that of India; 2. that the audit of the Company's accounts should be made by an auditor independent of them, appointed by the Crown; 3. that the Crown should have the absolute power of nominating the commanders-in-chief of the Indian armies, who should be ex-officio members of the council; 4. that the Crown should have the discretion of sending out to India any number of royal troops; 5. that the Crown should have a negative in the appointment of members of council; 6. that the recall of the Governor-General and the governors should emanate solely from the Crown; 7. that a representative of each of the subordinate councils should sit in the supreme legislative council, and that the "fourth ordinary member," instead of being an English lawyer, should be selected from that grade out of which under-secretaries of state are mostly taken; 8. that the constituency by whom the Directors are elected should be enlarged, by giving a vote to all officers, civil and military, who had served in India for ten years, which would double the number of voters; 9. that the Court of Directors should be reduced, from twenty-four members, to half that number; 10. that one-fourth of the cadetships and writerships should be exposed to sale at a fixed price; 11. that the Governor-General should have a discretionary power of employing military officers in civil capacities.

It is not our design in this article to discuss these various suggestions, the general aim of which is obviously to abridge as much as possible the power of the Court of Directors. Of some of them we have already expressed an opinion; of others we need only say that they are specious, and deserve consideration. We shall restrict our notice upon the present occasion to two, namely, the proposals to double the constituency, and to reduce the number of the directors one-half. Both have reference chiefly to the exercise of the patronage, which Lord Ellenborough thinks is too much governed by the principle of nepotism,—a principle, by the way, which, in the opinion of the Earl of Derby, is unobjectionable, in the manner in which it operates upon such a body as the Court of Directors.

There is, undoubtedly, at the first view, something plausible in the proposal to endow Indian officers of a certain standing in the service with the privilege of voting for a director, which would provide an additional reward for long service, and as his Lordship observes, impart a more Indian character to the constituency. On the other hand, it would reduce the value of the votes in the hands of the proprietary. Both the noble Earls estimate very lightly the utility of the Court of Proprietors; but we cannot forget that, when the last arrangement was made, upon the footing of a compromise, between the East-India Company and the executive government, the latter insisted upon the territorial revenue of India being charged with the dividends, because the government plan "allotted to the proprietary body important powers and functions in the administration of Indian affairs; and, in order to insure their properly exercising such powers and functions, his Majesty's Ministers deemed it essential that they should be linked and bound, in point of interest, to the country which they are to assist in governing." The improvement of the constituency, even as an electoral body, is undoubtedly an object of importance, and although we are not convinced that its enlargement from 1,800 to 3,600 would expedite, as Lord Ellenborough expects, the election of qualified directors, by rendering personal canvass, supposing that to be an evil, impossible, this proposal is worth attention.

With regard to the other, the reduction of the directory from twenty-four to twelve members, we observe that it rests not upon a suggestion that the business to be transacted by the Court, in its seven committees, and collectively, is insufficient to occupy more than half its present number; but upon the theory that, if the patronage were divided amongst twelve instead of twenty-four, the proportion of each would be so large that it would overflow the limits of relationship, and refresh the barren soil beyond them. We must repeat that Lord Derby does not deem the qualified limitation of the patronage, which this suggestion is designed to check, an evil; and it must be remembered that Lord Ellenborough proposes to curtail the amount of patronage at the disposal of the Directors, by making one-fourth of the cadetships, and writerships saleable.

It would be premature to pronounce a more decided sentence upon these proposals, which will no doubt receive due attention from the committee, who will have the benefit of evidence before they come to any conclusion. In the course of a few days, the whole subject will be again considered in the other House of Parliament, and we shall recur to it in our next issue.

The English newspaper press of India has received some severe blows from various quarters. One President of the India Board called it a "rascally" press; another has very recently expressed a hope that the Governor-General will treat the press of India, to which he imputes motives of action inconsistent with fidelity to its trust,—with "the disregard it deserves." A late commander-in-chief of the Indian army, denounced the papers of India as "low, lying papers," and a civil servant of the Company, in a work lately published, has deliberately said of the Indian press that it is unscrupulous, false, and libellous, and has directly charged the editors with taking bribes.

The real character of the Anglo-Indian press is not to be estimated by these accusations, some of which are evidently vindictive. To form a correct judgment of that character, it is necessary to know what the Indian press really is.

The journals of England reflect the opinions of the community, or at least of large bodies of the people, upon whose sympathy they depend for sustentation. The English journals published in India have no sympathy, of the same kind, with the people of the country, and do not profess to expound the sentiments of the native population, from whom they receive neither sympathy nor support. They circulate amongst aliens, the European residents, who consist of the civil and military servants of the East-India Company, and the mercantile communities at the presidencies, with a slight sprinkling of settlers in what is termed "the Mofussil."

A press in these peculiar circumstances might be expected to become the mere organ of classes, cliques, or coteries, each having a journal under its separate control. But the Indian press is no such thing; even the presidential journals are less infected with a class-spirit than the provincial press in England. It is not meant that the newspapers of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay stand perfectly aloof from all local influence; but this influence does not appear to be exercised to an injurious extent, and the extra-presidential papers operate as a wholesome check upon such an undue bias towards class interests as might result from the share which mercantile houses have in the property of the former.

The Indian journals are entirely independent of the Government. No public servant is permitted to have any share in the property or the management of Indian newspapers, or even to write in them. Whatever communications are deemed by the local authorities fit to be made public through the press, are, we believe, given indiscriminately to all the newspapers at the respective presidencies. There are no journals in India, as at home, known to be "organs of the Government." Reactionism would excite an outcry amongst the non-favourable and would be severely censured and arrested by the home authorities.

These conditions furnish some security for the fairness and impartiality of their opinions upon the matters which fall under the judgment of the Editors, consisting of Eastern political intelligence, local incidents, and European news. The criticisms upon the latter, generally speaking, denote the leaning of the writers towards the principles of one or other of the parties at home, which is unavoidable, since the articles they republish embody party sentiments; but they are temperate, in no case that we have lately observed indicating extreme views of political questions. It is worthy of remark that the tone of English journalism in British India has moderated since its liberation from government restraint; that, whilst the censorship existed, the strictures upon home and local politics denoted the secret action of a spirit more bitter and hostile to the government than has appeared since its abandonment. How much of that spirit may have been traceable to the idiosyncrasies of the conductors of the journals, and how much to the reactionary element naturally engendered by a state of bondage, we do not presume to decide—we merely notice the fact. The policy of the local authorities, as might be predicted, rouses into more active energy "the genius and the mortal elements" of political writers in India, and the acts of the authorities are criticised always with freedom, sometimes with severity, rarely with the acrimony of party rancour. It is fortunate for the cause of truth that the editors of Indian newspapers exercise this independence, which enables journalists at home, slenderly acquainted with Indian topics, to dogmatize upon them with less damage than otherwise to the community. Nothing appears to provoke more indignation on the part of the Indian editors than any symptom in one of their number of servile complaisance towards the Government or its functionaries, who are watched, from the highest to the lowest, with extreme jealousy. That the judgments passed by these writers are various,—differing often from each other to celo, and therefore not always right,—is no proof of their being insincere. They are not, however, mere verdicts, but opinions justified by arguments; which are in their turn examinable by those who read them. In most cases, too, the writers are known; for it is an incident which must not be left out of consideration in estimating the character of the Indian press, that the editors and principal writers are not, as in this country, shrouded from the masses in a sort of sacred gloom, but their names are as familiarly spoken of, and even mentioned in print, in connection with their journals, as those of the journals themselves.

This incident would seem to provide some security against a vice, which is, nevertheless, often imputed to the Indian press, namely, its personality. With very few exceptions, however, there appears to us to be a little of this quality in the animadversions of Indians as in those of home editors. The source of the complaint lies in the fact that the bulk of the European community in India consists of official or military persons, who, like all the communities habituated to this class, look upon criticism with some in a local newspaper upon, perhaps, a higher coloured charge, not only degrades them in the eyes of the local world in which they move, but may impair their authority, so small as to damage their prospects. Strangers in the land, and in a character of no judge or an officer, who to the hands of a local India would be whispered at the catcherry, discussed at the mess, seized upon as an acceptable reinforcement to the stale topics of a station, reverberated by the other journals, and at the end of two months commented upon in letters from home. Hence the complaint of the "unscrupulous" and "libellous" character of the Indian press. If the charge be true, the remedy is easy. The law courts in India are by no means reluctant to entertain charges against newspapers, nor very lenient in their treatment of offenders.

The talents displayed by the writers in the Anglo-Indian newspapers vary in quality, — which may as truly be said of those employed upon the London daily press; but, speaking with more precision, we may affirm that some of the Anglo-Indian newspapers are conducted with an ability that would do no discredit to London journalism. The qualifications required of an Indian editor, moreover, in addition to an exact knowledge of Indian affairs, include a certain tact and discernment with which the ablest writers are not always gifted; for we have observed that, in more than one instance, a direct importation from England, selected as being of a superior quality, and warranted, has not suited the market. The readers of an Anglo-Indian journal appear to prefer an editor whose taste and habits of thinking have become acclimated in the East.

We have said enough, probably, to prove that the newspaper press of India deserves to stand much higher than it does in public estimation in this country. Deriving, as we do, so much of the staple of our own publication from Indian journals, transferring from thence not only articles of intelligence, but occasionally ably written dissertations upon various subjects connected with the political and social affairs of the East, we should be ungrateful if we withheld this honest testimony in its behalf.

The only serious defect which can, in our opinion, be fairly imputed to the Anglo-Indian press, is its want of connection with the native community, and its being an exponent only of the interests of the transient residents from Europe. In short, as we have already said, it does not represent the public opinion of the natives of India. Is this really an objection? We think not. If the English newspapers in that country were to become the mouthpieces of the different classes of which the native population is composed, some partial good might possibly result; but the fruit would be chiefly evil. Whilst India remains under its present rulers, it is difficult to conceive how an English press can be the exponent of native public opinion there, as public opinion is expounded in England, without advancing theories and advocating doctrines subversive of British supremacy. It seems as preposterous to look for the expression of native public opinion in an English press in India, as for a representative assembly of Hindoos, until we desire to get rid of its government. For all practical purposes, the natives have no difficulty in making their grievances known through the Anglo-Indian press (which manifests no backwardness, but often an alacrity, to proclaim them), or through their own press, which furnishes a safer medium of discussing political topics, interesting to the native population, than the English papers. The journals published in the native tongue, however, indeed, but a limited circulation, and exert little influence, which is not to be regretted; nor some of them, especially the Mohammedan, occasionally give vent to sentiments violently hostile to the British name and character.

CORRESPONDENCE

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—Lord Ellenborough, in the House of Lords, on the 5th of April, is reported to have said:—"During the last war (1824 to 1826), all the operations were carried on by means of the Madras army." That was not the case. The Annual Register for 1824, p. 116, states, that "a considerable armament, both naval and military, drawn partly from the presidency of Madras, and partly from that of Calcutta, was assembled in the beginning of May, at Port Cornwallis, under the command of Sir Archibald Campbell and Commodore Grant: They reached the Rangoon river on the 10th." There were landed at Rangoon some Bengal artillery, and the Governor-General's body-guard. Lieut.-Col. (now Sir G.) Pollock commanded the former. The Madras presidency sent the rest of the native troops to Rangoon. There were native troops sent to Arracan from Bengal; also some from Madras. In the attack on Cheduba, Brigadier McCraith commanded, and the 40th Bengal N.I., under Col. Hampton, was left as a garrison. A great number of Bengal native infantry corps were employed on the frontier, Chittagong, &c., and were intended to be advanced if required. I find that, on the 14th October, 1824, Col. Godwin was despatched from the Rangoon river against the important town of Martaban. The sailing ships took fifteen days in reaching the place. It was taken by a detachment of 220 men, with a loss of 7 killed, and 14 wounded. Gen. Godwin, who is to command the present expedition, is the same officer. There were, however, 40,000 men employed at any one time. There were eleven European regiments (see Mr. H. H. Wilson's official account) employed during the war; but several were sent away from Arracan, and replaced by others. Gen. Morrison commanded the former in Arracan (S. E. division); he left, and Lieut.-Gen. Sir W. Richards (Bengal) succeeded to the command.

UNITED STATES EXPEDITION AGAINST JAPAN.

The Correspondent of the Times at New York (an American), makes the following remarks upon the expedition against Japan, which, it will be seen, strongly confirm the view we took in our last impression of its real object.

"Commodore Perry will have under his command the most powerful maritime force we have ever sent to the East Indies, and it is (according to our maritime scale) very much larger than pacific purposes would require. Something else, then, is intended than a simple hydrographic survey of the coasts of Northern China and the innumerable rich islands in the Indian Archipelago, as the organs of Mr. Fillmore's Administration tell us. This, doubtless, is one of the chief objects in view; but it is not the only object, nor does any man of sense who knows the history of the extension and conquests of this country believe any such thing. It is very clear that, after we have gone through to the Pacific, and got possession, for all practical purposes, of the continent, our adventurous spirit will widen for some new field for conquest, excitement, and fortune. Editors may write of it as they will, the fact can be read now as clearly as it will be a year or ten years hence—that our aggressions and conquests on the Asiatic coast are beginning. The United States will shortly enact the same gunpowder drama England played in '42 with China, and we shall do it with less moderation. Already the Sandwich Islands, like the East, are falling into our hands. Other Pacific Islands are ready to be gathered. And then will come Japan, whose brilliant, opulent, and populous capital already glares on the eye of ambition and inflames the heart of cupidity. We have 'finished up' America, as the phrase goes; and as there is nothing to hope for in Europe, the eye of the nation, which has for some years been resting on the glittering quartz mountains of California, is now bent on the ancient shores of Asia. Others will soon be opened to the least soil of the political domain of our republic."—Times, 27th April 1853.

"And, after all, is it not inevitable that sooner or later those besotted Oriental nations must come out from their barbarous seclusion, and rush into the ranks of civilization? England has been at work for a long time in India, and she has made a beginning in China. Let us take the Pacific Islands, group by group, advance to Japan, and meet in Shanghai. The Anglo-Saxons are the masters of the world; unless the Greeks (the moderns) make a new Napoleon, and carry with them the night of another barbarous age to the shores of the Mediterranean."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS, APRIL 2.

Committee on East-India Affairs.—The Earl of Derby, in moving for the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the operation of the Act 3 & 4 Will. IV., c. 85, for the better government of her Majesty's Indian territories, and to report their observations thereon, gave a brief sketch of the extent of territory over which British authority now stretched,—embracing 28 degrees of latitude and 20 of longitude, inhabited by 150,000,000 of people of various races and adverse creeds,—observing that, looking at the vast dimensions and resources of this gigantic empire, it was no light and unimportant task which he commended to the consideration of their lordships, who were to investigate the machinery by which the affairs of this great empire is conducted,—a machinery which, formed for different purposes, had gradually been diverted from its original intentions, and applied and adapted to the change of circumstances in which it is now placed,—an institution and a machinery which would seem at the outset to be most anomalous, but which had yet operated most beneficially to the interests of humanity and to the advancement and progress of that mighty empire which it superintends. He then described the changes which had been made in the privileges and functions of the East-India Company by the Acts of 1813 and 1833, and their position under the provisions of the last-mentioned Act, under which, he said, the proprietors of East-India Stock ceased to have any control over the affairs of India. The whole business of the Court of Proprietors consisted in receiving the dividends upon their stock, and also in electing the members of the Court of Directors. Further than that, they had no functions whatever to perform. It is true, they may meet and discuss together, but, with regard to the legislation of India, any decision or unanimous vote of the whole Court of Proprietors need not exercise the slightest influence over the conduct of the Government. And, indeed, there was some reason why they should not exercise any power over the affairs of India, for they had no interest in it except such as they derived from the payments of dividends, which are made a first charge upon the Indian revenue. The Directors, generally speaking, are, a great portion of them, men whose lives have been spent and whose fortunes have been accumulated in India, and who must therefore be familiarly acquainted with the working of the system, with the country, and the character of the inhabitants, and who are practically well qualified to assist in the government. One-fourth of the twenty-four Directors go out of office every four years, but, as they are generally re-elected, the whole body of Directors may practically be said to sit for life. In these Directors,—whose power he was not prepared to say was greater than it ought to be,—is vested, with regard to most of the offices, the power of making the appointments in the civil service of India. The exceptions are, the Governor-General, the judges, the bishops, appointments which are reserved to the Crown, and a small number of the subordinate appointments, which are left to the President of the Board of Control. The real and substantial power which the Court of Directors possess,—a power which may lead to considerable difference of opinion, and which ought to be carefully and deliberately considered,—is that of recalling each and every servant of the Company, from the Governor-General down to the lowest clerk, without the concurrence of the Crown. For every appointment they must have the concurrence of the Crown, which has the power of recalling every servant of the Company in India. There may be occasions—there have been—upon which the exercise of that authority by the Directors may practically lead to some inconvenience. But the legislative power of the Court of Directors, great as it may appear, dwindles down to nothing; for not only have the Court of Proprietors no power to issue a single order which has the force of law, but the Court of Directors can issue no order with regard to the legislation or government of India without the consent of the Crown, signified through the President of the Board of Control. They have no power of issuing a single despatch, and, more, no power of refusing the issuing of a single despatch, which the President of the Board of Control may think it his duty to insist upon their transmitting. If he sends to the Court of Directors a despatch, and they refuse to deal with it, he may, in a fortnight, compel the transmission of that despatch; and the single exception is a very improbable case, in which the orders of the President of the Board may be contrary to law, in which case the Court of Directors hold that they have an appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench, to know whether they ought or not to execute those orders. Further, supposing the Court of Directors should think fit to send particular instructions, and the despatch, when submitted to the President of the Board of Control, should be by him disapproved of, not only can they not send out the despatch, but the Board of Control exercises the power of modifying and altering the despatch, so as, if it thought fit, to reverse the whole sense and meaning of the instructions, and to give instructions altogether at variance with those which they desire to go out. Virtually, the administration of the affairs of India in this country is vested in the President of the Board of Control. Looking at this anomalous machine, conducted, in the first place, apparently by Directors, elected by a body of proprietors who have no interest in the affairs of the country which the Directors are to govern,—conducted again by those Directors under the control of the President of the Board of Control, and thereby reduced to be in fact a subordinate Government board,—the question naturally suggests itself, to what purpose is it to continue this complex and anomalous machinery? Why not vest the nominal authority in the same hands which are now possessed of the real? and why not dispense altogether with the unnecessary intervention of the Board of Directors? That is a very important question, and one which the committee will have carefully and seriously to consider. For his part, he thought that very valid and strong reasons may be given for not departing from the machine in existence. But it was undoubtedly a question open to the consideration of the committee; and they ought to be satisfied, if they recommend the continuance of this system, either that it is one which works well, or that it works, at all events, better than any modification or alteration, by giving a more direct power to the Crown. Lord Derby then adverted to the Secret Committee, who, in conjunction with the President of the Board of Control, manage negotiations and dealings of a political character with native princes. He next referred to the changes made since 1833 in the machinery of administration in India, observing that none of their lordships would dream that the time had arrived at which popular institutions can be applied to the government of India, but that, practically speaking, it is necessary that the power of governing these vast dominions, subject to the control of the Government at home, should be vested, as it is at present, in the separate councils, and more especially in the supreme authority of the Governor-General in Council. He did not lay any stress upon the extent of territory acquired by the Company since 1834, because he was by no means sure that the acquisition of that territory was an unmixed advantage, and he was sure that the possession of great portions was forced upon a very reluctant Government by circumstances over which they exercised no control; but the fact is, that, since that time, there had been added an area of 165,000 square miles, comprising a population of 6,380,000 souls. But while there had been an increase in the territories of the Company, and an increase of revenue equal to the increased charge to be borne, the commercial prosperity had made rapid and immense strides during that period. In the course of that time, in the arts of peace there had been a great and salutary increase. Through the whole of India there were only employed in the service of the Company 31 chaplains of the Church of England in 1813, when the episcopal authority was first introduced; in 1832, there were a bishop and 75 clergymen. The Act of 1833 multiplied the number of bishops, and there are now three bishops and no fewer than 130 chaplains of the Church of England, independent of the ministers of the Scotch Church. Amongst the great social improvements which had taken place, cautiously and gradually introduced, since 1834, was the total abolition of slavery; a law commission has framed a most elaborate penal code, and, since 1833, there had been a very great interest taken in a matter of signal importance, viz. the employment of the natives of India themselves in the minor courts, and extending considerably the judicial authority conferred upon those courts. He had before said that the time is far from being come at which anything like popular institutions should be conferred upon India; but he was sure that this is our bounden duty, in the interests of humanity, benevolence, morality, and religion,—that as far and as fast as we can do it safely, wisely, and prudently, the inhabitants of India should be gradually entrusted with more and more of the superintendence of their own internal affairs, under the control of British authority. And even if that gradual admission of the Indian race to the benefits of self-government, slowly and cautiously, should have the effect, not of consolidating and extending the great fabric of British dominion, but of leading a people accustomed to self-government to desire something more of control over their political as well as their judicial affairs; even if the gigantic power of Britain over India should, in the course of years,—but centuries must first elapse,—fall to the ground by the operation of its own hand, it would be an achievement worthy of a nation like this to have rescued the native population from the state of ignorance, superstition, and debasement, in which we found a large portion of them sunk; and to have placed them, at the expiration of the period of our dominion, in the capacity of administering the affairs of their own country as an independent nation, but under the influence of those laws, principles, and sound maxims, for which they ought ever to entertain gratitude to the country which had with care and pains instilled them into their hearts. The whole of these details, and every detail which Parliament may desire, will freely be laid before the committee. There will also be laid before it the steps that have been taken for promoting the material prosperity of the country, the improvement of the communications, the formation of roads and canals, the clearing of the country, the irrigation of districts, which, from want of it, were subject to all the horrors of periodical famine. It will be for their lordships to consider whether the Directors of the East-India-Company, under the control and superintendence of the Government here, and through the administration of the Government-General, have or have not been faithful and efficient stewards of the great interests committed to their charge. It will then be for them, having inquired into the practical working of the existing system, to consider how far it is wise to continue, either in the whole or in part—how far altogether to abrogate—how far to alter or to modify in detail—the system. One principal point to consider is, whether there be advantage or detriment to the public service in retaining that intervening authority between the Board of Control, or the Government of the day, and the Government of India, namely, the Court of Directors. That Court have little substantial power; but their suggestions are neither few nor unimportant. They meet weekly for considering and replying to the despatches; they give to her Majesty's Government on all occasions their willing and cordial co-operation and assistance. All those who have filled the high situation of President of the Board of Control will cordially acknowledge how much advantage they have derived in the administration of the affairs of India from the talents, abilities, and experience of those gentlemen, by whose advice they have been in every respect guided. But the Court of Directors, if they have no substantial power, have a large amount of patronage. Now, is it desirable, or is it not, that that patronage should rest in the hands which now hold it? Is it desirable that the patronage of an empire like India should be wasted in those who now exercise it, or, as the patronage of other departments, be placed in the hands of the servants of the Crown, changing from time to time according to the political changes in this country? In the first place, to bestow upon the Government of the day the whole amount of the patronage of India would be to place a very dangerous and unconstitutional amount of power practically in the hands of irresponsible Ministers. No Minister of the Crown, however honest might be his intentions, and however true and sincere his desire to administer that patronage for the benefit of India, could administer it with so much knowledge of the circumstances and exigencies of the country as a permanent body, the great majority of whom are intimately and personally connected with the affairs of India, and who have an accurate knowledge of the country, its relations, and its inhabitants. The Court of Directors consists at this time of thirty gentlemen—that is, including the six who went out last year; and of these thirty gentlemen there are no less than twenty-one, in office at the moment, who have served the Company with distinction in various branches of the service, and who bring consequently, to the discussion of Indian affairs the whole of their experience and knowledge with regard to the condition and requirements of that country. With regard to an empire like India, it is of infinite importance that the controlling power should, as far as possible, be kept aloof from political squabbles and party quarrels. That object, as is well known, is practically obtained by the system which now prevails; for although undoubtedly there may be, and are, influences connected with the patronage of that department which may connect it in a certain way with political considerations; yet it is notorious that, although the politics of the Directors, some of whom have seats in the Legislature, are of various shades, there is no political feeling whatever influencing their conduct with respect to the affairs of India. But is there no further advantage with regard to the selection of those who are to form the civil service of India? The civil service is a service altogether apart. Be it the civil service or the military service of India, it is a profession taken up at the earliest ages, and to become qualified for and rise in that profession, in the steady and ruling ambition of the youngest cadet or soldier who goes out to India. Now, there surely is a great advantage in this respect with regard to India. I know, with regard to the colonial administration, how great is the disadvantage arising from the impossibility, within the limited scale of each colony, of sending persons in the colony, or connected with it, properly acquainted with the colony, and able satisfactorily to assist in conducting its affairs. But the small scale of each of these colonies, even of the colonial department altogether, independently of the widely different interests of different colonies, precludes the possibility of setting aside such a school for colonial service as is wisely and most beneficially set aside by existing arrangements with regard to the Indian service. Nor do I think it is a matter of any complaint, a matter to be deplored, much less condemned,—nay, on the contrary, it is a subject of congratulation and rejoicing,—if we find a man who, at the age of fifteen or sixteen, has entered the East-India-Company's service, who has been himself educated for the special service of that Company in establishments maintained—and most liberally maintained—at the expense of the Company itself, whose fitness to enter upon his duties has been tested by an examination, the strictness of which has been much increased, before he was even permitted to go out to the scene of his future life, who has spent the best years of his life in India, who takes a deep interest in the affairs of that country, who, upon his return, brings with him Indian recollections and Indian interests, and can apply to the administration of the affairs of India the knowledge and experience which he has there acquired, while, at the same time, he obtains personal distinction and reward for his past services by a seat in the direction,—so far from its being cause of regret, it is a subject of congratulation that there are the means of bringing forward within this country a body of men so formed and constituted to advise and assist the Government. It is also a matter of congratulation and rejoicing that, at the close of his life, each of the old and faithful servants of the Company has, by the exercise of his patronage, the means of introducing to the same honourable career a son or nephew, or grandson, in whom may be instilled, from their earliest years, a love for and an interest in India, and who may be prepared to run the course which he who gives the appointment has honourably and creditably run before. These must be, and always are, whenever you vest patronage, individual cases of its abuse. But he believed that if by holding out a most cheap premium for invaluable services, by giving to those best qualified, from their knowledge of India, to exercise patronage, the advantage of that patronage, it is for the service of this country and for the benefit of India; and if those gentlemen do apply such patronage, in some instances, to place in the Indian service those in whom they have near and personal interest, it is not a corrupt exercise of patronage,—it is not an exercise of patronage which ought to be deprecated and condemned, but, on the contrary, is best calculated to promote the welfare and advantage of India. This subject, however, is one which their lordships must consider, and whether any modification should be introduced into the existing system; and upon the part of her Majesty's Government there will be no indisposition to lay before the committee, in the fullest detail, all the information they may desire, in order that their lordships may have the means of coming to a deliberate and impartial decision upon that vast and momentous question, by what means, and by what instrumentality (remembering that this is no party or political question, but a question of empire), the great and important interests of that overwhelming empire of India can best be promoted and advanced. "I certainly," concluded the noble earl, "entertain a strong opinion as to the course of policy which it may be desirable for Parliament to pursue; but that question must rest in the hands of Parliament. By the reports of the committees of this and the other House of Parliament her Majesty's Government are ready to be guided in the course they will pursue; and to those committees must be deputed the important task of considering how the affairs of India shall hereafter be best conducted."

The Earl of Ellenborough was surprised that his noble friend had not avoided the very general error, so common parlance, by which the Company was described as governing India. The Company might nominally reign, but the Company did not govern India. For about seventy years the Court of Directors had, in point of fact, been no more than the council of the Board of Control; and what Parliament had now to consider was, whether it was expedient still to continue that Parliamentary fiction, or whether it might not be better to adopt a more direct course for the government of India. He knew not whether his noble friend had taken into his consideration the very peculiar position in which that country now stood. The destruction of the Sikh power had altogether changed the position of British India. We had now arrived at a position when they could not safely go beyond our present territorial limits. Indeed, in his opinion, they had already in some quarters passed those limits. It was with much regret that he looked to the possession of Peshawar and of any country on the right bank of the Indus, above Kalabagh, where the navigation of the Indus from the sea ceased. He looked also with regret upon most of the annexations obtained twenty years ago from the court of Aya, with the exception of Arracan; but of this he was quite sure, that beyond our present territorial limits it would be the last proof of political insanity to pass. The danger, in a military empire such as India was and must ever remain, was greater than in a stationary state in the progressive state. His apprehension now arose from the insolence of office which even in his time had led to one insurrection, from disregard of military duties, from the absence of due consideration for the native officers and troops, and, above all, from the forgetfulness of that great principle by which their Indian empire had been acquired,—respect for the religious prejudices and for the social habits of the people. When he came to consider what they should do under these circumstances, and what alterations, if any, they should make in the present system of the government of India, he assumed with his noble friend one point as absolutely settled—namely, that the patronage of India was severed for ever from the Crown. He willingly acquiesced in that as a settled point, because he believed it was equally conducive to the advantage of this country and of India; but, at the same time, he was of opinion that much might be done by Parliament for the purpose of improving the administration of patronage. He would at once distinctly declare that, in his opinion, there was no object Parliament could have in view so important as that of sending to India the very best persons, both for the military and the civil departments, for their character was practically the Government of India. He was willing to admit another principle, though with very considerable reluctance—namely, that it was necessary to continue the system of double government. He did not approve of that system; he saw all its mischiefs; he saw how directly it led to delay in the transaction of business, occasionally to very great embarrassment, and necessarily to great disregard of economy; but, above all, that it involved practically a total absence of all real responsibility on the part of the home authorities. He would only at the present moment touch upon those organic changes which it seemed to him expedient to introduce for the purpose of leading to the improved government of India. He admitted that, in the course of the last twenty years, much had been done;—it would be hard, indeed, if India alone should not have shared in the universal progress of the world;—but much remained to be done, and he thought much might be done by the improvements he would suggest. Before, however, he touched upon the organic changes he would desire to see introduced, he would shortly state those alterations in the present law which it would be expedient to introduce, even if they were prepared to maintain the Court of Directors and the Board of Control as they now were, and to conduct the government precisely upon the principles upon which it now rested. He would first suggest that it would be highly expedient that the Board of Control should have the same power over the home treasury as over the treasury in India. At present, the Board had no such power. Whatever information the Board of Control might have with respect to any intended misappropriation of the public revenue of India, they were powerless for the purpose of preventing it. He believed that if the Court of Directors were to give an order to the Bank to divide among them the whole of the balance the Company might have there, the Board of Control had no power whatever to prevent such a division. He would ask their lordships to look at the establishment of the East-India House, and compare it with the establishments of the Crown, either with regard to numbers or emoluments. He believed the number of persons employed at this moment at the East-India House was equal to the number employed in all the departments of the Secretaries of State. If, however, they only looked at the emoluments these persons received, he apprehended it would be found that there was a very wide space for economical reductions. Such was the extravagance of these emoluments, that he recollected being told, more than twenty years ago, when he first went to the Board of Control, that a gentleman, whose only recommendation was that he had written some very bad novels, which had failed, but who had a sort of knack for writing, had been employed by the Court, at a salary of 2,000*l.* a year, to write the controversial letters the Court might have to address to the Board of Control. For his (Lord Ellenborough's) part, he was charmed with the correspondence; for, such were the literary abilities of this gentleman, that his letters, especially when altered and amended by twenty-four other gentlemen, did not interpose very great difficulties in the way of the person who was called upon to answer them. He would further suggest that the audit of the accounts of the East-India Company should not be entirely dependent upon themselves, but that an independent auditor should be appointed by the Crown. He did not hesitate to say that payments had been made which were inconsistent with the strict appropriation required by law to the service of the Government of India, and which, from his understanding of the Act of Parliament, were illegal. Another alteration which he thought would be productive of very great public advantage would be to give to the Crown the absolute power of nominating the commanders-in-chief of the army in India, and of the armies of both the presidencies, both the Royal and the native armies, and would suggest that they should be ex officio members of the Council. He knew of one occasion—and there might be many—in which the East-India Company had prevented the appointment of the officer who had been thought most fit in the judgment of the Crown to command the army; and that was a power they ought not to have. He thought it a great scandal and a great abuse. He recollected, too, that on another occasion, the most extraordinary—he might say, indeed, without any imputation of using language too strong, the most impudent—representations had been made against the appointment of the late Earl of Dalhousie to the command of the Indian army, because, forsooth, the Chairman of the Court of Directors, Mr. Astell, took a different view of the noble lord's conduct when Governor of Lower Canada from that which had been taken of it by Mr. Huskisson, the Colonial Secretary. Again, he remembered another occasion on which representations had been made to him against the appointment of a most gallant officer, on the ground that he was addicted to habits of drunkenness. Those representations were investigated, and proved to be utterly false, and yet he (Lord Ellenborough) had, as representative of the Crown, to make answer in reference to these charges to the Board of Control. Such things, in his opinion, ought not to be. And further, he thought it absolutely necessary, especially under the present circumstances of India, which demanded, in order to insure its safety, a very large increase of European troops, and a very great diminution of the native forces, and that there should be substituted for the civil police, which was utterly inefficient, a military police, who would perform many of the duties now executed by the native soldier—it was absolutely necessary that the Crown should possess, without any control on the part of the Court of Directors, the unrestricted power of sending out as many of the regular troops as was thought fit. At present, the Crown could not send out more than 20,000 without the consent of the Court, which was contrary to reason and to public policy, inasmuch as the Crown was responsible for the safety of India, and on the Crown should rest the decision of the number of troops to be maintained there. He thought, also, it would be very expedient that the Crown should possess a negative in the appointment of members of the council. He was far from saying those gentlemen had not been properly appointed, but in the new circumstances and position of the country it was most expedient and necessary, in his judgment, that every member of the military as well of the civil service should look to the Crown as the source of honour and authority. He did not propose that any alteration should take place in the mode of appointment of the Governor-General. There were practical advantages in the present arrangement, and under all the circumstances it secured the best appointments. No doubt there had been occasions on which the Government had been inconveniently pressed by the request of one of their own friends, whom they would not wish to disoblige, while, at the same time, they would be reluctant to trust the government of India in his hands. He knew that there had been an occasion in which the intervention of the Court of Directors had been found convenient to Government in this respect, and, seeing no practical inconvenience whatever in the present system, he should propose no alteration. But his opinion was, that the recall, not only of the Governor-General, but of the governors of subordinate presidencies, should depend upon the Crown. They might, with great advantage to the country, and to the service, improve the position of the Governor-General, and increase his means of usefulness, by placing him on such a footing that he should not be dependent on two masters—that he should be no longer left in a condition in which he was liable to be approved of by the one, and be recalled by the other. They might also greatly improve his public usefulness by improving the composition of the council with which he acted. At present, there was no member of the Bombay or Madras services on that council; and yet acts were sent from Bombay and Madras to the governor and council, and many measures were prepared by them with respect to which the Government of India was practically in darkness. He thought it would greatly conduce to the improvement of legislation, and much assist the Governor-General in respect to questions of this nature, if he had representatives of each of those presidencies in his council. He did not know that it would be advisable to make any alteration in the law or practice, by which the Governor-General of India was Governor of Bengal; but he thought it would be highly conducive to the due discharge of his public duties if the Governor-General should divest himself of the government of Bengal, and vest it in one of his council. He had not time to devote to all the details of the Bengal Government. It had always appeared to him that a great practical improvement might be made in the selection of the extraordinary member of the council. Hitherto he had been on all occasions a member of the legal profession, and as such considered himself to be sent out as the legislator of India, and from the day of his arrival to the day of his departure he used all his efforts to alter the law, and to change the legislation of a great empire. Now, the most enlightened British lawyer, suddenly thrown into the midst of Calcutta, was not the man most qualified to devise those laws by which the people of India were to be governed. But by using that provision of 1833 in a different manner, they might give great assistance to the Governor-General. He thought the selection of a gentleman from that grade out of which Under-Secretaries of State were mostly taken would be the greatest assistance to the Governor-General and council. Such a person would be able to direct his fresh English mind to subjects pressed upon the Governor-General by individuals with Indian prejudices, and, having a person of European reputation to consult with, it would be to the mind of the Governor-General the greatest possible relief. He could assure their lordships there was nothing in India which pressed so heavily on the Governor-General as having no other mind to which he could have recourse, and being obliged to do everything from his own thought and will, without the opportunity of obtaining any aid whatever in the formation of his projects. The Governor-General might obtain facts, but he could not get opinions; and there really was nothing more calculated to unnerve a man than this constant pressure upon his mental powers. Enlarged as the council would be by the addition of the members from Bombay and Madras, it would be extremely desirable that there should be no ambiguity with respect to the privileges of the Governor-General. He believed that, by a somewhat strained interpretation of the law, he might now perhaps overrule the decisions of the council; but that was a matter which should not be left in any doubt, and the Governor-General should be on all occasions enabled to exercise that power, because he alone was responsible for his opinion and for its result. There was also another matter which should be left without the smallest ambiguity, and that was the power of the Governor-General to leave his council and to proceed into the interior. Under the law of 1833, that had been done by resolution of the council, but there was some doubt on the point. In his opinion, it was in the power of the Governor-General to leave his council and act in the provinces by virtue of the authority he had by the law previous to 1833, as had been done by Lord Wellesley and others; but the question was one of such importance, that it should be settled beyond all doubt. With regard to a question, much agitated in India, and which had been discussed at home—the change in the seat of government,—he recollected very well, in 1829 and 1830, when it had been his duty to consider what measures should be taken in that direction, having communicated with the Duke of Wellington, then at the head of the Government, on the subject, and he considered the reasoning of the noble duke for continuing the seat of government at Calcutta at that time perfectly unanswerable. He had been since asked, "Could not the government be conducted from Simla?" "Yes," he had answered, "just as the government of Rome was conducted from Capri, and with the same results." The noble earl had left him nothing to add to his description of the Court of Proprietors. The 1,800 gentlemen who had votes in the Court represented their stock, and nothing more. They had no other connection with India, and no more to do with it than the proprietors of Bank, or any other stock. He had endeavoured to see what the proportion of proprietors really connected with India was to the aggregate number; and he feared that, if he estimated them at 300, or one-sixth of the whole, he would go to the utmost possible extent. Yet this was the body who elected the Directors. Now, let them consider, not only the composition of the proprietary, but the manner in which the persons composing it were distributed, and how they were under the influence of certain families and certain firms. The result was, that certain families and firms could practically decide the election of the Directors; and, as the constituency was so very numerous and scattered, a person desiring to be a Director must go through the most elaborate and disagreeable canvass, extending in general over seven or eight years, and sustain one defeat, or more. He remembered asking a friend of his, who had suffered two defeats, why he took so much trouble to be a Director, and the reply showed him the whole secret of the matter. "Why," said he, "my friends have been supporting me so long, they now expect me to go on, that I may do something for them in consequence of their long adherence to me." In that answer their lordships saw what was really the whole working of the system. And what were the results? His noble friend said that twenty-one out of the thirty Directors were of distinction in the service of India. Now, he (Lord Ellenborough) had been acquainted with the Indian service ever since 1824—his eye had never been off it—and he had given more attention to the names and persons engaged in it than probably most other persons; but, on referring to the list, he found there were only four out of the thirty Directors who had any Indian reputation. He did not mean to say there were not many respectable persons who, having been many years on the direction, had obtained in England a certain knowledge of Indian affairs; but not one of them had been fit, when first appointed, and, whatever their knowledge now, it gave them no weight in India. They might have made one voyage to India, or have seen the country in a dak journey, but, practically, they knew nothing of India; no one could have any confidence in their advice, and when they adopted resolutions, they had not that weight in India which would be given to them if the court were really composed of Indians. He ventured to suggest whether it might not be expedient very materially to extend the constituency by which the court was elected; and he thought he could show the representative body would be greatly improved by his suggestion. The Directors of the East-India Company—a commercial company in a state of suspended animation—had no necessary connection with the government of India. He would willingly leave to the present proprietors of East-India stock the right to vote for the election of Directors. He would take every precaution for the due transmission to England of the necessary funds to pay interest on the stock and bonds; but the payment might be made by the Bank, just as well as the payment of the Three per Cents. He thought, however, it would be advisable that persons of Indian experience should intervene in the election of the persons charged with the direction of Indian affairs; and, with that object, he proposed that, in addition to the proprietors of stock, all officers, civil or military, who had served in the native or European services, or the civil service and courts of law in India, for ten years, should have votes for the election of the Directors. The addition thus made would be equal to the present number of the constituency, so that the elective body would just be doubled. The constituency would be greatly improved, as he thought, by receiving a thoroughly Indian character, and by its being extended so much that personal canvass would become impossible, and that persons desirous of becoming Directors might be elected, not after a tedious delay, and on various grounds, but on the score of services, and at once, while their recollections of India were fresh, and their faculties vigorous and unimpaired. Another alteration he would suggest was, that the number of members of the Court of Directors should be reduced from twenty-four to twelve. He looked in this alteration for that which he thought should be the foundation of all their improvements—an improvement in the administration of patronage. If the patronage were divided among twelve instead of twenty-four, what would be the consequence? He recollected looking over a list of persons on whom patronage had been bestowed, and he saw the names of fourteen gentlemen who all rejoiced in the same surname, which was exactly the same name as that of one of the Directors; and he had not the slightest doubt that every one of them was a member of the same family. It was not only that those persons who were entitled to have this patronage exercised in their favour did not obtain it, but by the present system on which it was dispensed the relations of the twenty-four Directors were scattered over the whole face of India, which most materially interfered with the due exercise of authority there. It was to enable these twelve persons, with this much larger amount of patronage, to be distributed among those who deserved it, that he, among other reasons, proposed the reduction of the number of the Court of Directors. He had sometimes read in the newspapers accounts of the extraordinary liberality with which Mr. This or Mr. That had given a cadetship to the son of this or that deserving officer. Now, he had seen a great deal of those officers, and had often heard their complaints, and the expression of their utter hopelessness of obtaining the least favour from the Directors for the benefit of their families. He had known them leave India in a most desponding state of mind, because no provision was made for their children, having knocked at every door and had a refusal from all. He recollected a most striking case. It was that of an officer who had distinguished himself in General Sir George Pollock's army. He was an officer on whom he (the Earl of Ellenborough) had felt it not only his duty but his privilege, as the Governor-General of India, to confer honour. That officer came to him saying, "I cannot get a cadetship for my only son; all my desire is to get him into the service; I have made applications to the Directors, but every one of them has been in vain; and my son will now soon be of that age in which he will hardly be able to get a commission in the royal army." He trusted that the alteration which he proposed would obviate that evil. Again, he could see no reason whatever why a proportion of the cadetships, and of the writerships, should not be saleable like commissions in her Majesty's army, at a fixed price. He could not understand why a practice should exist by which the families of the whole aristocracy of England, almost without exception, who did not happen to be acquainted with a Director of the East-India Company, should be excluded from a most distinguished service. It seemed to him to be a public wrong, and calculated to produce great public mischief. He thought it most desirable that at least one-fourth of the cadetships and writerships should be exposed to sale at a fixed sum. He thought it not only highly expedient, but absolutely necessary, that the Governor-General should have the power of taking officers from the military service and placing them in the civil service, which was now permitted. The reason seemed to be this: the total number of the civil servants in India was about 800. Those gentlemen were generally the immediate relations and friends of the Directors. They went to India to rise in succession, and at last exercised the highest functions, whatever their fitness, in the government of an empire containing 150,000,000 of people. It was contrary to reason that those 800 young men so selected should be capable of executing those important duties. Lord William Bentinck said that 800 angels could not perform the functions of government in India under such circumstances. But if the Governor-General had the power of selecting officers from the army to become civil servants, he would be able to avail himself not only of the services of those 800 persons, but of the services of more than 5,000, every one of whom would be competent to perform the duties required of him. In point of fact, the best administrators of government in India had been military men, who had risen in that country by means of having had intrusted to them the administration of conquered or ceded territories. He did not agree with those who thought that a portion of the cadetships and writerships should be offered as a reward to the most distinguished scholars in schools and colleges. He said so on this ground, that the knowledge acquired from books was of no use in India. The giving of those rewards to boys in different schools might be of great use to the schools, but it would be of great disservice to India. If they had to select a boy to lead their troops under difficulties, would they take the best scholar, the most solitary bookworm in the school, or would they not rather choose the boy who was most remarkable for his influence over his schoolfellows, and who knew best how to manage them? That which was required in India, besides a knowledge of languages and probity, was an untiring industry, and an aptitude for public business, which few men were practically found to possess; but, above all, what was required was that which could not be gathered from books—energy, decision of character, moral courage, firmness in the face of the public, and a determination, happen what might to himself, to do his duty at once to the country of his birth, and also to the country of his adoption. He felt a very deep interest in the question before their lordships. He had made India the subject of his earliest thoughts, and now for twenty-four years. He might, indeed, say that his whole public life had practically been devoted to India. He would tell them again that India had arrived at the most critical period of its history—at one of those periods in the history of a state in which it was absolutely necessary carefully to look back and carefully to look forward, in order to ascertain whether those measures and that policy which had assisted, or, at least, had not impeded her progress, were likely to be equally efficacious for the purpose of preventing her fall. He felt satisfied that it was wholly on the spirit in which the government of India was conducted, on the temper in which its power was administered, on the consideration with which they treated, not the native army only, but the whole of the native population—that it was on their perseverance in, and adherence to, those principles, and on their attention to the religion, and the prejudices, and the social habits of the people, by which hitherto their government in India had been permitted to exist,—that it was on these feelings and this conduct alone that perilous empire could be preserved. Perilous it was called by Lord Wellesley at a very early period of his acquaintance with India; much more perilous was it now. It was not one which had its roots in the affections of the people. It had not its roots in the perfection of its institutions. It exhibited nothing to the people which they could understand, or admire, or love. He was made deeply sensible of this even under the most favourable circumstances in which that government could be presented to the natives of India. He did, therefore, entreat their lordships and the Parliament, when considering what should be done in this great emergency, and what constitution should be given to India for the purpose of forming it, if they could, into an integral part of the British empire (for he could not bear to consider it possible that England should ever be separated from that country), not to allow mere matters of convenience in carrying the measure through Parliament, or any consideration of matters which ought to be below the notice of high-minded statesmen when dealing with the future happiness of a great people, to prevent them from doing that which was just by the people of India and by the people of England; and that which might make our name memorable for ever in India, and establish our empire in the gratitude and affections of the people of that country for real blessings conferred.

The motion was then agreed to; and the following lords were nominated to the committee, viz.:—The Lord Privy Seal, the Marquess of Lansdowne, the Marquess of Normanby, the Marquess of Tweeddale, the Duke of Montrose, the Earl of Derby, Earl Grey, the Earl of Harrowby, the Earl of Ellenborough, Earl Stradbroke, Earl Delaware, the Earl of Powis, the Earl of Mansfield, the Earl of Carlisle, the Earl of Albemarle, Viscount Hardinge, Viscount Gough, Viscount Canning, the Bishop of Oxford, Lord Colchester, Lord Broughton, the Duke of Argyll, Lord Ashburton, Lord Colville, Lord Ripplinstone, Lord Glenelg, Lord Stanley of Alderley, Lord Wodehouse, Lord Montagu, the Marquess of Sligo, and Lord Montagu of Brandon.

The War with Ava.—The Earl of Ellenborough called the attention of the House to the war just commenced with Ava, which, he remarked, might prove more serious than some persons imagined. The climate of the Burmese empire was most unhealthy, and though in some respects we were in a better condition to carry on hostilities than in the former Burmese war, yet the removal of the troops necessary for the struggle would lay bare districts of our Indian empire from which they could be ill-spared. There were, he said, certain enterprising British merchants who, having exhausted all the forests on one bank of the river and its tributaries, were very desirous of possessing the teak forests on the other side, for the purpose of extending their trade by Rangoon, and they were in concert and connection with the press at Calcutta, the movements of which he viewed with anxiety and distrust. They said that, in consequence of our occupying the whole Burmese empire, an overland intercourse with China may be established, and that great advantage would accrue to our trade from its extension along that Burmese frontier. That is a feeling which actuates the press of Calcutta. He hoped that the Governor-General of India will treat that press with the disregard which it deserved. He viewed with great alarm the annexation to our empire of a large portion—ay, or even of any portion—of the Burmese territory. It was essentially a false position, an eminently false position. A false position is as dangerous to an empire as it is to an army, and always ultimately vindicates its power over those who sin against the first principles of true policy. He felt perfectly satisfied that the annexation of Ava, drawing in that direction a large portion of the vital resources of the British empire in India, would impair both its civil and military strength.

The Earl of Derby said no one could be more anxious than the Government to bring the war to a speedy termination. Every means had been taken by the Governor-General to avoid hostilities, and now that we were unfortunately engaged in them, there was good reason to hope that they would not be of a protracted character. For his own part, he should regard any large annexation of territory on the side of Ava as inconvenient and disastrous.

APRIL 6.

Official Secrecy in India.—The Earl of Ellenborough said his noble friend (the Earl of Derby) yesterday stated the intentions of the Governor-General of India as to the military operations against Ava, and likewise the substance of two communications made by the Governor-General to the Burmese government. Those intentions of the Governor-General as to his military operations, and the substance of his two communications to the Burmese government, were both published a month ago in the Indian newspapers, and one fortnight at least before those military operations could be commenced. The nature of these operations, and the points against which they were to be directed, and the intention of the Government to withdraw the troops engaged in the operations before the rainy season commenced, were now well known to the Burmese authorities. This constant inveterate vice in the administration of Indian affairs must be eradicated. It is essential to the credit of the Government,—nay, to the safety of the army,—that complete secrecy be preserved on all such measures. (Loud cries of "Hear" on both sides of the house.) "I know all the difficulties with which the Governor-General will have to contend in his attempts to preserve that necessary secrecy. Your lordships hardly know the extent to which secrecy is almost universally betrayed in the government of India. When I arrived at Madras, on my way to Calcutta, I saw in a Bombay newspaper one or two paragraphs as to the conduct of the war in China, which I thought I recognized as proceeding from my own pen, and as part of the instructions which I had sent forth, when at the Board of Control, for the conduct of that war. I sent for those instructions. I found that the paragraphs in the newspaper contained not merely the substance, but every word of my instructions. Every word was so evidently copied from the original document, that even a literal error in my copy had also crept into the Bombay newspaper. I recollect that, subsequently, a fortnight after the Government of India had received a report from the general commanding in Lower Scinde, who was then advancing upon Candahar, stating in the most minute detail all the positions in which he intended to leave his troops in Scinde, and the strength of the different detachments which were to occupy those positions, all that important paper, giving so much information to the enemy, was published in a Bombay newspaper three days before it reached Calcutta. No Government can conduct the affairs of a great empire, especially in time of war, if it is liable to this betrayal of private as well as public confidence. I found it necessary, after I had been three months in India,—being at that time at a distance from the army in the field, not then being so conversant as I afterwards became with military affairs,—to give a discretionary power to the commander-in-chief of the forces at Jellalabad, to remain or retire, as in his discretion he might think fit. Every particular of that order, by means of private letters, was known in the camp before it was possible that the general commanding in chief could know it from my instructions. I then took my measures. I took care that the intelligence of any intended military movement should not leave my own breast till the time of its execution. From that hour my own private secretary and the two aides-de-camp who copied my letters alone knew their contents, and by means of that secrecy various military operations were subsequently carried on successfully, and with very little loss of life. This want of secrecy not only may occasion defeat, but may also lead to very great loss of life. I do most earnestly recommend to my noble friend at the head of government, by the next mail which sails to India, to call the attention of the Governor-General to this scandalous betrayal of public confidence, and to tell him, that any measure which may be necessary to extirpate this evil, and to preserve the necessary secrecy as to the measures of the Indian Government, will receive the full and cordial support of the Government at home, even though it should involve the instant removal of every officer, whatever his rank, who holds office under the Government of India."

The Earl of Derby need scarcely assure his noble friend that he thought this subject to be one of deep and vital importance, and that he concurred in every word which his noble friend had uttered regarding the impossibility of conducting the affairs, and especially the military affairs, of a Government, if all or any of its measures were made known to the enemy almost as soon as they were decided on. He would communicate on this subject with the head of this department, and he had no doubt that proper instructions would be sent out by him by the next mail.

EAST INDIAN EXHIBITION IN 1853.—In conveying to the Directors of the Hon. East-India Company the expression of thanks which was so justly due to them for the liberal assistance which they gave in illustrating the lecture of Dr. Royle upon the arts and manufactures of India, the Council of the Society of Arts took occasion to suggest that a further illustration of the resources of our Indian empire would be particularly acceptable to the public at a period when its affairs are likely to be brought under discussion by the expiration of the Company's present charter. Those suggestions have received the greatest attention of the Court of Directors, and after some preliminary correspondence, the Chairman of the Court received a deputation from the Council, consisting of Sir John Boileau, Professor Solly, Mr. Cole, and Mr. Owen Jones, the result of which is, that the Council announce that a general exhibition of the produce and manufactures of India will be undertaken by the Society of Arts in 1853, the Court of Directors having engaged to afford their utmost support. It has been decided that the exhibition shall be quite of a commercial character, and that every facility shall be given for ascertaining the price of every article shown. The experience of the late Exhibition has convinced the Council how very much such knowledge enhances the interest of every article; and no time will be lost in making the necessary communications with India, and the Council are confident that they will have no difficulty in finding suitable premises for the exhibition, and in carrying it out on a scale worthy of the occasion. It has been suggested that the Crystal Palace would be the most proper as well as the most attractive receptacle.

COLONEL JAMES TENNANT, C.B., of the Bengal Artillery, has been nominated Ordinary Member of the Military Division of the Second Class Knight Commander of the said Most Hon. Order of the Bath.

EASTERN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—At an extraordinary general meeting of the proprietors of this company, held on the 2nd inst., resolutions were unanimously passed, authorising the directors to proceed with the undertaking, and at the next meeting of the proprietors a project now under consideration will be submitted for their approval for its prosecution on such a basis as will secure the attainment of its objects.

THE DUTY UPON CINNAMON.—It is understood that by the last India mail the Government have despatched orders to Ceylon for the revocation of the export duty of 4d. per lb. now levied upon cinnamon.

EAST INDIA SHIPPING.—From a comparative statement, published by the East India and China Association, of the number of ships, British and foreign, entered inwards and cleared outwards with cargoes, from and to India, from the 1st January to the 31st March, in the years 1851 and 1852, it appears that there entered inwards in the former period 262 vessels, 121,431 tons, and in the latter period 179 vessels, 81,826 tons, a decrease of 81 vessels, 39,605 tons; that there cleared outwards in the former period 198 vessels, 94,772 tons, and in the latter period 205 vessels, 108,613 tons, an increase of 7 vessels, 13,841 tons. The great decrease in arrivals has been from Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, China, Phillipine Islands, Cape of Good Hope, New South Wales, Singapore, and Penang, at London and Liverpool, the decrease of these two ports being 72 vessels. The increase in departures has been chiefly occasioned by the despatch of vessels to New South Wales, New Zealand, Arabia, and Ceylon, for London.

Dr. Buist has remarked the remarkable elevation of the barometer all over India in the end of January and beginning of February, which seemed to occur near the change of the moon. This has been observed continually over a period of eight years at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, Trevandrum and Lucknow,—at all the stations, in fact, where good observations were obtained. It was near the period of greatest cold, but not at all coincident with it; it occurred very often about the time of fall of rain, and at all the points just named almost simultaneously, the mercury springing up by nearly a tenth of an inch, and then descending as suddenly as it rose.

CHANGES AND PROMOTIONS IN H.M.'S REGIMENTS SERVING IN INDIA.

WAR OFFICE, APRIL 2, 1852.

Bengal, 80th Foot.—Lieut. col. George Hutchinson, from the 97th Foot, to be lieut. col., v. Wood, who retires on half-pay 97th Foot. Dated 2nd April, 1852.

The employment of Ensign F. P. F. Brett, of the 11th regt. N.I., to take fac-similes and impressions of the cave-temples and rock-inscriptions in Western India, has been sanctioned by the Supreme Government of India for one year.

The late Lord Holland, in his posthumous Memoirs of the Whig Party, lately published, says: "Mr. Fox has more than once assured me that, in his invectives against Mr. Hastings' indignities to the Indian priesthood, Mr. Burke spoke of the piety of the Hindoos with admiration, and of their holy religion and sacred functions with an awe bordering on devotion."

BOOKS.

An Examination of Statements, made during a recent Debate at the East-India House, in a Letter to Lieut. General Welsh, and the 220 Service Memorialists of the Indian Army. By a PROPRIETOR. London: Smith, Elder, and Co.

This pamphlet, which appears, from the contents and the initials at the end, to be written by Captain M'Gregor, to satisfy the officers who subscribed the Service Memorial, that he had not misled them, would not have called for any notice from us, but for a passage in the Postscript, wherein the writer says: "I have just seen the account of the East-India House debate, as given in Allen's Indian Mail. It is fuller than what has elsewhere appeared, so full, indeed, as to contain much that was not said. I do not object to omissions being thus supplied, or an outline thus filled up. But I must venture a few remarks in reply to Colonel Sykes."

Our reporter assures us that his report was accurate, and consequently the charge thus preferred by Captain McGregor is unfounded. But our reporter informs us, and his statement is confirmed by another witness, that a proprietor wished to have some matter that was really spoken by him kept out of the report, and that the application was very properly refused. That proprietor was Captain McGregor.

William Kilburn, Esq.

AUDITORS.—Robert Gardner, Esq.; Robert Hichens, Esq.;
William Oxborough, Esq.

BANKERS.—Bank of England, and Messrs. Currie and Co.

SOLICITOR.—William Henry Cotterill, Esq.

PHYSICIAN.—George Burrows, M.D., F.R.S., 18, Cavendish Square.

ACTUARY.—David Jones, Esq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 14th of May, 1851, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20		£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30	On or before	1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40	14th of May,	1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
50		1,000	42 15 0	23 10 3
60	1846.	1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.

NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5. 5s. in boards, SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED; to which is added, a DICTIONARY, FIRST and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

. To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fittest corresponding translations into Hindustani.

REVIEW IN "TIMES," Jan. 3.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." . * "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 53,000 words and phrases explained, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." . * "In India, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

II.

5th Edition, 1 vol. royal 8vo. price 14s.

A GRAMMAR of the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE. To which is added, a short Grammar of the Dakhni.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE

MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 8d. and upwards, which may be had of CROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

DECAYED TEETH and TOTH-ACHE.—Price 2s. 6d.

Patronised by Her Majesty and H.R.H. Prince Albert. Mr. HOWARD'S WHITE SUCCEEDANUM for stopping decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and immediately HARDENS INTO A WHITE ENAMEL; in will remain in the tooth many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, and arresting the further progress of decay, and is far superior to anything ever before used, as it will NEVER BECOME DISCOLOURED in the tooth. All persons use it themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Prepared only by Mr. Howard, Surgeon-Dentist, 17, George Street, Hanover Square, who will send it into the country free by post. Sold by Savory, 220, Regent Street; Sanger, 150, and Hannay, 63, Oxford Street; Butler, 4, Chesapeake; Johnston, 68, Cornhill; and all medicine vendors in the kingdom. Price 2s. 6d. Mr. Howard continues to supply the loss of teeth on his NEW SYSTEM of SALV-ADHESION, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. 17, George Street, Hanover Square. At home from 10 till 4.

TO LADIES.—The high and universal celebrity which ROWLAND'S KALYDOR continues to maintain as an active, yet mild and soothing, extirpator of all impurities of the skin, is, during the period of Spring, most pleasingly evinced. This preparation, eminently balsamic, restorative, and invigorating, is equally distinguished for safety in application, as for unfailing efficacy in eradicating all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. To ladies during the period of nursing, and as a wash for infants, it cannot be too strongly recommended. Gentlemen, after shaving, will find it allay all irritation and tenderness of the skin, and render it soft, smooth, and pleasant. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the growth, and for preserving, improving, and beautifying the human hair. Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for preserving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and for rendering the breath sweet and pure. Price 2s. 6d. per box.

The patronage of Royalty throughout Europe, their general use by the aristocracy and the elite of fashion, and the well-known infallible efficacy of these articles, have given them a celebrity unparalleled.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS, an EXTRAORDINARY REMEDY

FOR LIVER COMPLAINTS.—Extract of a letter from Mr. Robert James, of Tredegar, Dec. 18, 1851:—"To Professor Holloway, Sir,—With gratitude I write to inform you of the wonderful cure your Pills have effected on my daughter, who had been suffering from the enlargement of the liver, palpitation of the heart, dropsy, and a troublesome cough. Her case was given up by the medical attendants. At this crisis I was induced to try your Pills, and, after taking them, it was astonishing to see how rapidly she regained her health. She is now recovered, and as well as a parent could desire."

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

STEAM TO INDIA, VIA THE CAPE.—General Screw Steam Shipping Company Monthly Line of Iron Steamers with Her Majesty's Warrants to the CAPE, MAURITIUS, Point de Galle, MADRAS, and CALCUTTA (touching at St. Vincent's and Ascension).

THE LADY JOCELYN, of 1,800 tons, NATHANIEL STEWART, Commander, will leave the East-India Docks on the 10th, and Plymouth on the 15th, of July.

These Ships are divided into water-tight and fire-proof compartments. They will carry experienced Surgeons, and have for Passengers every comfort and convenience. The Cabins are furnished, and Passengers will be provided with beds, linen, &c.

For terms of Passage, apply at the offices of the Company, No. 2, Royal Exchange Buildings, London; for Freight, to BALFOUR, LAMING, and OWAN, 157, Fenchurch Street.

N.B.—The Company estimate that the passage to the Cape will occupy on the average 30, to Mauritius 42, to Ceylon 50, to Madras 54, and to Calcutta 62 days.

STEAM TO INDIA, CHINA, &c.—Particulars of the regular Monthly Mail Steam Conveyance and of the additional lines of communication, now established by the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company with the East, &c. The Company book passengers, and receive goods and parcels as heretofore for CEYLON, MADRAS, CALCUTTA, PENANG, SINGAPORE, and HONG-KONG, by their steamers, starting from SOUTHAMPTON on the 20th of every month, and from SUEZ on or about the 8th of the month.

The next extra Steamer will be despatched from Southampton for Alexandria on the 3rd October next, in combination with an extra steamer, to leave Calcutta on or about the 29th September. Passengers may be booked, and goods and parcels forwarded by these extra steamers to or from SOUTHAMPTON, ALEXANDRIA, ADEN, CEYLON, MADRAS, and CALCUTTA.

BOMBAY.—The Company will book passengers throughout from SOUTHAMPTON to BOMBAY by their Steamers leaving England on the 20th May, and of alternate months thereafter, such passengers being conveyed from ADEN to BOMBAY by their steamers appointed to leave BOMBAY on the 14th May, and of alternate months thereafter, and affording, in connection with the Steamers leaving CALCUTTA on the 3rd May, and of alternate months thereafter, direct conveyance for passengers, parcels, and goods, from BOMBAY and WESTERN INDIA.

Passengers for Bombay can also proceed by this Company's steamers of the 30th of the month to Malta, thence to Alexandria by her Majesty's steamers, and from Suez by the Honourable East-India Company's steamers.

MEDITERRANEAN.—MALTA.—On the 30th and 29th of every month. Constantinople.—On the 29th of the month. Alexandria.—On the 26th of the month. (The rates of passage-money on these lines have been materially reduced.)

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.—Vigo, Oporto, Lisbon, Cadiz, and Gibraltar, on the 7th, 17th, and 27th of the month.

N.B. The Steam-ships of the Company now ply direct between Calcutta, Penang, Singapore, and Hong-Kong, and between Hong-Kong and Shanghai.

For further information and tariffs of the Company's recently revised and reduced rates of passage money and freight, and for plans of the vessels, and to secure passages, &c., apply at the Company's offices, 122, Leadenhall-street, London, and Oriental-place, Southampton.

EMIGRATION FACILITATED.—S. W. SILVER and Co., having rebuilt and enlarged their premises in BISHOPSGATE-STREET, opposite the London Tavern, are now enabled to supply INTERMEDIATE and STEERAGE PASSENGERS with their Fit-out (or any part of it) at their SHIPPING PRICES, which will be a great saving.

THE CABIN PASSENGERS' Branch for Ladies and Gentlemen is, as heretofore, at 66 and 67, CORNHILL, where a similar economical principle is adopted.

LIFE-PRESERVING FLOATABLE BEDS, BELTS, SEATS, &c., in case of Fire or Shipwreck.

Ship-sailing information given, Ship passages bargained for, and no commission charged or paid, that Passengers may embrace every advantage.

S. W. SILVER and Co., 10, 66, and 67, CORNHILL, and 3 and 4, BISHOPSGATE-STREET, opposite the London Tavern, and at LIVERPOOL; having agents at the Australian and New Zealand Ports.

OVERLAND AGENCY.—HICKIE, BORMAN, & Co.,

East-India and General Agents, forward packages for Overland Route to India, China, &c., to the 18th of every month, at reduced rates. They also ship goods, parcels, and baggage, and engage passages by steamers and sailing-vessels to all parts of the world; effect insurances, execute orders for supplies and outfits, and transact every description of agency business with economy and despatch. Having offices at Southampton, every attention is paid to the requirements of passengers arriving or proceeding by the Overland Route.—Offices, 127, Leadenhall Street, London, and 4, Oriental Place, Southampton.

OVERLAND PARCELS and PACKAGES at very reduced rates to INDIA, Ceylon, and China, 17th of every month. SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE combined expedition against Burmah, military and naval, from Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, had sailed for the rendezvous at Moulmein, which it expected to reach on the 4th or 5th April. Operations were to commence immediately against Martaban and Rangoon, so as to finish the work before the setting in of the rains, which commence much earlier in Burmah than in India. It is understood that the Burmese had made vigorous preparations for resistance. The authorities at Rangoon had collected a force of 35,000 men and about 200 pieces of cannon, and sent away all the women and children out of the city. The Shew Dagon Pagoda had been strongly fortified, and stockades were being erected at every point of the river.

The land force destined for the operations is numerically less than half that which landed at Rangoon in 1824 under Sir Archibald Campbell. It consists only of three Queen's regiments and four regiments of native infantry: namely, H.M.'s 18th, 51st, and 80th foot; the 40th Bengal N.I.; and three native regiments from Madras. These are accompanied by about sixty pieces of ordnance, and the requisite details of artillerymen from Bengal and Madras. But a fleet of thirteen war steamers accompanies this force, and renders it truly formidable. The force will be withdrawn in the end of May and during the rains, and will resume operations in October, if by this time the Burmese have not been brought to their senses. According to the latest advices, the Burmese had of their own accord destroyed the town of Martaban by fire.

It is stated that the Governor-General has given the King of Ava till the 5th of April for a final answer to the proposals made by this Government for an amicable arrangement. "Our financial department," says the Englishman, "has opened an account with his Burmese majesty, debiting him with all the cost and charges of the preparations for war, which may be estimated at about four lakhs a month."

The Friend of India does not paint the prospects of the expedition in very favourable colours. It is believed, it says, that the Burmese have "received information, through some European agency, which has served to inflate their pride, as well as to give them hopes of protracting a war;" and a want of confidence is stated to be felt in the officer to whom the command of the invading force is to be intrusted. "There are gloomy conjectures that, notwithstanding the remarkable energy which Lord Dalhousie has manifested on this occasion, the object of the enterprise may yet be defeated by the absence of those military qualifications which give the presage of success." On the other hand, a mission from Siam had arrived at Moulmein overland, with professions of amity, and an intimation that, in consequence of aggressions by the Burmese, the Siamese Government had blockaded the rivers on the frontier against the Burmese.

A deputation from Martaban had received the reply of the Governor-General to a letter from the king of Ava, sent through the hands of the Commissioner at Moulmein, who also delivered the answer. The latter appears to have assumed a high tone with the deputation, who, it is said, replied, that if we were ready for war, so were they.

An unpleasant incident connected with this expedition had occurred at Barrackpore, where the 38th N.I., a distinguished native corps,—one of the privileged, not being enlisted for "general service," and therefore not compellable to serve beyond sea,—when formally asked if they would volunteer for service in Burmah, "respectfully but firmly declined" to cross the kala panee; adding that they were ready to go by land. We copy the following account of this incident from the Englishman, given by its correspondent at Barrackpore:—

"Government wished to give the regiment an opportunity of keeping up its name as a volunteer corps. They were to be asked to volunteer for Rangoon, and a thousand pities it is that the question was not put at once on parade; much time was lost, and then followed the fatal mistake. Colonel Burney called for nominal rolls of companies, directed every company to parade separately at his quarters, where each man was to sign 'willing,' or 'unwilling;' those 'unwilling' were to assign their reasons. In accordance with the order, No. 1 company was paraded on the 8th March, they fell in and formed; but when the word 'quick march' was given by Captain Nepean, not a man moved; all exertions failed, and the European officers were not on that occasion treated so respectfully as they ought to have been. It is not known what happened on this being reported, as they keep all so close; but it is said the brigadier expressed his strong disapprobation of the course pursued, in ordering the men to sign a paper, as it would induce them to imagine the volunteering was compulsory. However, this is all conjecture raised upon the fact that Colonel Burney ordered a parade for the brigadier, and, I believe, cancelled the orders he had previously issued. On the morning of the 9th, the regiment was paraded before Brigadier Warren, when a letter from Government was read to the men, which I believe merely asked the 38th if it would volunteer or not. The question was then put to each company in turn, and each replied that by land it was ready to march anywhere, but on board ship or steam-vessel it would not go. The corps to a man conducted itself in a very respectful manner, and the conduct of the sepoy was very orderly; but there was no mistaking the determination not to go on board ship. The regiment was marched back to the lines, and there the matter at present rests. Lots of rumours are afloat, but nothing is known of the intentions of the authorities, who are not to blame in the business; they have been misled."

There appears to have been some mismanagement in this affair, which has injured the good name of a gallant corps unnecessarily. "It would have been the easiest thing in the world," observes the Lahore Chronicle, "for the officers to have ascertained, beforehand, whether success was, or was not, likely to attend the attempt, and the feeling of the sepoys should have been distinctly elicited in a quiet, unobtrusive manner, before venturing on the measure which has resulted in the defeat of the Government, and certainly in the disgrace of the regiment. It is all very well to march them to Chittagong, to punish them by an advance on Arakan by land; and to order every officer to join, as will, no doubt, be done. The spirit of the regiment is gone, its glories are departed, and it will sink, amid sickness and death, below the level of the most mutinous of corps, as it was once one of the most distinguished." The Englishman remarks justly:—"It is ridiculous to imagine that mercenary soldiers, whose only tie to the service is the salt they eat, and who, by constitution and training, are devoid of that physical and moral ardour which leads the Anglo-Saxon to regard war as a struggle in which his spirit rejoices, that the former can enter into the feelings which we look upon as natural in the latter. The Sepoy is a party to a covenant; whether or not that covenant was wisely entered into, is not our province at present to discuss,—that it exists no one will deny."

It is with regret we observe that the corps has been branded in one of the Calcutta journals as "poltroons, scoundrels," &c. It is said that the native officers of the regiment intend to appeal to Government against the editor of the paper. A Court of Inquiry had been assembled at Barrackpore, to investigate and report upon the circumstances connected with the proceedings of the corps.

A Bombay journal understands that some of the troops at Madras had manifested an unwillingness to embark.

Our extreme north-west frontier continues to be disturbed by forays of the hillmen. On the 11th March, a force of about 2,500 men, consisting of the 1st troop 1st brigade Horse Artillery, under Capt. Baldwin; Head Quarters and 600 men of H.M.'s 32nd regiment; a wing of the 29th regiment N.I.; the whole of the 66th regiment N.I. (Goorkas), under command of Lieut.-Col. Troup; the 15th Irregular Cavalry (Fisher's); and a company of Sappers and Miners, left Peshawur under Sir Colin Campbell, for the Eusufzaie country. On the 20th they are said to have been attacked by the enemy: the fighting is stated to have lasted three hours, when the hillmen were beaten off. The loss is said to have been considerable on both sides—one hundred killed and wounded: no further particulars are given.

The Delhi Gazette mentions a rumour that Sir Colin Campbell is not satisfied with the present force, but has applied to Government for more troops, and that Major Abbott, the deputy commissioner, is in favour of the policy of at once sending an efficient force against them; but Sir Henry Lawrence prefers negotiating, and has set his face against any hostile movement. Meantime the 3rd Punjab infantry (Henderson's) is detained in the Hazara till matters assume a more settled form.

The same paper furnishes a few details of late outrages on this frontier.

Our Government having been led to suppose that a chief, named Rahmut Khan Orakzye, possessed considerable influence over his people, he had been trusted to some extent, and his guarantee of safety to property and individuals had been generally believed to be not only binding, but a certain safeguard to all concerned. The amount of influence possessed by Rahmut Khan was shown on the 5th March, when some Banghyburdars were proceeding from Peshawur to Kohat, escorted by five of his sowars; they were waylaid by the Afreedies, two of the horsemen were cut to pieces, and the banghies plundered. On another occasion a party of Captain Lumsden's guide-corps was encamped at Kumalzye, and was attacked on the night of the 7th by a strong body of Suati horsemen, headed by two chiefs named Akram Khan and Uzeem Gool. The guides lost a few men and a couple of horses; the enemy seven or eight of their party; and amongst the slain was Akram Khan himself.

Sir Henry Lawrence, Lord Stanley, and Colonel Napier, had been travelling about the Peshawur and Kohat districts, settling sites for forts and towers, and lines of roads, cantonments, &c.

Some interest was lately excited by the announcement that a civil war on a small scale had broken out in Cabul. The tact and commanding influence of Dost Mahomed soon disappointed the lovers of stirring news. The story, however, is curiously illustrative of Afghan manners. It appears that, on the 28th of February, Peer Muhammed Khan, the Dost's younger brother, was celebrating the marriage of his son Shere Muhammed with a daughter of Salten Muhammed Khan, at his house in Chundoul, the Kuzulbash quarter. A number of the Kuzulbash tribe (the Koord) came to witness the festivities in such numbers as to interrupt the amusements. Peer Muhammed therefore ordered his people to exclude them, and the Koords not approving of such proceeding, drew their tulwars and resisted. A regular fight ensued between the adverse parties, during which Shere Muhammed came out to put an end to the disturbance; but the unfortunate bridegroom was soon shot down by the Koords, and then despatched with their knives: the other Kuzulbashes of Chundoul, the Jawan Sheres and the Shahsuwunds, hearing the disturbance, flocked to the assistance of their brethren, and Peer Muhammed was regularly besieged in his own house. Khan Shereen ordered the gates of Chundoul to be shut; so that when Muhammed Afsul came with Shere Ali Khan's regiment and demanded admittance, it was refused him, and he was fired upon: he returned to the Dulla Hissar, and received the Ameer's orders to invest Chundoul. The Kuzulbashes were therefore besieged in their own quarter for several days, but the Ameer finally prevailed on Peer Muhammed to pardon the murder of his son, and peace was restored.

A message had arrived at Cabul from the chief in power at Herat (a son of the well-known Yar Mahomed), with a message to the effect, that as Sirdar Kohandil, of Candahar, had sent his son with 5,000 troops towards Herat, where he had already taken possession of one place, and intended to attack other places, the ruler of Cabul would be pleased either to advise the sirdars of Candahar to withdraw their troops, or to assist the ruler of Herat. Dost Mahomed, up to last accounts, had sent no reply to this request.

The Nizam's dominions were in statu quo, as bad as ever. The correspondent of the Madras Athenæum represents the Nizam's authority to be in articulo mortis.

The Punjab was quiet, and with regard to Cashmere the general belief as to its state may be gathered from the fact, that 300 officers had applied for leave to spend the coming summer in the Happy Valley.

The last advices from the Cape of Good Hope state that Sir Harry Smith was about to take the field on the 8th of March in person, and that a considerable number of Burghers were expected to join.

Sir William Gomm, the Commander-in-Chief, proposes, it is said, to fix his head-quarters at Umballah, in order, as it has been stated in one of the journals, "to be near the seat of war in Burmah."

BURMAH.

The force destined for Burmah, after many delays and apparent changes of purpose, has at length got under way, and while we write has probably all, or nearly all, arrived at Maulmain, its appointed place of rendezvous. By the time this reaches the English reader the work of destruction will probably have been completed, and Rangoon and Martaban, and not improbably Prome itself, be in ashes. What effect these things may have on the Burmese authorities can only be conjectured: having knowingly provoked the war, they are said to be preparing to enter on it with obstinacy and vigour. They are perfectly aware that on the approach of the rains we must for a time withdraw, but we do not believe they have formed any conception of the lightning speed and destructiveness with which, through the instrumentality of steam, we can spread havoc and devastation around, or the little aid their stockades, jungles, and marshes—formerly such fearful opponents to our advance—can now afford them on any point where the Irrawaddy can be ascended by iron steamers with hardly half the draught of water of their own native boats. The Bombay squadron sailed on the 24th February; they reached Madras on the 7th March, and, to their great disappointment, found that no orders had been received for the troops to embark. The Zenobia and Medusa, not at the presidency at the time of their dispatch, meanwhile joined them, and on the 27th the embarkation commenced. They were to proceed as speedily as possible to Maulmain, the rendezvous at the mouth of the Rangoon river. The promptness and vigour of the councils of the Governor-General are said to have been chilled and damped by the executive: it had been resolved—why it is not stated—to place General Godwin in charge of the expedition: he was the oldest Queen's officer available, and had shared in the Burmese war in 1824; reasons sufficient, one would have supposed, why some other should have been appointed. He is said to have debated and hesitated; been averse to the sudden blow originally desired to be struck, in favour of a delay till October, and a war by land and water commenced in due form. The Bengal sepoy, besides, manifested the disposition to dictate to their officers, which has so often been their reproach. Part of the regiments are enlisted for general service, part of them for service in India only; and the high-caste Hindoos have a particular aversion to sea transport; the natives of all descriptions too often make caste prejudices, or religious scruples, an apology for avoiding trouble or risk, or increasing their demands on Government. The 38th N.I. is amongst the privileged corps not liable to be compelled to serve beyond seas: they were asked to volunteer, but determinedly declined; they were said to profess their readiness to proceed to Burmah by land, but not by water, and after repeated entreaties, were marched off by Chittagong accordingly. Of course they will arrive too late for the work now in hand, and will have to traverse districts at all times dangerous, at the deadliest season of the year: it is expected they will mutiny again on the march, and require in all likelihood to be disbanded! So much for the discipline that places the soldier above his commander. On the 14th ult. the left wing of H.M.'s 18th Royal Irish embarked from Calcutta to join the head-quarters at Maulmain. A wing of H.M.'s 80th left for the same quarter on the 20th, in the P. and O. Co.'s steamer Erin. The 40th N.I., with General Godwin and staff, the ordnance and engineer parks, were to have left on the 25th on board the transports Tubal Cain, Lahore, and Monarch, the former towed by H.M.'s steamer Hermes. The steam force from Calcutta will consist of the Enterprise, the Phlegethon (iron), the Tenasserim, the Fire Queen, and the Nemesis (iron), besides H.M.'s steamer Hermes, and the P. and O. Co.'s steamer Erin: the steamers have been employed both as tugs and transports. The force would, it was expected, be ready to commence operations about the middle of the present month. Martaban had in part been burnt by the Burmese in the early part of March, whether purposely or by accident was not known, most likely the latter, conflagrations being almost of continual occurrence amongst the wood-built houses of Burmah. All, of course, is conjecture as to the future.—B. Times, April 3.

No Government manifesto has yet appeared on the subject, further than the announcement in a General Order of the Governor-General's, dated the 24th March, that "The Governor-General of India in Council has determined to send a force composed of troops from the Bengal and Madras presidencies to Burmah." In this document it is also notified that Lieut.-General H. Godwin, C.B. (of H.M.'s service) is to command the whole force, with full authority over the troops stationed at Maulmain and in the province of Arracan (Anglo-Burmese territory); that Brigadier Warren (of the Company's service) will command the Bengal brigade, which is to consist of 1 company of European artillery, 1 regt. of H.M.'s infantry, and 2 regts. of N.I.; and that Brigadier Elliott (of H.M.'s service) will command the Madras brigade. The last remaining portion of the Bengal brigade was to have left Calcutta on the 25th of March; and, for its size, is an efficient and well-equipped force. The Madras brigade was to have embarked on the 29th of March on board the squadron of steam-frigates sent from this port: it consists of 3 companies of artillery, 2 companies of sappers and miners, 1 regt. H.M.'s infantry, and 3 regts. of N.I.—B. Telegraph, April 3.

THE LONDON MAIL of February 9th arrived at Calcutta on March 16th, via Bombay. The subsequent Mail, of March 24th, left Aden on April 12th, for Ceylon, Madras, and Bengal, per Hindustan.

THE RAJAH OF COORG, with his daughter, have taken their departure for England by the April steamer. The young princess is, it is believed, being taken home for the purpose of being educated: she was at one time said to be already in heart a Christian.

THE NICOBARS.—The Tenasserim has arrived from the Nicobars, where she went under instructions from Commodore Lambert, to inquire as to the truth of the statement of an English vessel having been cut off by the natives at Noncovry. We regret to learn that the result is a complete confirmation of this report. Several of the natives, not of the island of Comorta, by the inhabitants of which the atrocious act was committed, gave ready and concurrent evidence of the fact, coinciding exactly with that given to the authorities at Maulmain; and a search in the villages of Comorta, which were deserted on the appearance of our people, produced a number of articles which have belonged to English and Indian vessels. Among those which may assist in the identification of the English vessel lately captured, is a seal with the device of Freedom, bearing the Cap of Liberty and a Cornucopia, with the motto "Better not be than without thee;" also a book, with the name "H. Palmer, 22nd May, 1836," and another, apparently stained with blood, and with the name "John Martin."—Hurkaru, Mar. 13.

THE MAHARAJAH OF INDORE has received the Governor-General's permission to take his seat on the gudgee, the period of his tutelage having expired.

THE ASIATIC SOCIETY OF BENGAL recently resolved, in a spirit of most praiseworthy humility, to offer its splendid zoological collection to Government, as something altogether too good for the society, its present fallen condition. We are glad to find the Government showing its entire acquiescence in the society's estimate of its own unfitness to represent the cause of natural science in India. The geological curatorship is to be abolished, and that part of the geological museum which belongs to Government, is to be removed from the society's rooms and transferred to the Medical College, where professorships of geology and comparative anatomy are to be established. We much deplore a state of things which does so little credit to the scientific men in the Company's service, who have been stationed in Calcutta during the past fifteen years. To their dissensions must it chiefly be attributed that the Asiatic Society has become so utterly unworthy of its early reputation. We must be however content now with the too obvious fact that little short of a miracle can prevent this once world-honoured institution from sinking into utter insignificance.—Delhi Gaz., Mar. 13.

GINCHONA.—The Government has decided upon taking steps for the introduction of the Cinchona tree into India.—Englishman.

CHAPLAINS TO THE BURMESE EXPEDITION.—We hear from Calcutta that the lot of Chaplains to the Burmese expedition has fallen on the following reverend gentlemen. Mr. W. J. Whiting, from Cawnpore, and Mr. J. B. D'Aguilar, from Meerut.—Mofussilite, Mar. 12.

ONE OF THE BAND WHO MURDERED CAPT. ALCCCK, many years back on the Mynpoorie road, entered Agra in the retinue of the Rana of Dholpore. He was taken, and it is said he confessed at once; he name was Sultan Singht.—Agra Messenger, March 13.

HINDU WIDOW MARRIED.—An educated native of a liberal cast of mind has married a widow. The nuptials, it is said, have been celebrated in the Mofussil, where both the parties with their families are on a tour.—Hurkaru.

INSOLVENCY OF A CALCUTTA FIRM.—Saturday's Gazette announced that another Calcutta firm has taken refuge in the Insolvent Court. This step was, it is supposed, rendered unavoidable by the decision of the Supreme Court last week, in a case in which the Agra Bank sued the firm of Smith, Huffnagle, and Co. on a security bond, and got a verdict for Rs. 3,19,121. Mr. Huffnagle left Calcutta in the P. and O. Company's steamer Hindustan on Monday last, his name is therefore not included in the petition.—Englishman, March 15.

THE NATIVE PAPERS are coming out rather strong; witness what one of them says of the Most Noble the Governor-General:—"Let Lord Dalhousie then act the part of Nero, and, setting fire to Calcutta, fiddle away on the top of the Ochterlony Monument."—Hurkaru, March 15.

MAHARAJA HINDOO RAO is progressing on his annual sporting tour. The last accounts received state he has killed sixteen tigers and captured three cubs alive. This is but a small amount of game, inasmuch as this keen sportsman seldom returns without a bag of from sixty to eighty tigers. The Hakeem Mehndi's nephew and some other native gentlemen from the Lucknow courts are with the maharaja: they are now shooting in the Lucknow territory, bordering upon the Nepal boundary.—Delhi Gaz. March 24.

LIEUT. GENERAL AUCHMUTY, C.B., who since the departure of Sir John Grey, has been Commander of the Forces, has resigned his appointment and returns to England by this day's steamer: he has been succeeded by General Staveland, C.B., who will command until the arrival of the new Commander-in-Chief, expected to be Sir Joseph Thackwell or Lord Frederick Fitzclarence.—B. Times.

THE 38TH BENGAL LIGHT INFANTRY have refused to volunteer for service in Burmah. A corps long known for their gallantry, and renowned for merit, have had the opportunity given them of adding more laurels to those they have already won, and of distinguishing themselves by the alacrity they might show in serving that state which had so justly estimated and rewarded their previous good conduct during the past thirteen years. They have slighted the undeserved consideration shown, and exposed themselves, not unjustly, to be regarded as mere mercenaries, who, adhering to the letter of their bond, refuse to recognise its spirit. When at Jellalabad, the 38th, in the hour of danger, and under leaders of merit, nobly emulated the Queen's corps, with whom they were associated, in deeds of glory, and came out of the trial as became true men and good soldiers. They had been isolated for years from the baneful influence of contamination with their Hindoo connexions; and though none of them, that we ever heard of, broke through the strict rules of their religion, they laid claim to no special privileges that might have endangered the safety of the garrison of which they formed a part, or have added to the difficulties by which they were surrounded. But the 38th have evidently forgotten their ancient well-earned renown amid the enervating influences of the provinces. They have been at Lucknow, they have been at Barrackpore, and they have heard that sepoy, now serving beyond the Indus, are receiving extra batta. The spirit of the mercenary has overcome the spirit of the soldier; and we venture to assert, with little fear of contradiction, that had the question of volunteering been accompanied with an assurance of extra pay or batta, the quiet and, of course, previously arranged determination to refuse, would have been exchanged for a shout and a joyful acquiescence in the proposal of their masters. We are sorry for the 38th. It is much to be regretted, that a corps, which have earned so many distinctions, should have, in a score minutes, tarnished their laurels by a refusal to submit, for a very few days, to the inconveniences of a trip by sea to the scene on which they would have added to their laurels, and earned greater fame and renown.—Lahore Chronicle, Mar. 20.

THE MARCHIONESS OF DALHOUSIE.—It is stated on good authority that ill-health compels the Marchioness of Dalhousie to leave India immediately. She will embark in next month's steamer.—Hurkara, March 24.

THE INDIA GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY'S report for the past half-year shows a profit which, after paying heavy expenses for repairs, and providing the nucleus of a reserve fund, will yield a dividend of 5 per cent. per annum. The directors declare their secretary, Mr. Grant, inefficient, and advise him to resign; but, having the auditors, the shippers, and the results of the half-year's operations on his side, he has resolved to abide the decision of the shareholders.—Ibid.

THE LATE DYCE SOMBRE.—The letters of administration to the estate of Dyce Sombre, taken out here by the administrator-general, have been cancelled on reference of the matter to the Supreme Court.—Ibid.

SIR ERSKINE PERRY will retire from India in November on a pension of £1,600 a year, and it is understood that he has saved from his income in India 5½ lakhs of rupees.—B. Telegraph, April 3.

THE MOUSTACHE ORDER.—We are given to understand that the moustache order of Sir John Grey has not been quite approved of by the Duke of Wellington. A private hint has been conveyed to all Queen's Officers serving on the staff of the army, that the sooner they cut off the appendage the better.—Ibid.

UNCOVENANTED DEPUTY-COLLECTORS.—The long expected nominations to the situations of uncovenanted deputy-collectors have taken place here. The salary of each deputy-collector is fixed at Rs. 350 per mensem, and these officers are to reside all the year round at the sudder station of each collectorate.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

SERVICES OF LIEUT. COL. R. J. H. BIRCH, JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL.

Head Quarters, Camp, Butala, March 6, 1852.—1. It has pleased the Most Noble the Governor-General of India in Council to appoint Lieut. Col. R. J. H. Birch, C.B. Judge Advocate General, to officiate as secretary to the Government of India in the military department, consequent upon the departure of Secretary Colonel J. Stuart, C.B. for New South Wales on medical certificate.

2. While offering his congratulations to Lieut. Col. Birch on the distinction so conferred upon him, the Commander-in-Chief is desirous of thus publicly recording his acknowledgment of the valuable services already rendered to the state by Lieut. Col. Birch in his discharge, through a course of very many years, of the important duties connected with the office which he is now, so advantageously to himself, called upon, provisionally indeed, but unavoidably for a considerable term, to relinquish; and of bearing testimony to the judgment and discrimination, zeal for the interests of the army, and solicitude for preserving the course of military justice free from error, uniformly manifested by Lieut. Col. Birch in the counsel which he has been, from time to time, called upon in his professional capacity to tender since his excellency's assumption of the command of the armies of India.

THE BENGAL FORCE FOR BURMAH.

Fort William, 24th March, 1852.—The Most Noble the Governor-General of India in Council, having determined to send a force composed of troops from the Bengal and Madras presidencies to Burmah, the following appointments connected with that force are hereby notified:—

Lieut. General H. Godwin, C.B., to command the whole, with full authority over the troops stationed at Moulmein, and in the province of Arracan.

Capt. W. A. J. Mayhew, (assistant adjutant general, Bengal Army) to be ditto to the force.

Lieut. A. Robertson, Bengal Art., (extra assistant sec., military board) to be deputy commissary of ordnance.

Major H. Frazer, of Bengal engineers, (garrison eng. of Fort William and civil architect) to be commanding engineer, with charge of the engineer park.

Lieut. E. C. S. Williams, Bengal engineers, (officiating in charge of the iron yard) to be adjutant of the engineering department with the force; L. Donaldson, A. Crastor, W. S. Trevor, Bengal engineers, assistant field engineers.

Senior-surgeon W. Montgomerie, Bengal med. establishment, to be superint. surg. to the force; and to exercise the functions of field surg. aided by the following medical officers of the Bengal establishment:—

Assistant-surgeons, J. Farrer, M.D.; W. White, M.D.; A. Christison, M.D.; J. P. Bowling, and G. M. Gowan.

Brigadier G. Warren to command the Bengal brigade.

Capt. G. F. S. Call, H.M.'s 18th Royal Irish, to be major of brigade.

Capt. R. S. Simpson, dep. ass. commissary gen., to accompany the Bengal brigade, aided by sub-assistant commissary gen. lieut. R. D. Macpherson.

2. The Bengal brigade will consist of 1 co. European artillery; 1 regt. H.M.'s infantry, and 2 regts. N.I., as may be arranged by the general officer commanding.

3. Such portions of the force as have not already sailed, will embark on the 25th inst. or as soon after as possible.

NIZAM'S DOMINIONS.

The Hyderabad state is in articulo mortis; our duty of preservation is nearly at an end. It has existed a long time for a native kingdom in alliance with the British, but it would rush headlong to destruction, and in spite of homilies and deprecation of further conquest, the Deccan will soon be distinguished by a dash of red in the maps of India. It is astonishing how that same colour runs when once it is laid on! The minister's wound is nearly cured, but the body politic is bleeding at every pore. The financial difficulties of the country are bringing everything to a dead lock. The government is only sharing in the ruin of every private interest. Nobody is paid; the Contingent is close on seven months in arrear, and not a rupee is forthcoming. The great money-lenders are either annihilated or on the verge of it, and the credit of the state is at the last gasp. The Nizam cannot be made to understand his real position. Perhaps he has had a set of old treaties bound in calfskin, and has taken to read them, in the hope of gaining consolation thereby. Suraj-ool-Moolk has survived his influence with the Resident as well as with the Nizam. The former has long hated, distrusted, and feared him, and now General Frazer has turned his back upon him. Poor luckless mortal! sitting evermore on a "bottomless deficiency," he has been obliged to invent schemes and excuses, till wit on one side and belief on the other are both exhausted, and he is no longer of use to Mussulman or Christian. He may be as well kept on, however, as not. It is scarcely worth while to change the actors just as the curtain is about to fall. In the provinces anarchy rules without a check. The Rohillas are in possession of all the roads, and the travellers and villagers are looted without mercy. Of late they have taken to murder the Company's sepoy's going and returning on furlough, which is a sure sign that the law is unknown and government uncared for. An assurance on the existence of the Hyderabad dynasty till December, 1852, could only be done at a high premium, the risk being decidedly hazardous.—Madras Athenaeum, March 23.

SIR R. ARMSTRONG is said to be determined on proceeding on his "tour of inspection" to Bangalore and Ootacamund so soon as arrangements for the dispatch of the troops to Rangoon have been completed.

THE MOPLAHS on the Malabar coast appear cowed by the energy lately displayed by the magistrates in detecting and securing those concerned in the last disturbance. The high priest of the Moplahs, the originator of the insurrection amongst his countrymen, left Calicut clandestinely with his family, horses, furniture, and all his valuable property. The inhabitants of Calicut were unacquainted with his movements.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

BOMBAY.

BARODA AFFAIRS.

The Bombay newspapers continue warm as ever on the subject of the corruptness of the subordinates of the secretariate, and the extreme misconduct of Government in connection with Baroda affairs. Above a quarter of a million sterling is known to have been sent from Baroda to Bombay for the purpose of influencing the decisions of Government; and it is reasoned, that if the keen-scented and close-fisted men of business, who paid such sums as these, had found they were throwing away their money, they would have discontinued the practice on discovering its fruitlessness—the fact of their perseverance showing that they, at all events, are satisfied that they have made a profitable bargain. Government have for ten years been aware that scandals on these subjects were universal against them and their servants; yet, with the single exception of the inquiries under Sir George Arthur, in 1843, they have always endeavoured to bemystify and huddle up matters—to discountenance inquiry, and patronize the most notorious of the negotiators. The result is, that scandals have reached a point never before attained in the most corrupt of times; and the simulated investigations now in progress, so far from quashing, tend only to give greater currency and countenance to them.—Bombay Times, April 3.

It would appear that, during the time that the late resident of Baroda was every day making fresh discoveries connected with the treachery of persons employed in the secretariate, he wrote an "immediate service" letter to the political secretary, informing that gentleman of certain sums which had been received from Baroda by a European assistant in the secretariate, but received in the name of a high official, who has now—and had then—gone to England. Col. Outram's letter informed the political secretary that if certain steps were taken, and certain search warrants issued, within three hours of the receipt of the despatch, certain discoveries would take place which must inevitably show the Bombay Government that an uncovenanted servant (now no longer in Bombay) had some few years before received very large sums of money from the Baroda Government—partly for giving them information regarding the intentions, the deliberations, and minutes of the Bombay Government; and partly for the avowed purpose of paying over large sums received to a European covenanted servant, one of the highest—for a short time the highest—officials in the presidency. What steps did the political secretary take when he received this information from the resident at Baroda? Did he commence to make inquiries the moment the letter was put in his hands? Did he act on the information he had received, and issue search warrants within three hours of opening the despatch? No. The letter was allowed to remain on his table for a period of nearly two months, and at the end of that time, being himself about to leave Bombay for Mahabeshwar, he entrusted the inquiry to another uncovenanted assistant, the brother-in-law of him who was accused of bribery. As a matter of course it was far too late to do anything in the matter. The guilty parties had received intelligence of what was going on, weeks before the political secretary had given any orders on the subject.—B. Telegraph, Mar. 31.

THE LONDON MAIL of February 24th arrived at Bombay on March 24th, per Auckland.

RIGHT OF NATIVE PRINCES TO INTESTATES' PROPERTY.—Some very interesting proceedings took place in the Court of Sudder Dewannee Adawlut on Monday, in which a most important question is involved, affecting a numerous class of persons,—namely, whether native princes of right succeed to the intestate property of their dependents. The question has been decided in the negative by Mr. Suart, zillah judge of Khandesh, and the right of the present appellant, as heiress at law to the property in question, has been admitted by the Sudder Court; but the matter having assumed a new phase, it will have again to be gone into almost de novo. The contending parties are the Baeza Bae, widow of Dowlut Rao Scindia, and a lady named Rumbae, the heiress at law of one of her highness's and her deceased husband's most confidential servants, who sacrificed all his property at Gwalior to follow the fortunes of his capricious and self-willed mistress in her flight from the capital of Scindia's dominions. The most striking feature in the whole case seems to be, that, even after the highest judicial tribunal of the country has given a judgment in a party's favour, and has issued positive instructions for delivering over the property in dispute to the rightful claimant, yet, somehow or other, its process may be evaded, and the most vexatious and frivolous delays be interposed to keep successful suitors in our Courts out of their inheritance. In the present case, the property claimed is stated as being of the value of 25,000*l.*, and the heiress at law now sues as a pauper!—B. Times, March 6.

LORD FALKLAND.—There is a surmise very generally prevalent at present, that the Governor of Bombay has been privately made aware that he may look for the arrival of his recall by next steamer,—the Baroda matters having added the last straw which breaks the back of the forbearance of Leadenhall-street. The rumour has for the past few days become so general, that we can no longer pass it over unnoticed, although only to discredit it. It is very well known that the almost incessant references made on the most trifling occasions to the Court of Directors throughout the present administration, little as has occurred under it, have virtually transferred the functions that used to be exercised in Bombay Castle to Leadenhall-street, and that this has occasioned no small degree of dissatisfaction amongst those who find it work enough to instruct and watch over their servants without having the task altogether imposed on them others were paid for performing. The Baroda scandals coming on the back of this, and, on the back of these, the interposition of the London press, with all its enormous ability in a cause really worthy of their advocacy, have, we have no doubt, greatly added to the umbrage recently experienced; and had Lord Falkland been within a year of the commencement instead of within one of the conclusion of his term of service, we think it not improbable that it might have been prematurely cut short. As it is, it is scarce worth while putting a period summarily to an official existence which has in the main been kind-hearted, well-meant, and inoffensive, when so near its natural close, and when his lordship might safely plead that he had done everything that could have been expected of him; and that, if they would appoint a nobleman to India wholly unacquainted with its affairs, surrounded by able and experienced councillors and able secretaries, the only wise thing that could be done by him was to act on their advice:—the references to the court he might claim as instances of caution or respect, which, if failings on his part, ought by the directors themselves to be looked on as leaning to virtue's side. These appear to us as offering a strong prima facie presumption against anything like a recall.—B. Times, April 3.

COLONEL MELVILL, secretary to Government under the military and marine department, leaves by this day's steamer for Egypt, proposing to spend six months in journeying through the Levant, Palestine, and Egypt, for relaxation and the benefit of his health. Col. Melvill is the oldest and one of the ablest heads of departments at the presidency; he has held his present appointment for close on twelve years, and with the exception of a two months' trip with his family to Suez, in 1842, has not, so far as we remember, been a single day absent from his duty. He was intended by the Governor to have been appointed commissioner for Scinde in 1850, when his want of experience in civil administration stood in his way.—B. Times, April 3.

MR. MACKAY, who came out a year ago to Bombay, as commissioner from Lancashire, to inquire into the state of cotton cultivation, and the causes of the decline of the cotton trade, has been compelled to return home from sickness, but, fortunately, not until far the heaviest portion of his task has been completed. In a letter to the Bombay Chamber of Commerce he says:—"I am happy to say that, before disease had fairly disqualified me for further exertions, I had succeeded in traversing the greater portion of that part of India which constitutes its great cotton field. In retiring from the country, therefore, I do not leave without having formed impressions as to the condition, wants, and prospects of the cotton trade in the great district in question, impressions founded, for the most part, on actual observation. Had I remained any longer in the country, my subsequent visits would have been, in the first place, to districts of secondary importance as regards the growth of cotton, and afterwards to sections of the country, my journeyings through which would have partaken more of the character of trips of pleasure and recreation than otherwise. Such, however, I am now reluctantly compelled to forego; but it is a consolation to me to know that, whilst I am compelled to leave India just as my work was becoming light and agreeable to me, this compulsion has not come upon me until the heavier and more serious portion of it had been accomplished. I trust that returning health and strength will enable me elsewhere to turn, to some little extent at least, the information which I have derived at the cost of no little labour on the spot, to the common benefit of India and England."

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF THE INDIAN NAVY.

Bombay Castle, March 23, 1852.—Captain Sir Henry John Leeke, R.N., appointed by the Court of Directors to be superintendent and commander-in-chief of the Indian Navy, has this day arrived and assumed charge of his office according to the terms of his commission.

Under the authority of the Court of Directors, Capt. Sir Henry John Leeke is appointed a commodore of the 1st class in the Indian Navy.

Commodore Lushington having resigned his office into the hands of his appointed successor, the right Hon. Governor in Council avails himself of the opportunity publicly to record the high sense which the Government entertains of the able manner in which the duties of the marine branch of the administration of this presidency have been conducted by Commodore Lushington, during the period he has held the important office of commander-in-chief.

To Commodore Lushington the Government has been often and largely indebted for his zealous and energetic co-operation in all its views and objects, and especially on the recent occasion when a sudden and unexpected call was made for a detachment of steamers to be employed in the Bay of Bengal. The celerity with which this detachment was fitted, and the admirable order in which it was despatched to its destination, have elicited the marked approbation of the Supreme Government; and his Lordship in Council feels it must be a source of much gratification to Commodore Lushington on resigning his command, to have been enabled to offer this most convincing proof of the state of perfect efficiency in which the Indian Navy has been maintained whilst under his charge, ready at all times for immediate action whenever and wherever its services may be required.

CHINA.

A leather merchant, just returned to Canton from Kaou-chow-foo, says that Seu, on the 20th day of the month before last, collected 4,000 soldiers, each with fire-carriages (i.e. torches tied to the horns of oxen) under his charge, to proceed towards the rebel camp, and endeavour to set it on fire, not knowing that the rebels were already acquainted with his intention. It was arranged that above 1,000 of the rebels should proceed to a distance of about 20 le (6½ miles) from the city of Kaou-chow-foo, and lie in ambush there until Seu's troops had passed, and then suddenly fall on their rear. Seu, being thus attacked both before and behind, brought forward the fire-carriages; but they did not answer, and the fire only served to render his men more conspicuous. The soldiers became alarmed, and were thrown into the utmost confusion; so that, of 4,000, only 1,700 escaped, who, with Seu, precipitately returned to the city, whither they were closely pursued by the rebels. The rebels plundered all the shops in the suburbs. By express from Peking, we learn that a large body of rebels in Hoo-pih have coalesced with the Mesoutse mountaineers, and muster altogether about 20,000 men. They have risen in Hoo-pih, and now surround the capital city of Kwei-chow, having already destroyed the city of Sung-taou-ting, whose chief magistrate they have plundered of everything he possessed. They are now proceeding to attack the city of Tung-yin-foo. In consequence of the disturbances, orders have been received from the board of war for 10,000 men to proceed from Tz'chuen, to unite with others from Kwei-chow, Hoo-nan, and Hoo-pih.—Friend of China, Feb. 27.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The intelligence from Cape Town is to the 10th of March.

The Hydra, with Major-General Cathcart, had not arrived.

The Cape Town Mail learns, from a private source, that Col. Mitchell's party, on patrol in the Amatola, had been successful in dispersing or destroying a considerable number of Hottentots, who are described as having been encamped in a retired position. Twenty-six were killed, and the rest fled into the bush. This place was presumed to be the head-quarters of the rebel Nithaalder. Col. Eyre was in pursuit of some considerable droves of cattle. The friendly chiefs continued to deliver up small lots of the enemy's cattle.

The Civil Commissioners of Cradock and Colesberg had returned to their respective head-quarters, after some successfully conducted operations against the Tambookies and Kreili's Caffres. The former had captured 1,050 head of cattle, and killed upwards of 100 of the enemy. A portion of his force had been surrounded and desperately engaged in the fastnesses of the Dekana, but, receiving assistance from their comrades, had fought their way through, losing, however, seven killed. The force under the Civil Commissioner of Colesberg is reported to have captured 1,000 head of cattle, and killed 40 Caffres and Hottentots.

A report was current in Cape Town that Riebeeck, where there is a post with about forty men, had been attacked by a large body of Caffres.

EGYPT.

Alexandria, April 21. — By this mail I have to advise the important intelligence of the settlement, through the medium of Fouad Effendi, for a time at least, of the differences between the Sultan and Abbas Pasha, the former having agreed to waive all claims for a period of seven years. The Government of Egypt will consequently be carried on as before for this period, at the end of which the Porte will of course have the option of again putting forth its demands.

Arrangements have been made by our resident postmaster with the Egyptian Government, by which the latter undertake the conveyance of the Indian and China mails through the country — the homeward mails from Suez to Alexandria in seventy hours, and the outward from this to Suez in seventy-five hours; thus effecting a saving of ten or twelve hours. For this service 6,000l. a-year is to be paid to the Government.

The railway is progressing favourably. Several vessels with rails are shortly expected to arrive.—Times Correspondence.

VANITY TAX.—Captain Sherwill, in a tour through the Rajmahal Hills last year, attended a market at which were several hundred hill men and women. "It is really surprising," he says, "to see the torture, for it can fall little short of such an infliction, the Sonthal women put themselves to, in order to, as they imagine, adorn their bodies. Their arms, ancles, and throats are each laden with heavy brass or bell-metal ornaments. I had a quantity of these ornaments weighed, and found that the bracelets fluctuated from two to four pounds; the anklets four pounds each; and as a fully equipped belle carries two anklets, and perhaps twelve bracelets, and a necklace weighing a pound, the total weight of ornaments carried on her person amounts to thirty-four pounds of bell-metal; a greater weight than one of our drawing-room belles could well lift. Almost every woman in comfortable circumstances carries twelve pounds weight of brass ornaments upon her person."

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

A most interesting discovery of a large quantity of ancient Roman coins has lately been made in the neighbourhood of Cannanore, on the Malabar coast, not only remarkable for the numbers found (amounting to some hundreds), but also for their wonderful state of preservation. Many appear almost as fresh as on the day they were struck, the outline of the figures is so sharp and distinct, and the inscriptions so clear and legible. With very few exceptions, they are all of gold, and of the age of Imperial Rome, from Augustus downwards, several of them being coeval with the earliest days of the Christian era. From what we have been able to learn regarding their first appearance, it seems that a few were brought into the town of Calicut and offered for sale in the bazaar by some poor natives, who, naturally supposing from their shining appearance that they were worth perhaps some trifle, gladly bartered them away for a day's feed of rice. The coins, however, speedily found their way among those who were not long in estimating their real value, and the natives, finding that some importance was attached to the glittering metal, began to rise in their demands, and at length sold them for one, five, ten, and subsequently for fourteen rupees the coin. The purity of the gold especially attracted the notice of the jewellers and the wealthier natives, who purchased them for the purpose of having them melted down for trinkets and ornaments; and many, it is to be regretted, have been irretrievably lost in this way. The secrecy at first so carefully maintained by the natives in respect to the spot whence they brought them, rose in proportion to the eagerness with which the coins were bought up, and for a long time all endeavours proved fruitless in ascertaining the precise locality wherein they were found. It now appears that they were accidentally discovered in the search for gold-dust, by the gradual clearing away of the soil on the slope of a small hill in the neighbourhood of Kottayem, a village about ten miles to the eastward of Cannanore. A brass vessel was also found, in which many of the coins were deposited. For a length of time the numbers appear to have been very great, and it has been stated that no less than five cooly-loads of gold coins were dug out of the same spot. Neither will this startling assertion be so incredible after all, when we have it on record that upwards of five hundred coins were discovered in the Coimbatore district in 1842, a short but interesting account of which is given in the volume of the Madras Journal of Science and Literature for 1844. Other discoveries have also been made at various intervals in the Deccan, the S. Mahratta country, Cuddapah, Nellore, Madura, and in various places in S. India; but in no instance has such a large quantity of coins, almost exclusively gold, been hitherto discovered, and all, at the same time, in such perfect preservation. It is impossible to make any correct calculation as to the numbers which have actually been found, but it might be mentioned that about eighty or ninety have come into the possession of his Highness the Rajah of Travancore; and still a greater quantity has been collected and preserved by General Cullen, Resident in Travancore; while, even after the lapse of more than a year from their first discovery, they are still procurable from the natives in the neighbourhood of Tellicherry and Calicut. The most numerous examples which occur are those of the reign of Tiberius, and next to that emperor, those of Nero. It is not a little remarkable that, both among these Aurei, as well as among the Denarii alluded to, as discovered at Coimbatore, 1842, the examples of coins of the Emperor Tiberius should in both instances have been more frequent than any other, although this may in some manner be accounted for when we consider that the reign of Tiberius extended over a period of twenty-three years, — a long time, in comparison with that of the other emperors, excepting Augustus. In other respects, the coins are of similar dates, with an occasional difference of the types on the reverse of a few of them. No attempt appears hitherto to have been made to investigate, if possible, in what manner these relics of an age so long passed by, and of a people so interesting as the Romans, from their distant conquests and foreign commerce, happened to be conveyed to these countries, where they are again brought to light, after having been concealed for so many hundred years.

From the communication which the Romans had with the western coast of India, we have little occasion to be surprised at the discovery of such coins as have from time to time been found in India; the great difficulty lies in determining by whom and how they were actually brought here, and how many centuries may have passed away since they were either lost or deposited in those spots whence they are now taken. The oldest coins in the present collection are those of Augustus, and the latest those of Antoninus Pius, embracing a period of about one hundred and forty years. We must, therefore, conclude that they were all brought here subsequent to or during the reign of the last-mentioned emperor, while the very remarkable state of preservation in which they exist would lead us to suppose that they had never been in extensive circulation or use previously. It can be no matter of surprise that no other memorials of those times are found upon this coast, such as buildings, &c. &c., for the ancients obtained no footing in the country, but merely came and returned with their ships laden with merchandize.*

In the absence of all direct testimony as to the probable fact of these coins having been conveyed here by the Romo-Egyptian traders, there is another supposition worth taking into consideration, whether they may not have been brought here by those Jewish refugees who, emigrating from Palestine about the year 68, A.D., spread themselves over this part of the continent at that early period. That country was then a Roman province, and consequently Roman money was there in circulation. At that time, ten thousand Jews with their families came and settled on the coast of Malabar, and dispersed themselves in various places, chiefly on the sea-coast. Now, supposing several emigrations of the kind to have succeeded each other, and taken place during the third and fourth centuries (Palestine did not cease to be a Roman province until the beginning of the seventh century), it is not unlikely that these coins may have been brought by them; and, either from suffering persecution or oppression at the hands of the natives, they may have buried these treasures for greater security or concealment. But besides the Jews, the Nestorian Christians may have been instrumental in conveying foreign coins to these countries. In 485, A.D., they obtained a footing in Persia, whence they spread into almost every country of the East. But I do not consider this theory entitled to so much consideration, from the fact of the coins being found in greater number on or near to the sea-coast, on which account it would assuredly be more plausible to support the idea of their having been brought by the Romans from Egypt, or the Jews from Palestine, presuming the latter people, in their emigration, came either by the way of the Red Sea or the Persian Gulf.—Capt. Drury's paper, in Journal As. Soc. of Bengal, No. V., 1851.

Dr. Woepcke has discovered, in the National Library at Paris, Arabic translations of two hitherto lost works of Euclid; one, a treatise on the Lever, in four propositions, preceded by certain axioms; the other, a treatise on the division of plane figures. He has published the Arabic text, accompanied by a translation, of the first, and a translation of the second, in the last number of the Journal Asiatique.

Father J. B. Pitra has published at Paris the first volume of a Spicilegium, which comprehends the Scholæ of Victor Capuanus, containing inedited extracts from S. Polycarp, Origen, S. Basil, &c.; the Expositum Joannis Diaconi in Pentateuchum, written in the sixth century, and mentioning twenty-two ecclesiastical authors; and divers Collectanea, including fragments of a work by an apologist named Magnes (hitherto almost unknown), a curious passage of S. Gregory the Illuminator, and extracts from the works of Manes, Valentinus, Marcion, and other heretical writers.—Journal des Savants.

The geographical literature of Arabia is about to be enriched by a publication of great importance, namely, the Itinerary of an Arab of Spain, named Mohammed Ibn Jobayr, who, during the years 1183-5, visited Egypt, Irak Arabi, Mesopotamia, Syria and Sicily. The original work is found in only one European library, that of the University of Leyden; and it will be edited by a young Scotch orientalist, Mr. W. Wright, a pupil of M. Rœdiger, of Halle, and printed at the University Press of Leyden. Mr. Wright proposes to add to his edition, extracts from the History of Mecca, by Al-Fakihi, and notices of Ibn Jobayr, the author, by Ibn Khatib, Makkari, and Makrizi.—Journ. Asiatique.

The Japan expedition, according to a Washington correspondent, is to be merely a hydrographical survey of the Japanese coast. The 32-pounders are to be used merely as measuring instruments in the triangulations; the cannon-balls are for procuring base lines. If any Japanese is foolish enough to put his head in the way of these meteorological instruments, of course nobody will be to blame but himself if he should get hurt.—New York Herald.

* Remains of Roman buildings, as well as coins, have been discovered in Ceylon. In one instance of the latter, they were mostly of the age of Antoninus.

TO CORRESPONDENTS

We are unable to afford "A SUBSCRIBER" any information concerning the progress of steam-navigation in China.

"A CONSTANT READER" is informed that, as a general rule, we do not insert letters addressed to and published in other London papers, especially relating to matters which have not appeared in our own.

The correspondence between Major Jacob and General Napier would occupy several of our pages, which we could not devote to a subject of a personal nature. An extract was given in our last issue.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, May 4, 1852.

A TRIBUTE more gratifying to the authorities intrusted with the administration of British India could scarcely have been desired than that which was almost unanimously paid them in the House of Commons on the 19th ult., when Mr. Herries moved for the appointment of a committee by that branch of the Legislature to inquire into the operation of the Act of 1833. With a single exception, all the speakers concurred in commending, or studiously refrained from censuring, that administration, and the expressive silence upon that occasion of those who have sometimes assailed the East-India Company was, perhaps, more eloquent than the praise even of such men as Mr. Hume and Sir Robert Inglis. Mr. Anstey was, indeed, objurgatory; but Mr. Bright was mute.

Regarding the highly eulogistic speech of the President of the India Board in the light of a gloss upon that of Lord Derby, we have no difficulty in concluding that the present Government are adverse to any essential change in the existing scheme of Indian rule. Lord John Russell, speaking, no doubt, the sentiments of the late Ministers, indicated clearly enough that, beyond the slight modifications to which we have before referred, no organic changes were meditated by them. His Lordship is reported to have expressed his conviction that, under the Act of 1833, "we had performed our duty, if not fully and completely, still in a great degree, to the people of India;" and had "done much to justify the continuance of our rule over them." Although, he said, the Act in question might be susceptible of improvement in particular points, in his opinion, its great outlines ought to be maintained, and with them the system of double government. The question of patronage, he acknowledged, was one that affected the Constitution of the country, which might be endangered by vesting it in a Minister of the Crown, and "he thought it was a most fortunate circumstance that a mode of government had been found which, whilst it provided for the good administration of India, placed the sovereignty of that vast empire under the Crown of the United Kingdom without injury to the working of the Constitution."

The abolition of the Court of Directors, as an agency in the government of India, was deprecated by none more earnestly than by Mr. Hume. No policy, he said, could be more fatal. The errors committed in our Indian administration he ascribed, not to the Court of Directors, but to the Ministry at home; and, far from reducing the power of the Court, so as to make it more subservient to the Board, Mr. Hume avowed that he would enlarge its authority, in order that it might control and arrest the arbitrary measures of the Minister.

Upon the whole, then, the sentiments revealed by the leading members of the two great political parties may authorize the conclusion that the safety of our Indian empire will not be jeopardized by wild theories or hazardous experiments.

We observe, from the formal notice given by Lord Ellenborough in the House of Lords, that his project for reconstructing the Indian home administration is of a more radical character than his speech gave us reason to expect. He proposes that the connection between the East-India Company and the Government should be entirely dissolved; that the powers now vested in the Board of Control and the Court of Directors be transferred to an Indian council, the president to be appointed by the Crown, and the members to be elected by a constituency consisting of the present proprietors of East-India Stock, and persons who shall have served ten years in India as judges in the Supreme Courts, or in the discharge of any ecclesiastical functions, or in any civil employment under the Government of India, or as commissioned officers of the royal and native armies, and the Indian Navy; that this council shall consist of twelve members, elected for five years, nine of them being persons qualified to vote for members of the council by reason of actual service in India; that all orders sent to India be signed by the president of the Indian council, and that the government of India be conducted in the name of the Crown.

The hint of an Indian council, formed by amalgamating the Board of Control and the Court of Directors, seems to have been furnished by a pamphlet, privately circulated, in which the writer suggests that the Home Government should be conducted by a Board, consisting of a Cabinet Minister, as president, two vice-presidents, and a council of six or eight members; one vice-president and one-third of the council to be named and removable by the Crown, the qualification of the remaining members (to be elected as the Directors are) being a residence in India for a certain number of years. "Such a body," it is added, "would be at once a council to the Indian Minister, and a check upon him; he would be then, as he is now, the depository of all substantial power, and he would have at his elbow a body of men competent to advise him upon all occasions."

The obvious objection to both these schemes is, that they would supersede the system of double government, which the writer we have just quoted, with perfect consistency, condemns in unmitigated terms; whereas Lord Ellenborough, strange to say, in his speech, admitted the necessity of retaining it, and considered it as "an absolutely settled point," that the patronage of India must be severed from the Crown. How could this be, if the patronage is dispensed by an Indian council, the chief member of which, the focus of all its power and influence, is appointed by the Crown?

FOREIGNERS, and those of our fellow-countrymen who are imperfectly acquainted with parliamentary tactics, must be somewhat puzzled by the history and adventures of the two Militia Bills in the House of Commons. The first broke up the late Ministry. The expediency of a militia was affirmed; but the Government having determined that, although not meant to be local, it should nevertheless be called a local militia, and the House of Commons venturing to be of a different opinion, the Minister, in a huff, threw up his office. The second bill, introduced by the new Ministry, who were in an acknowledged minority, and opposed by their predecessors,—some of whom discovered, in the short period since their quitting office, a militia of any kind to be highly objectionable,—was believed to be doomed to certain destruction. Strange to say, this bill has been read a second time by a large majority. The former measure was the ruin of its projectors; the latter has supplied its inventors with a small political capital, which, properly husbanded, may yield a good profit at the elections.

Although the different fate of these two measures may in some degree be accounted for by the repugnance felt to the ballot, which the last has eschewed; by the attractive novelty of a volunteer militia, and by other causes referable to their respective characters; there can be little doubt that party sympathies and antipathies have had much to do in bringing about the results. It may be invidious to scrutinize very rigidly the course which some of our leading statesmen have taken with respect to these two bills; but, if we give to Lord Palmerston credit for purely patriotic motives in attacking the first bill and defending the other, it is difficult to absolve the head of the late Government from the charge which has been made against him of being too passive to the influence of party feelings. Many of the objections he and some of his followers urged against the second bill were, as they were told in the House, equally applicable to the first. There are not a few members whom the mere suspicion of such disingenuous dealing with Ministers placed, by no fault of their own, in a situation of difficulty, would bias in a contrary direction to that intended; and, accordingly, the leader of the Whig party was deserted by some of his staunchest adherents.

It cannot be denied that the discretion and prudence which have hitherto characterized the proceedings of Lord Derby and his colleagues are producing a disposition on the part of the community to treat them with indulgence, and any decided indication of a factious spirit in their political opponents will give a stronger impulse to the current of public favour. That so old and skilful a tactician as Lord John Russell should not see the advantage he must afford his antagonists by an exhibition of spleen or jealousy is so improbable, that we are reluctant to attribute his proceeding on the militia question to any other source than an error in judgment. An error of some kind, and a grave one, it certainly was.

SCHEMES of government for existing societies are often rendered abortive by inattention to the political antecedents of those societies. The simple fact, that particular forms of rule, however excellent in the abstract, were opposed to the habits and associations of the people for whom they were devised, will sufficiently explain the utter failure of many attempts to make nations happy, by reducing to practice theories of constitutions from which every element of injustice or oppression was to be eliminated. It would be easy to adduce examples in corroboration of this general truth—a neighbouring country would furnish one of a decisive character. France, down to the year 1789, had been subject to an absolute monarch. Since that period, every variety of what is termed liberal government,—including a democracy, an aristocracy, and representative institutions, sub rege pio,—has been tried and failed, her only intervals of repose having been when she reverted to absolutism under Napoleon the Great, and again under Napoleon the Less.

There is nothing wonderful in this. If it requires a severe course of discipline, and perhaps some degree of coercion, to prevail upon large societies to relinquish trivial customs,—such as the wearing of beards,—to which they had been long habituated, how difficult must it be to eradicate old attachments to forms of government, though the offspring of mere habit!

This truth ought ever to be borne in mind when plans of government are under consideration for India. Throughout the East, from the earliest times, with hardly any known exception, government has been understood as the absolute sway of one. Revolutions have not been rare in these countries, but their object in every case was, not to alter the fundamental principle of rule, but only to change one despot for another. The very idea of a people governing themselves, by means of a chain of institutions, whereby the will of the nation acts upon the highest ruling authority, presents to an Asiatic mind an incongruity. All governments, the most despotic and the most military, as well as the free and popular, are founded upon opinion; it follows that, in the East, the opinion of the many, in whom the principle of force resides, is in favour of absolutism. Moreover, Oriental nations, like all others equally ignorant of political science, regard the duties and responsibilities of government as a burthen cast upon their rulers, in return for the tribute they exact, and would consider the transfer of any part of those duties, unaccompanied by some tangible advantage, not as a privilege, but as an incumbrance. In India, too, the establishment of castes has introduced a peculiar and inflexible law operating in the same direction, which superadds the sanction of religion to the obligations of civil society. Until, then, the people of India have made not only a vast progress in general knowledge, but shall have acquired a new form of civilization, and exchanged their slavish superstitions for at least more rational notions of religion, attempts to liberalize the system of government to which they are subjected would confer no boon upon them, whilst it would be hazardous to their rulers.

The government of British India must, therefore, remain as it is in theory, a mild despotism; but in practice all the benefits which liberal institutions are intended to secure to the ruled may be enjoyed under such a system. This, in short, should be the aim of all our ameliorations of the Indian administration,—not to endeavour to transplant political theories from Europe to the East, to which they are as little suited as European plants; but to afford the natives of the country all the practical and substantial good which it is the office of government to bestow, confirming the axiom of our great moral poet:—

Whate'er is best administer'd is best.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—Your correspondent, "An Old Mull," in his last letter, unaccountably misunderstanding my meaning when I hinted that "there was no occasion to specify names," has thrust before the public the names of certain gentlemen, as undoubted instances of the success of Englishmen in the study of Hindoostanee. If he imagines that I am of opinion that it is impossible for Englishmen to master the native languages of India, he labours under a strange misconception; indeed, so far was I from maintaining the impossibility of an Englishman obtaining proficiency in the native tongues, that I have never failed to admit that, in general, by his previous training, he is enabled to conquer the difficulties with amazing rapidity; and, moreover, I am not less aware than he is that there are English gentlemen, at present resident in India, who, by their talents and industry, would be an honour to any service, and who, by their success in the study of the various languages of the East, amply prove that their acquisition is not altogether unattainable. But while I most unequivocally admit the very high attainments in Oriental scholarship of a distinguished few, I cannot help deploring the general ignorance of Hindoostanee that prevails among the servants of the Hon. East-India Company. The very names that "Old Mull" has so unceremoniously dragged before the public remind me that their authority is altogether in favour of the views which I am advocating. For instance, the late Hon. John Shore, in his "Notes on Indian Affairs," complains of the deficiency of Englishmen in native languages, and urges the importance of their acquisition.

After all, the question at issue is not with respect to the attainments of a few great scholars, but of the fitness of the generality of Englishmen who go out from this country to discharge usefully for the Company in whose service they are engaged, and advantageously for the people among whom they are thrown, the various duties, civil and military, which are expected of them.

The "Old Mull" says, "My own acquirements have nothing to do with the question: who ever dreamed that they had? I should be sorry, indeed, to rest a question of such vital importance on such a weak and uncertain foundation as the attainments of any single individual. Still, it does seem somewhat extraordinary that, among such eminent Orientalists as are to be found in this country, there is not one who, with readiness and ease, can compose or make Persian letters and perwanahs; at least, so I have been informed."

In his first letter, the "Old Mull" asserts that the "Umlahs were very much at a loss, both in orthography and construction, when compelled to write roobakarees and depositions in Hindoostanee;" and yet in his last letter he is so eager to prove their proficiency, that he, contradicting himself, alleges that "one of them compiled a work in the Hindoostanee language, which was printed at the expense of Government."

It is true that hurchund is also a proper name in Hindee; but surely this does not negative the fact of supreme ignorance on the part of any one who could not distinguish between its use as a particle, and its use as a proper name, and is no less a strong proof of the mischief that must arise from such gross incompetency and ignorance.

The story about "great fool" is entirely away from the matter under discussion. If the "Old Mull" wishes to prove that Indians are not susceptible of the feeling of gratitude, he lays himself open to animadversion. How far he is a fair interpreter of the feelings of Indians, let the reader judge by the following extract from the speech of the Chairman of the Court of Directors, delivered only last December, at the close of Haileybury term:—"There are no people on the face of the earth more open to the influence of good example, and more susceptible of attachment and gratitude to those who treat them well, than the people of India." On the contrary, no people are more sensibly alive to bad treatment, and to feelings which it is calculated to generate; and probably, in the case cited by the "Old Mull," we would not be far wrong in ascribing the unusual conduct of the native to the arrogant and offensive bearing of one who thinks that money is to purchase immunity for or silence respecting previous ill-treatment.

With respect to the "Old Mull's" attempt to depreciate the efforts of native Indians to acquire a mastery of the English language, I will pass by whatever is personal in his remarks, merely thanking him for his good opinion, and refer him to an experienced observer of Indian society, to correct his old-fashioned notions on this subject. The Editor of the Friend of India thus writes:—"It is impossible to pass through the most plebeian lanes and alleys of Calcutta, without the most unequivocal proofs of the extent to which English has been domesticated within it. In one courtyard we meet, at early dawn, with a group of urchins spelling monosyllables; in another, with a lad repeating a demonstration of Euclid; in a third, with a student reading Bacon, Shakspeare, or Milton. One common spirit of ardour and emulation seems to animate the whole mass of native youth in the metropolis. If we go into native society, we find our tongue enjoying the same astonishing predominance,"—and so on.

If the "Old Mull" requires still more convincing proof of his inability to speak on native interests, and native industry and talent, let him peruse the following passage, extracted from the speech of the excellent Chairman of the Hon. East-India Company at the last half-yearly examination of the students at Haileybury College:—"Let me call your attention to the exertions making by the natives of India in the present day. European science and European literature are now studied in India, not only with diligence, but with success. The examinations on those subjects passed by native students show little, if any, inferiority in comparison with Europeans. They have become competitors with you in your own field of action, and on ground hitherto untrodden by them; and, unless you sustain the race with additional zeal and energy, they may pass you."

In conclusion, Mr. Editor, knowingly, advisedly, and disinterestedly, I repeat the assertion with which I set out at the commencement of this correspondence, that evils of the greatest magnitude have arisen, not only to individuals, but to the interests of Government, from ignorance of the current language in those to whose hands the administration of the affairs of one of the greatest countries on the face of the earth is entrusted. Enough of misfortune has resulted from this cause already to arouse the attention even of the authorities; but if a remedy is not speedily applied, the consequences may prove still more disastrous. I therefore humbly but earnestly solicit the attention of a paternal Government to this important subject, and I trust that you and your contemporaries will not be slow to move in a cause so intimately connected with the best interests of India, and the surest mode of governing it.

No one would think of appointing a foreigner,—say a German or Frenchman,—totally unacquainted with the language, to a post in England, when the principal duties called for would imply a constant intercourse with the people; yet this has been the practice, till lately, for years in India. Surely, it is not too much to demand of all who are candidates for the Company's service that they should, at least, have taken the first steps to acquaint themselves with the languages of the people among whom they are so soon to be thrown; to require, at least, that they should have made such a progress in the grammar and idiom as may ensure their after progress, and their readiness to comply in this respect with the conditions essential to their utility as officers.

Having myself had the benefits of a little English education, and considerable experience, as a moonshee, in the task of instructing European officers in the native languages, I am the more alive to the necessity of some change in the examinations of the civil and military servants of the Government, by which they would be at once prepared to perform respectably the functions expected of them; and though there may be a few who uphold the old system, I am happy to say that the views I have advocated have received the most cordial and energetic support from all those who aim at the nobler object of benefiting the people by elevating the character and usefulness of those whom Providence has destined to be their rulers.

Yours obediently,

A MAHOMEDAN MOONSHEE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—I must request you to allow me to correct an unintentional error into which I have been drawn by the report in your paper, of the 2nd April, of the debate at the East-India House on the 24th ult.

You represent Colonel Sykes as having read a statement of the distribution of patronage "from the year 1840 to 1843," and you afterwards use the phrases "in those four years," "in the same four years," "in those four years." I could not but rely, therefore, upon the correctness of a report where the same thing was four times stated in such very plain terms. My remarks were regulated accordingly. The passage in the postscript of my late pamphlet, from the words "That the particular return" down to "their respective statements" is strictly correct, with reference to your report. But Colonel Sykes has showed me the paper he read, and I find it to be from 1836 to 1843, for eight years, and thus embracing four years which were not included in the general statement read from the chair. The differences between the two returns are thus not mutually contradictory, but may be respectively consistent. Had I known that the one was only in part included in the other, the above passage would never have appeared.

Colonel S. has also assured me that he did not use the phrases subsequently quoted by me from your report, viz., "The appointments being still in excess of the Royal service, and very properly and very justly so," and "he was glad that they had met with reward, even though it had been to a larger extent than to the Company's own officers," but that what he really said was, that Her Majesty's service were equally entitled to their share, and he was glad that they had got it.

Yours obediently,
A PROPRIETOR.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—I observe in your last number an article headed, "The first running of a Railway Locomotive in India," and which gives the credit, due to the man who first introduced this prime agent of commerce and civilization, to Messrs. Faviell and Fowler. A letter is now lying before me from my friend and near relation Col. Cautley, the superintendent of the Doab Canal, dated December 11th, 1851, in which he says: "Lord Dalhousie spent three days on our works: I gave him a lift on a railroad." Now I cannot imagine that the chief engineer would have noticed this trip of the Governor-General had the locomotive been wanting. Palmarum qui meruit ferat: the man who first starts a railway engine in India will in after-times be named amongst the chief benefactors of that country, and will take his place in equal honour with her warriors and statesmen; and, should my impression prove correct, I am most anxious that that honour should be reaped by one of India's most indefatigable, zealous, and scientific servants.

I am, Sir, your very obedient Servant,

ROBT. CRAWFORD.

P.S. The date of the Byculia experiment is 23rd of February, 1852: Lord Dalhousie was at Roo:kee in November, 1851.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

The half-yearly meeting of this company was held on the 28th of April, at the office, New Broad-street; Mr. W. J. Hamilton in the chair.

The Secretary read the report, of which the following is an abstract:—"The directors state that the works of the railway have been making satisfactory progress. The chief resident engineer (Mr. James Berkley) reports that the cuttings and embankments, the masonry at several points, and the tunnels, are all proceeding to his entire satisfaction. The native labourers adapt themselves with facility to the novel and difficult work of tunnelling. The contractors engaged upon the section between Bombay and Tannah (Messrs. Faviell and Fowler) have had a locomotive engine upon the line, employed in ballasting, since February, which has been an object of great attraction in Bombay, and will, it may be presumed, lessen, if not remove, any risks of accident which might otherwise be entertained upon the first running of the trains. The directors have entered into contracts in England for a supply of locomotive engines, passenger trains, and the various articles of rolling stock and materials necessary for working the railway, of which the greatest part are completed, and many are already shipped for Bombay. The engineering officers of the company have been for some time engaged upon the surveys of the extension of the railway from Callian across the Ghauts into the interior of the country. One set of surveyors are employed upon the Bhoze Ghaut and its approaches along the Oolassa valley, and another set upon the Thull Ghaut district up the valley of the river Basta. The surveys by the Malsej Ghaut were previously executed. The directors therefore will, ere long, be enabled to judge of the relative merits of these three routes. Simultaneously with the surveys first mentioned, measures have been taken for ascertaining the nature and present amount of the traffic upon these great thoroughfares, so that the commercial merits of the several routes may be accurately balanced before the final decision be given as to the line to be adopted. The directors have under consideration the question of laying down the electric telegraph along the line of railway; and the Government of India have been applied to for the results of experience derived from working the telegraph in the Bengal presidency, which may guide the Board in any particulars that may be peculiar to the climate. The capital account to the 31st of December last shows that 408,829l. had been received, including 325,455l. in England and 83,373l. in Bombay; and 126,677l. expended, including 87,497l. expended in England and 39,179l. in Bombay, leaving a balance in hand of 282,152l. The interest account shows that 22,441l. had been received from November, 1849, to December, 1851, and 99,000l. paid to the shareholders, leaving a balance in hand of 7,541l.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report and accounts, said they expected, from recent information they had received, that the first section of the line from Bombay to Tannah would be opened for traffic about the end of the present year. The engines, carriages, and other matters connected with the working stock for the line were now being shipped at Liverpool, and would leave this country next month. They would probably arrive at their destination next September, and would be ready for the line when the permanent way was in a fit state to receive them. The works on the section beyond Tannah towards Callian were progressing satisfactorily, and they had reason to expect that this section would be ready for opening a few months after the opening of the portion of the line from Bombay to Tannah. The plans and sections for the remaining portion of the line to Callian had been prepared, and the works would be let by public tender, on the same principle as those were on the first section of the railway. With regard to the extension of the line beyond Callian, it was of considerable importance to them, as upon the judicious extension of the line into the interior of the Deccan depended the traffic they had a right to expect on the portion of the undertaking now in course of construction. There was no doubt they would have to encounter some heavy gradients in passing the mountain range. To the south of the Malsej Ghaut, and between it and the Thull Ghaut, it was believed that satisfactory gradients could be obtained between 200 and 300 feet below the level of the Malsej Ghaut. But, if the country at the other side should not be favourable to that route, there would, of course, be no advantage from the lower level. There were many points to be considered before deciding upon the route for their extension beyond Callian. In their examination of the country for the proposed line they were not unmindful of the traffic, and in the course of their inquiries they found that it far exceeded in quantity any expectation that had been hitherto held out with respect to it. He stated that two years had elapsed since they commenced the first section of the line between Bombay and Tannah, a distance of 20 miles; and that various causes of delay, both at home and in India, had retarded their operations. There was one advantage from this delay, that no step had been taken without the sanction of the Government and the East India Company. The interests of the shareholders were thus secured, and their money was not squandered in any way whatever. The accounts would show that the company were in a satisfactory position, and the shareholders would perceive that the interest account was now given with the capital account, in accordance with a request expressed at a former meeting. Mr. Melvill, the representative of the East-India Company at the board, had given them every assistance in his power, and was most indefatigable in promoting the interests of the company.

The report was unanimously adopted.

Mr. Simms showed that the extension of railways in India would not only develop the vast resources of that country, but handsomely repay those engaged in the enterprise.

Mr. W. J. Hamilton, deputy-chairman, Mr. Melvill Wilson, and Mr. Nicholson (of London), and Mr. C. Jamsetjee and Mr. J. Sunkersett (of Bombay), were re-elected directors; and Mr. R. Keating, M.P., the retiring auditor, was re-elected.

SIR JAMES BROOKE.

On the 30th of April, a public dinner was given to Sir James Brooke at the London Tavern, at which more than 240 of his friends were present. Mr. Crawford presided; and among the company were, Baron Alderson, Vice-Admiral Sir G. Cockburn, Hon. Capt. Keppel, Right Hon. R. A. Christopher, M.P., Mr. Henry Drummond, M.P., the Governor of the Bank of England, Mr. Newdegate, M.P., Capt. D. Hay, Mr. W. B. Bayley, Sir R. Jenkins, Mr. J. H. Crawford, Mr. H. T. Prinsep, Admiral Sir C. Adam, Lieut.-gen. Sir J. L. Lushington, Admiral Sir James Gordon, Admiral Renton Sharpe, Capt. Farquhar, Mr. Headlam, M.P., Mr. Plowden, M.P., Mr. Astell, M.P., &c.

After the usual loyal toasts, "The Navy and Army" was proposed, and responded to by Admiral Sir C. Adam and Sir J. L. Lushington. The former said that piracy was a stain upon the East, and there was no means of putting an end to except it in the manner adopted by his friend Sir James Brooke. He regretted the loss of life; but that was inevitable.

The Chairman, in proposing "The health of Sir James Brooke," said they were met to manifest the high esteem they entertained for the services rendered by him to the influence of this country over the whole world, and to the spread of civilization. He protested against the unmerited and calumnious recital which Sir James had received, and hoped that the company would express their generous confidence in the part he was performing. He saw at that table members of the House of Commons, a distinguished ornament of the bench, and representatives of every class in commerce and in politics; and he trusted that after such a demonstration, no more would be heard of those attacks upon their honoured guest's character, which arose from jealous disappointment on the part of some, and from a love of grievance-mongering on the part of others. It was most impolitic that officers intrusted with highly important duties in remote parts of the globe should in the House of Commons be subjected to attacks founded only on personal animosities. There were few present who had not made themselves acquainted with Sir James Brooke's extraordinary career; and when the present state of Borneo was contrasted with what it was a few years ago, it was impossible to deny to Sir James the greatest credit for his immense tact in dealing with the circumstances in which he found himself placed there. Nothing was required now beyond a strong manifestation of public feeling in favour of Sir James Brooke, in order that he might return to Borneo, and carry out all those objects that were expected of him.

Sir James replied to the toast at great length and with an impressiveness and an appeal to facts which produced a great impression upon the company. He indignantly repudiated the calumnies which had been heaped upon him, reaching from murder to merchandise. He delicately alluded to the heavy pecuniary sacrifice which his position in Borneo had brought upon him, and vindicated the policy he had pursued, not only with reference to piracy, but also in the internal administration of his own government.

Baron Alderson, in responding to the toast of "The Bench and the Bar," said the members of the bench, who administered justice between man and man, did no more than their position required when they acquitted Sir James Brooke of criminality. The company had met to do justice to a man of great worth and determined philanthropy, from whom he only differed because of the sorrow felt by him that he had not the approbation of all mankind. The greatest benefactors of the human race had always been abused, and Sir James's slanderers would yet be absorbed in the oblivion of their own insignificance. This might not take place in his lifetime, but he would have the approbation, even then, of all reasonable men, and he hoped, of that Almighty God, who never neglected the cause of the innocent. Mr. Montague Chambers, Q.C., Mr. Henry Drummond, M.P., and Mr. Headlam, M.P., were among the other speakers of the evening, which passed off most agreeably.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS, APRIL 23.

Jotee Persaud.—Lord Broughton moved for copies of the correspondence between the Court of East-India Directors and the Government of India relative to the trial of Jotee Persaud, and to the conduct of certain members of the Indian service connected with that proceeding. During the last year, charges were made against certain officers connected with the civil service in India relative to their conduct towards Jotee Persaud. He then, being at the head of the Board of Control, promised the noble earl (Ellenborough), who brought the subject forward, that an inquiry should be instituted, and that the Governor-General of India should investigate the truth of the charges. The papers relating to those charges had been received at the East-India House; and, considering the charges made and the authority from which they emanated, it was only fair and just that those papers should be laid before Parliament.

After a few words from the Earl of Ellenborough and the Earl of Derby, who saw no objection to the production of the papers, the motion was agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, APRIL 19.

Committee on East-India Affairs.—Mr. Herries moved the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the operation of the Act 3 & 4 Will. IV., c. 85, for the better government of India, and to report their observations. He reminded the House that from 1764 there had been a gradual tendency to the abolition of the exclusive rights and privileges of the East-India Company; that in 1813, private traders were admitted to compete with the Company in the commerce of India, and that in 1833, the Company was not only divested of its exclusive rights of trading, but inhibited from trading at all, whilst the Act, then passed, the operation of which he now proposed to subject to inquiry, took away from the Company all their territorial rights as proprietors of the soil, which were made over to the Crown, and their commercial assets were disposed of in the manner provided by that Act. In return for this immense sacrifice, the stock of the Company, amounting to 6,000,000*l.*, was not to be subject to redemption until 1874, provided, however, that if, during that forty years, the agency of the Company in the government of India should be withdrawn from them, they would be entitled to demand the redemption of their stock at the rate of 200*l.* for every 100*l.* stock. The Company also retained the entire patronage of India, which had always belonged to them as incident to their territorial rights, except that they had not the appointment of the Governors and Commanders-in-Chief. On the other hand, the Crown had the power of revoking all appointments; but the Company possessed the right of revoking that of the Governor-General of India without the consent of the Crown. In the year 1834 the existing system would cease with the Act of 1833, and Parliament had now three courses open to it—first, to suffer the Act to expire; second, to renew the Act without further inquiry; and third, to institute the examination he now suggested before it came to any final determination. The late Government had resolved to propose the appointment of committees in both Houses; and after the most mature consideration, the present Government had thought this the course most befitting the importance of the subject. It was natural to inquire, he observed, what had appeared to have been the effect of the changes introduced in 1833, during the last twenty years, touching the welfare and progress of our Indian empire—not merely whether the revenues had prospered, but whether the administration, under the existing management, had, in other respects, contributed to the well-being of the people. The total gross revenue had increased from 18,407,000*l.* in 1834, to 24,579,000*l.* in the present year, showing an augmentation of 6,000,000*l.* in less than twenty years. The charges, however, had increased from 18,602,000 in 1834, to 25,257,000 in 1851, so that in the last year there was a deficiency of 678,000*l.* How had this occurred? The wars in which British India had been involved, in Afghanistan, in Scinde, and in the Punjab, had swallowed up no less than 36,000,000*l.* But when he looked at the Indian debt, he found that the addition had been only 20,000,000*l.*; it followed, therefore, that, so buoyant had been the Indian revenues, that they must have furnished 16,000,000*l.* towards the extraordinary war expenditure. The interest of the debt had increased from 1,774,000 in 1834, to 2,201,000 in 1850. It might be said that this large revenue extracted from the country had tended to exhaust its resources. There was no better way of meeting this allegation than by showing the progress of Indian commerce; and it appeared that the amount of the exports and imports, and that of the tonnage entered inwards and outwards, had more than doubled in the last twenty years. In 1834 the imports were 6,154,000*l.* in value; in 1848-9 they had increased to 12,549,000*l.* The exports stood, in 1834, at 8,000,000*l.*, while in 1848 they amounted to 18,000,000*l.* While adverting to the wars and to the outlay occasioned by them, it was also right to consider the effect of those wars in the addition of territory and population. He found that in the last twenty years there had been added to our Indian possessions no less than 165,000 square miles, and about 9,000,000 of population. But it was not merely in the augmentation of our Indian possessions that a favourable difference was to be found between the condition of India at the present moment and at the commencement of the period which he had alluded to. At no former period, he thought, were the prospects of India so favourable as at the present moment. There was another point to which all persons interested in the prosperity of India must look with peculiar anxiety, and which occupied the minds of all persons of intelligence who paid regard to the affairs of our Indian empire. It had been suggested that we were ruling India with a foreign hand, and excluding from all share in the administration of their own affairs the natives of that country. Now, he had taken some pains to ascertain what progress had been made in introducing natives into offices of administration, and he confessed that the result of his inquiry had given him satisfaction. He had found a persevering determination on the part of the Indian Government to promote, by all means, the employment of natives in posts of importance; and, above all, to promote their education, so as to make them fit for such duties. There was another circumstance of infinite importance in reference to the administration of justice in India. A vast improvement in that most important branch of public administration had been effected in India; a native judicial force had been constituted, and invested with powers to a degree and extent wholly unknown previous to the period to which he was adverting; and justice was administered mainly in India by natives, not only between natives and natives, but in civil causes between natives and Europeans. From these civil courts the appeals only amounted to fifteen per cent., and the reversals of sentence did not exceed four per cent. Another subject of great importance was the state of education in India, and the means adopted to promote it under the existing form of government. In 1823 the only native educational establishments founded by the British Government were the Mahomedan College, Calcutta, and Sanscrit College, Benares. In 1835 there were fourteen. There were now in Bengal and the North-Western Provinces above forty. In 1835 the great change was adopted of substituting the English for the Oriental system of education; and in the Report of the Council of Education for 1819, Mr. Bethune said: "There is no institution in England where the published answers of the students are subjected to so strict and severe a test. I have no hesitation in saying, that every succeeding examination that I witness, increases my admiration of the acuteness and talent, literary and scientific, which are evinced by the young men of this country." In the Elphinstone Institution of Bombay the course of study was stated to be "equal in extent to a course for a degree in an English university." All that indicated a great desire and successful endeavour on the part of Government to promote an object which the British Parliament must always have at heart; and since he had occupied the office he now held it had come to his knowledge that colleges had been instituted for the instruction of the natives, more especially in geology, civil engineering, and mathematics, and that the natives had evinced great anxiety to make themselves acquainted with those sciences. This brought him to make a few observations on the benefits being conferred on the Indian territory through the instrumentality of the East-India Company. In adverting to the financial part of the question he would observe, that if he could show that the whole of the deficiency of the revenue was absorbed in outlays on public works of permanent utility, then it would be admitted that the present posture of Indian affairs was not a matter of regret. The interest of the Indian debt amounted to about 2,000,000*l.*; and he held in his hand a paper showing an amount of outlay on canals, roads, and tanks, exceeding the sum of 678,000*l.*, which he had stated as the apparent deficiency. "Public Works.—Grand trunk-road, Calcutta to Delhi, to be continued to Lahore and Peshawur, complete to Kurnool, north of Delhi, 965 miles, metalled throughout; cost, 1,000*l.* per mile; total cost, about 1,500,000*l.* sterling. Calcutta and Bombay mail-road, about 1,000 miles, will cost 500,000*l.* Bombay and Agra road, 734 miles, cost about 350*l.* per mile. Ganges Canal, for irrigation of lands between the Ganges and Jumna, from Hurdwar to Alleghur, thence to Cawnpore and Humaspore; whole length, 765 miles; cost, about 1,500,000*l.* Railways.—Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay." It was also satisfactory to see what had been done of late years in respect to the ecclesiastical establishment in India. In the year 1812 there were only 14 chaplains at Bengal, 12 at Madras, and 5 at Bombay. In 1813 a Bishop of Calcutta and three archdeacons for the presidency were appointed; in 1832 there were in Bengal 37 chaplains, in Madras 23, and in Bombay 15; under the Act of 1833 the archdeacons ceased, and two additional bishops were appointed, and now there were 3 bishops and 68 chaplains in Bengal, 34 in Madras, and 28 in Bombay—making 3 bishops and 130 chaplains altogether, in addition to 6 of the Scotch church. But there was another subject to which he must advert, that of the patronage in the hands of the East-India Company. When they considered the advantage that was obtained from the part that Company performed in the administration of the affairs of India, it did not seem a very great boon to give them the benefit of that patronage. It had been often said that they administered it without reference to the interests of the Government of India. Now upon looking into the subject, he found that the whole patronage which had been administered by them during the last six years was as follows:—in 1845, 28 writers, 280 cadets, and 56 surgeons; in 1846, 28 writers, 280 cadets, 28 surgeons; in 1847, 28 writers, 252 cadets, 56 surgeons; in 1848, 28 writers, 196 cadets; in 1849, 28 writers, 252 cadets, and 28 surgeons; and in 1850, 56 writers, 234 cadets, and 56 surgeons; the reason of the large addition to the number of writers being the annexation of the territory of the Punjab to the empire of India; and out of 146 cadets now at Addiscombe, 57 were sons of Indian servants; and out of 2,622 appointments that had been made between 1840 and 1851, he found that 1,100 had been given to sons of Indian servants, exhibiting therefore something the reverse of that partiality with which the Company had been charged. But he must say a word on the nature of the agency which was exercised by the East-India Company in the administration of Indian affairs. It was quite true that, by the terms of the law, Her Majesty's Government had complete control over the political interests of the empire of India; the Company must obey the directions of the Government; and it was Her Majesty's Government, therefore, who were responsible for the good or ill of the administration of the Indian empire, the Company being only their agents for carrying into effect the directions of the Government. But it would be a great mistake to suppose that therefore the Company, on its present footing, had nothing more than a mere agency to perform, that their power was simply that of clerks of a public office, obeying the directions they received from the Government. It was by its position so circumstanced as to be enabled to advise the Government, occasionally to give information, and to acquire it in various ways, not merely by correspondence, but also by confrontation; so that, apart from their ministerial duties, there existed a council to advise, communicate, and inform. He knew that whatever was determined on must be determined on the responsibility of himself and those with whom he acted; but he must say that, from the short experience he had had of Indian affairs, he saw the great advantage of that species of conservative, deliberative, and confidential agency that existed between the Company and Her Majesty's Government, and that for the good government of India it was of infinite importance. It would be the duty of the committee to make the most searching inquiry into the expediency of retaining this agency, which had worked well for the last twenty years. If found to be inexpedient, it would be for the wisdom of Parliament to devise some other system.

Mr. Anstey moved, by way of amendment, in addition to the motion, that an address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that commissioners be sent into British India, instructed to prosecute inquiries and report the evidence, with their observations. He proposed this commission because, even if the picture drawn by Mr. Herries had been as correct as it was flattering, the inquiry proposed by him could not be complete unless information was obtained from the natives of India, which was impracticable without local inquiry. Mr. Anstey entered at great length into the causes of what he considered to be the mis-government of India, expatiating upon the wretchedness of its population, the salt and opium monopolies, the impolicy of the augmentations of territory, and of the wars arising therefrom, and in the course of his strictures animadverted in strong terms upon the case of Colonel Outram.

Mr. Baillie differed from Mr. Anstey as to the best means of obtaining the required information, and as to the expediency of a royal commission to inquire into the grievances of the natives, who, it appeared from a memorial of the British Indian Association (composed of natives of India), did not desire such a mode of inquiry. The question was now a more simple one than formerly; it was merely whether the powers given to the East-India Company by the Act of 1833 should be continued or curtailed. He would not enter on the question relating to the mode in which the patronage was distributed. He thought it difficult to devise means of distributing it not liable to abuse. If it were in the hands of the Government it might be used for party purposes. The House was not yet in possession of the facts of the case of Colonel Outram.

Sir T. E. Colebrooke expressed his satisfaction at the statement made by Mr. Herries as to the employment of the natives of India, and condemned the amendment as casting a wholesale censure upon the Government of India. The mutual check afforded by the existing double government ought, in his opinion, to be retained. Anomalous as the Government of India undoubtedly was, yet he believed that the great success which had attended it was entirely owing to that Government having been administered by a body of men whose independence could not be impeached.

Mr. Hardings expressed his satisfaction that Her Majesty's Government had determined upon dealing with this great question in a spirit of fair inquiry, because he believed the Court of Directors sought such an inquiry, and because it would tend, he was confident, to prove that they had not neglected the interests of the 150,000,000 of people committed to their charge. Mr. Anstey had laid great stress on the hardship and inequality of the land-tax; but it must be remembered that that is a tax to which the natives of India have been accustomed from time immemorial, both under a Hindoo and Mahomedan dynasty, and when fairly assessed does not press with such great severity upon the population at large. Mr. Anstey had also laid great stress upon the abject poverty of the natives in India; but, from what he had seen in that country, he was disposed to think that his statement was somewhat exaggerated. In Oude, in Cashmere, and in the Nizam's territory, rack-rents and extortion prevail, and the condition of the natives generally who enjoy British protection exhibits a very strong contrast as compared with the condition of those who are under native governments.

Mr. Hume was glad to find the present Government had determined not to remove the Court of Directors and take the government of India into their own hands, for no policy could be more fatal or ruinous. He admitted the great poverty of India, but there was great poverty in England, and Ireland also, and it ought not to be attributed to the Government. Instead of comparing India with England, they should compare it with their colonies, and he contended that India was better off and more prosperous than any of our colonies. The ryots in those parts under the British rule might be at once known from their superior comfort from the ryots under native princes; and he believed the development of the free-trade policy which had produced such great results to this country, would be equally advantageous to India. The evils which had oppressed India were not attributable to the Court of Directors, but to the Ministry at home. So far from reducing the power of the Court of Directors, under an improved constitution, it should be enlarged, so as to control the Minister of the day, who could now plunge India into war without any check on the part of the Directors. He advised Mr. Anstey to withdraw his amendment, which was impracticable.

Sir J. W. Hogg entirely concurred with Mr. Baillie, that it would be much better to postpone the discussion till the committee had made inquiries, and the House was in possession of full information. Speaking for himself and the great Company he had the honour to represent, he could only say their sole and most anxious desire was, that the most full and ample information should be laid before the House and the country; and with regard to the result of any inquiry that could be made, they had only one wish—that it might be such as would tend most to the welfare of India, and to the advancement and prosperity of its inhabitants. Sir James complained of the course pursued by Mr. Anstey, especially with reference to the case of Colonel Outram, which he had argued upon ex parte statements. He described, with more precision than Mr. Herries had done, the respective duties of the Board of Control and the Court of Directors. With respect to the patronage, it would be for the committee to determine whether it had been fairly administered. There was abuse everywhere, but a greater abuse there could not be than for a man to purchase votes for a seat in the direction by promises of patronage. In the whole course of his canvass, no voter, either directly or indirectly, had intimated to him even a hope that he would remember him, except in one case, and the consequence was, that he left the individual's room and declined his support. As to the judicial business of India, he would give the actual facts from a return made, which would, no doubt, surprise the House. Speaking of the whole of India, he found that in 1849 there were disposed of, as original suits, 258,574 cases. Of that number 256,151, or 99 per cent., were disposed of by native judicial officers, and by European judges 2,423, or only 1 per cent. It might perhaps be said that natives were intrusted with original but not with appellate jurisdiction. In the same year, the whole suits of India, including appeals, were 340,918, of which suits 319,554, or 93 per cent., were disposed of by natives, and 21,364, or 6 and a fraction per cent., by European judges. The only return relating to appeals was from the North-Western Provinces, where the appeals were 15 per cent., and the reversals only 4 per cent.

Sir R. Inglis believed that, out of 30 Directors of the Company, 21 carried to that Court the experience they had derived in the financial, military, civil, and maritime service of the Company. If it were said that some of the members of that Court had not been in India, it might be replied that it was necessary to have an English feeling and English habits of business in that Court, and that it was not desirable that the members should be exclusively taken from persons who had served in India. The tables which had been adduced, of the distribution of patronage, sufficiently refuted any charge of a corrupt or unworthy exercise of it on the part of the Directors. As to concentrating that patronage in the hands of the Ministers, it would be putting a temptation in their way that neither their own virtue nor their regard for the constitution of the country would lead them to accept. With regard to the recall of Lord Ellenborough, he believed it was signed by men who had held the highest situations in the service of India, and this act on their part had been approved by the concurrent opinion of those best capable of forming an opinion in England. He should be sorry that the power of recall should be taken from the Court of Directors.

Lord John Russell, assuming that it was intended that the Government should propose and Parliament decide upon the plan for the future government of India, thought that the appointment of a committee would be useful in the way of collecting information and making suggestions respecting that vast question. He was satisfied with the experience we had had from 1833, of the operation of the Act now to be inquired into. Our greatest care should be to provide for the welfare of the millions submitted to us, and to secure to them such advantages as they either have not had at all, or only imperfectly, in their former state. In the first place, our great care ought to be to guard them from the ravages of civil war; in the second place, with our knowledge of the true principles of justice, to give them an impartial administration of justice; in the next place, we ought to place at their disposal that great ability which this country affords so abundantly for political administration; lastly, we ought to provide for that which is perhaps the most essential of all, the education and improvement of the people of India. He believed that in all these respects, if we had not fully and completely, still in a great degree, under the Act under consideration, we had performed our duty to the people of that country. Under our sway the administration of justice has been more impartial, and more pure than it was ever known to be before among the population of this vast country; men of the greatest ability have gone from this country, either as Governors-General or filling the subordinate stations held by Sir T. Munro and Mr. Elphinstone; there had been lately introduced those wholesome measures of instruction and that practical teaching of the arts of government and the means of elevating the character of the people from which at the present time India has derived the greatest advantages. If we had done this, and if, without interfering with the religious feelings of the people, we had taken care that those who belong to the European race should likewise have the means of spiritual instruction and enlightenment, we have done much, whatever the origin of our power, to justify ourselves in the continuance of that power and in maintaining our rule over the people of India. When he compared that rule with that of other eastern nations—Turkey or Persia—it is impossible not to see that there are in these countries abuses in the administration, corruption in the offices of government, and civil wars and rebellion, from which the people of India are in a great degree free by that rule which we had established over them. He could not, therefore, but feel, with regard to the Act of 1833, that although suggestions may be made for improvement in particular parts, and although advantages have not been derived from that Act which by some change in its provisions may be derived, yet still that the great outlines of that Act ought to be maintained. With respect to the construction of the machine of government, though theoretically it was open to objection, he believed it had worked usefully for the people of India; whilst questions of peace and war, which were not unconnected with European interests, were and should be left to the discretion of the Ministers of the Crown, with regard to matters of finance, legislation, and revenue, the Court of Directors should offer their suggestions, the Board of Control having the power of approving or objecting. The question of patronage, he agreed, affected the Constitution of the country, which might be endangered by vesting it in a Minister of the Crown, and he thought it was a most fortunate circumstance that a mode of government had been found which, whilst it provided for the good administration of India, placed the sovereignty of that vast empire under the Crown of the United Kingdom without injury to the working of the Constitution.

Mr. Goulburn noticed an omission in the speech of Mr. Herries of one branch of the inquiry, namely, the result of the system introduced in 1833, for the religious instruction of the people of India; whether the measure had led to the favourable results which had been anticipated, and how far it had been made instrumental to the extension of Christianity. India, he considered, had been given to us upon the solemn condition of taking all means that prudence would sanction to extend over that continent the knowledge of truths which we believed essential to our own happiness.

Mr. Mangles said, if the Government undertook to attempt the conversion of the people of India, the only effect would be to raise up a great body of hypocrites, seeking to curry favour by the simulated adoption of Christianity.

The amendment was negatived, and the original motion agreed to.

The following members have since been nominated to form the committee:—Mr. Herries, Mr. Disraeli, Lord John Russell, Mr. Baring, Sir Charles Wood, Mr. Baillie, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Newdegate, Mr. Labouchere, Sir James Graham, Mr. Alderman Thompson, Sir William Molesworth, Sir Robert Inglis, Viscount Jocelyn, Viscount Mahon, Mr. Cobden, Mr. Hardinge, Mr. Milner Gibson, Sir James E. Tennent, Mr. Mangles, Sir James Hogg, Mr. Hume, Mr. Banks, Mr. Vernon Smith, Mr. Robert Hildyard, Mr. James Wilson, Mr. Moore, Sir E. Colebrooke, Mr. Plowden, Mr. Spooner, and Mr. Cardwell.

The Hon. William Henry Dalziel Melville, July 9, 1845	John Shepherd, Esq., June 17, 1835

THE DIRECTOR.—On the 14th of April, a ballot was taken at the East-India House for the election of six Directors, in the room of Henry Alexander, Esq., Lieut. General James Caulfield, C.B., the Hon. William Henry Leslie Melville, Major James Oliphant, Henry Thoby Prinsep, Esq., and John Shepherd, Esq., who go out by rotation. The scrutineers reported that the election had fallen on William Butterworth Bayley, Esq., Russell Ellice, Esq., Sir Richard Jenkins, G.C.B., Ross Donnelly Mangles, Esq., M.P., John Masterman, Esq., M.P., and Major John Arthur Moore. A Court of Directors was also held at the East-India House, when the thanks of the Court were voted unanimously to John Shepherd, Esq., Chairman, and Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., M.P., Deputy Chairman, for their great application and attention to the affairs of the East-India Company during the past year. At a Court of Directors held on the following day, Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., M.P., was chosen chairman, and Russell Ellice, Esq., deputy-chairman, for the year ensuing.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.—The Earl of Ellenborough has given notice of the following motion in the House of Lords (no day named):—

To move that it is expedient to amend the law relating to the administration of Indian affairs, as follows:—

1. That, from and after the 30th day of April, 1854, the connection between the East-India Company and the Government of India do cease and determine.

2. That provision be made for the due transmission from India of the requisite funds to meet the dividends due on East-India Stock, and the interest on East-India Bonds, and for the payment of such dividends and interest at the Bank of England on the usual days.

3. That the powers now vested in the Commissioners for the Affairs of India and in the Directors of the East-India Company, in regard to the government of India, be transferred respectively to a President of the Indian Council, appointed by the Crown, and to the members of the Indian Council elected as hereinafter-mentioned.

4. That the persons qualified to vote at the election of Directors of the East-India Company, and all such persons as shall have actually served ten years in India as judges in the supreme courts, or as bishops, or in the discharge of any ecclesiastical functions, or in any civil employment under the Government of India, or as commissioned officers of the Royal or native army, or of the Indian Navy, shall be entitled to vote at the election of members of the Indian Council, provided that no vote at any such election shall be given by proxy, and that no person shall have more than one vote, and that every person claiming to vote shall have been duly registered as a voter thirty days before the election.

5. That the Indian Council shall consist of twelve members elected for five years, and re-eligible; and that nine of such members shall be persons qualified to vote at the election of such council by reason of actual service in India.

6. That the President of the Indian Council shall have control over all payments made from the Home Treasury.

7. That an auditor of Indian accounts be appointed by the Crown.

8. That one-fourth of all cadetships and writerships be sold at a fixed price; the cadetships at the discretion of the Commander-in-Chief of Her Majesty's forces, and the writerships at the discretion of the President of the Indian Council.

9. That the Commander-in-Chief of the Army in India, and of the native army of each presidency, shall be appointed by the Crown, and that such Commander-in-Chief shall be "ex-officio" a member of council at the presidency whereof he shall command the army.

10. That the Crown shall from time to time fix the number of the Royal troops it may be deemed expedient to employ in India, and that the whole charge of all such Royal troops shall be borne by the revenue of India.

11. That the appointments of members of the Council of India, and of the councils of the several presidencies, be subject to approval by the Crown.

12. That the Crown alone shall have the power of removing from office the Governor-General, and the governors of the several presidencies, and the members of the Council of India, and of the several other councils.

13. That one member be selected from the presidency of Madras, and one member be selected from the presidency of Bombay, shall be added to the Council of India.

14. That provision be made for defining the respective powers of the Governor-General, and of the Council of India when the Governor-General shall deem it expedient to be absent from the council.

15. That provision be made for removing all doubt as to the power of the Governor-General to overrule the council whenever he may deem it expedient.

16. That all the appointments in India be made by the Governor-General and the governors of the several presidencies; and that the Indian Council shall have power to cancel any appointment, and to direct the re-appointment of any person removed without sufficient cause.

17. That the Governor-General and the governors of the several presidencies shall have the power of appointing military officers to situations in the civil service, but the special grounds of any such appointment shall in each case be recorded, and forthwith reported to the Indian Council; and at the expiration of one year every officer holding such appointment shall be deemed to have retired from the military service.

18. That the provisional appointment of a Governor-General be deposited with the Council of India in a sealed packet, to be opened only in the event of the death, resignation, or departure of the Governor-General with the intention of leaving India.

19. That all orders addressed to India be signed by the President of the Indian Council, and that the Government of India be conducted in the name of the Crown.

THE LEVEE.—Her Majesty held a levee on the 21st April, the presentations at which included the following:—

Lieut. C. J. M. S. Adams.
Lieut. Gen. Briggs.
Lieut. W. R. Broome.
Cornet G. Bushby.
Dr. Cahill.
Col. Deriazzy.
Lieut. English.
Lieut. T. T. Haggard,
Capt. E. Harvey.
Lieut. Henderson.
Lieut. G. Holland.
Major Lloyd.
Capt. B. W. Ramsay.
Lieut. R. S. C. Sillery.
Major S. J. Stevens.
Capt. R. L. Taylor.
Capt. C. T. Trower.
Capt. M. Wood.
Physician-General Wylie.

COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF IN BOMBAY.—It is understood that Lieut. General Lord Frederick Fitzclarence, G.C.H., will succeed Lieut. General Sir John Grey, K.C.B., as Commander-in-Chief in Bombay.

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH AUSTRALIA.—The Report of the directors of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, made at the meeting on the 15th April, states that, along with the Pacific Steam Company and the Panama Railway Company, the directors will soon submit a project for steam conveyance between Panama, New Zealand, and Australia.

QUICK PASSAGE FROM CHINA.—A large American clipper-built ship, named the Witch of the Wave, has arrived in the East-India Docks, Blackwall, from Canton, having made one of the most rapid voyages on record. She has brought one of the most valuable cargoes of tea that, perhaps, ever entered the port of London, having on board 19,000 chests of the choicest quality. She is nearly 1,400 tons burden, and was built at Salem, near New York, last year. She proceeded to California, thence to Hong-Kong, and sailed from Whampoa on the 5th of January; made the passage to Java-head in 7 days and 12 hours, then had the wind W.S.W. to N.W. for several days, with light trade-wind, and made the Cape in 29 days. She then encountered strong easterly winds from the Western Islands, and took a pilot off Dungeness on the 4th of April, making a passage from China to the Downs in 90 days, a trip surpassing the celebrated runs of the Oriental and Surprise American clippers. Had she not encountered the strong easterly winds up Channel, she would have accomplished the voyage several days earlier. As it was, she was only four days beating up from the chops of the Channel to reaching the river, while some of our large vessels were nearly a fortnight doing the distance. Her bows are similar to those of a large-size cutter yacht. It will be seen that she sailed round the world in ten months and a-half, including loading and discharging at the above ports. The greatest distance she ran in 24 hours on the voyage to London was 338 miles.

MR. SHEPHERD, the late Chairman of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, has presented an Addiscombe appointment (and since exchanged it for a direct one) to Alexander Stewart, only son of the late Lieut. Charles Stewart, of the Bengal Horse Artillery, who fell on the 13th of January, 1842, during the retreat from Cabul. Mr. Stewart is the grandson of the late Major-General Sir Alexander Macleod, who was in command of the artillery at the successful siege of Bhurtpore, in 1826.

THE SPECIE shipped by the Peninsular and Oriental steamer Ripon amounts to 48,200*l.*, of which 18,300*l.* is gold for Alexandria, Ceylon, and Madras, and 29,900*l.* silver for Bombay, Calcutta, and Hong Kong.

INDIAN LAW.—We understand that Mr. Morley will shortly publish a new volume of his Analytical Digest of Indian Cases, continuing the decisions of all the Courts in India, and those of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, to the end of the year 1850. This new volume, which has received the patronage of the Hon. East-India Company, will be found to be important, as exhibiting at one view the numerous published reports on points of practice, &c., which have recently appeared in the various collections of "Decisions recorded in English in conformity to Act XII. of 1843," the latter being extremely difficult of reference from the manner in which the cases are reported, and from the want of adequate indices. It is expected that Mr. Morley's new volume will appear in July next.

OXFORD.—THE ARNOLD HISTORICAL PRIZE.—The following subject is proposed for the year 1853:—"What effects of Alexander's conquests in India are discoverable in the subsequent history of that country?"

DR. GRAY, BISHOP OF CAPE TOWN, has arrived in England, the object of his visit being a division of the extensive diocese of which he has the episcopal supervision. The new diocese will, in all probability, comprehend the whole of the archdeaconry of Graham's Town, from which it will receive its name.

THE UNITED STATES' EXPEDITION TO JAPAN.—The Washington Reporter gives the following extract of the letter of President Fillmore to the Emperor of Japan:—

"I send you by this letter an envoy of my own appointment, an officer of high rank in this country, who is no missionary of religion. He goes by my command to bear to you my greetings and good wishes, and to promote friendship and commerce between the two countries. You know that the United States of America now extend from sea to sea, that the great countries of Oregon and California are parts of the United States, and that from these countries, which are rich in gold and silver and precious stones, our steamers can reach the shores of your happy land in less than twenty days. Many of our ships will now pass in every year, and some perhaps every week, between California and China. These ships must pass along the coasts of your empire; storms and winds may cause them to be wrecked on your shores, and we ask and expect from your friendship and your greatness, kindness for our men and protection for our property. We wish that our people may be permitted to trade with your people, but we shall not authorize them to break any law of your empire. Our object is friendly commercial intercourse, and nothing more. You may have productions which we should be glad to buy, and we have productions which might suit your people. Your empire contains a great abundance of coal; this is an article which our steamers in going from California to China must use. They would be glad that a harbour in your empire should be appointed to which coal might be brought, and where they might always be able to purchase it. In many other respects commerce between your empire and our country would be useful to both. Let us consider well what new interests may arise from these recent events which have brought our two countries so near together, and what purposes of friendly amity and intercourse this ought to inspire in the hearts of those who govern both countries."

OFFICERS ORDERED TO JOIN REGIMENTS IN INDIA.—The following officers of the provisional battalion, Chatham, are under orders to join their respective regiments in India this season:—Bengal.—10th regt. Lieuts. Arnul and Medhurst; 22nd do. Ensign Graham; 24th do. Capt. McPherson, Lieut. Wangle, and Ensign Anstin; 29th do. Capt. Mercheson and Lieut. Simmonds; 32nd do. Ensign Tulloch; 53rd do. Capt. Carter, Lieut. Mowbray, Lieut. Breton, and Ensign Lloyd; 60th do. Capt. Butler and 2nd Lieut. Travers; 75th do. Capt. Hotham and Ensign Faithful; 80th do. Lieut. Kirkland, Lieut. Duprier, and Ensign Swift; 87th do. Lieut. Fulcher and Lieut. Byron; 96th do. Major Bush, Ensigns Kirk and Day; 98th do. Lieut. Hughes, Ensign Webster, and Asst.-surg. Swift. Madras.—25th regt. Lieuts. Priestly, Wallace, and Potts; 51st do. Lieut. Westorpe and Ensign Acton; 84th do. Lieut. Hyton; 94th do. Ensign Malthus. Bombay.—8th regt. Capt. Bains, Lieuts. Charter and Ximines; 64th do. Lieuts. Hanning, Francis, and Lambert; 83rd do. Lieut. Teesdale, Lieut. Shields, and Ensign Colhurst; 86th do. Ensigns Cooper and Wallace. The undermentioned officers are ordered to hold themselves in immediate readiness in case their services may be required in India:—18th Royal Irish. Major Gratton (as lieut.-colonel), Major Wigton (as Major); Capt. Edwards, Adams, and Birom; Lieuts. Greaves, Wilkinson, Swahy, and Kelly; Ensigns Greaves, Stockpole, Meals, Esmond, and Popleton.

ALLEGED ADULTERATION OF BITTER BEER.—We have received a communication from Mr. Allsopp, enclosing a report from Professors Graham and Hofmann, relative to the alleged adulteration of pale ale, or bitter beer, by a poisonous ingredient called strychnine, from whence it appears that the charge is utterly unfounded. A series of samples were taken indiscriminately from the stores of a considerable number of the London bottlers who supply the public with Allsopp's ale (the report names twenty-six), the casks having been received in London before the 20th March: and the professors state, that "not one of these varieties of beer, when tested with the greatest scrupulousness, give the slightest evidence of the presence of strychnine." It further appears, that they ascertained from M. Payen, a French chemist, who was supposed to have originated the charge, that it was never made by him with reference to the present practice of English brewers. They conclude by saying, that "the sifting nature of the chemical examination which the beer of Messrs. Allsopp's manufacture for many months past has been subjected to fully establishes its incontestible purity; and that the disadvantages attending the use of strychnine, and the facility of detecting it, render its employment as an agent for adulterating beer in the last degree improbable."

THE NATIONAL INSTITUTION OF FINE ARTS has opened for the season, at the Portland Gallery, Regent-street, with a very fine collection of paintings by modern artists, comprehending every variety of subject and style. Our space is too limited for even the most superficial criticism, and we should do injustice to others by naming a few of the pictures, where many are excellent, and none indifferent. Several of the landscapes are striking performances, and there are some exquisite little cabinet pictures.

THE GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION has recently re-opened with a "Grand national and historical Diorama," illustrating the campaigns of the Duke of Wellington in India, Portugal, Spain, and Belgium. It was a happy conception that originated this mode of rendering history and biography, as it were, visible. The Wellington campaigns furnish a very striking and varied series of subjects, highly interesting, independent of the career of an illustrious individual, and Mr. Stocqueler is well qualified to supply the connecting links of narrative. Although the pictures are not all of equal merit, they are spirited and faithful, the localities being painted, we understand, from sketches made on the spot. The triumph entry into Madrid and the siege of San Sebastian are excellent.

SOLICITORS.—William Henry Cotterill, Esq.

PHYSICIAN.—George Barrow, M.D., F.R.S., 18, Cavendish Square.

ACTUARY.—David Jones, Esq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 14th of May, 1851, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20	On or before 14th of May, 1846.	£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30		1,000	24 8 4	13 6 7
40		1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
50		1,000	42 15 0	23 10 3
60		1,000	65 11 8	35 12 5

*. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

WATER CURE, BEN RHYDDING.

THE CELEBRATED WHARFDEALE HYDRO-PATHIC ESTABLISHMENT is now only 7 hours' distance from London, is 2 hours' distance from Harrogate, and 2½ from Fountains Abbey and Studley Park, 1½ from Leeds and Bradford, 2½ from Manchester and York, 3½ from Liverpool, and 7 miles' drive from Bolton Abbey, the beautiful seat of the Duke of Devonshire.

Physician to the establishment, Dr. WM. MACLEOD, Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh; Member of the Edinburgh Medico-Chirurgical Society; Honorary Member of the Royal Medical Society; formerly Lecturer on the Institutes of Medicine in the Argyle Square School of Medicine, Edinburgh; and Physician to the Royal Public Dispensary, &c. &c.

On a high eminence near the banks of the Wharfe stands this noble edifice; the extensive and varied scenery of the locality, with its salubrious springs and bracing air, have for centuries back rendered it a favourite place of resort for invalids. The Establishment, for its situation and completeness, is unrivalled in England. It was built expressly for the Water Cure treatment, at an expense of £36,000, and is provided with every convenience, comfort, and even luxury. The Estate, which has been elegantly laid out, consists of 68 acres of hilly and wooded pleasure-grounds. The Hotel, for the accommodation of friends of the patients, is complete in every department. Terms: Board, Lodging, Medical Attendance, &c. (including all servants), per week, £3. 0s.; Board and Lodging in the Hotel department (including all servants), per week, £2. 9s. Further particulars respecting coaches, &c., may be obtained of the House Steward, by letter addressed to him, Ben Rhydding, near Otley, Yorkshire. Dr. Macleod begs to refer those resident in India for further particulars of his establishment and method of treatment to his friend, Robert Brown, Esq., M.D., Superintending Surgeon of the Honourable East-India Company's Service, Dinapore, Bengal Presidency.

Just published, price Threepence.

A SEARCH AFTER HEALTH, AND WHERE IT IS TO BE FOUND. A LETTER by a LIVERPOOL MERCHANT to his Brother Merchants, and to all who are labouring under the Great English Malady, the wear and tear of the system, or an over-wrought brain.

The letter is written in a high tone of elation, because of a complete return to health. . . . He had consulted most of the eminent physicians at home and abroad; visited Harrogate, Buxton, &c., and the German Spas. All of no avail. At last he places himself under Dr. Macleod, at his hygienic establishment of Ben Rhydding, from which, at the end of three months, he emerges completely cured. —Glasgow Citizen.

THE DELHI CHUTNEE, 1s. 6d. per bottle. THE INDIAN CURRY SAUCE, of superior quality, in antique bottles.—This novel and piquant Sauce is peculiarly adapted for Steaks, Chops, Game, Fish, Cold Meats, Soups, &c. The addition of a little of this Sauce, in cases where a curry cannot be procured, will prove a valuable accompaniment to connoisseurs.

All Indian Condiments, Mangoes, Sauces, &c., from Calcutta direct. PAYNE and Co., Importers and Manufacturers, 324 and 328, Regent Street, London.—May be had of Messrs. DUNCAN MACLEAN and SONS, Princes Street, Edinburgh; BAXTER and SONS, Buchanan Street, Glasgow; or through any Italian Warehouse in the kingdom.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of CROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Fancy Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

TO LADIES.—The high and universal celebrity which ROWLANDS' KALYDOR continues to maintain as an active, yet mild and soothing, extirpator of all impurities of the skin, is, during the period of Spring, most pleasingly evinced. This preparation, eminently balsamic, restorative, and invigorating, is equally distinguished for safety in application, as for unfailing efficacy in eradicating all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. To ladies during the period of nursing, and as a wash for infants, it cannot be too strongly recommended. Gentlemen, after shaving, will find it allay all irritation and tenderness of the skin, and render it soft, smooth, and pleasant. Price 4s. 6d. and 6s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, for the growth, and for preserving, improving, and beautifying the human hair. Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for preserving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and for rendering the breath sweet and pure. Price 2s. 6d. per box.

The patronage of Royalty throughout Europe, their general use by the aristocracy and the élite of fashion, and the well-known infallible efficacy of these articles, have given them a celebrity unparalleled.

Beware of SPURIOUS IMITATIONS!—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS," preceding that of the article on the wrapper or label. Sold by A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London; and by Chemists and Perfumers.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS the BEST REMEDIES for the CURE of BAD LEGS.—Mrs. Heppel, of Blyth, near Morpeth, was afflicted with a dreadful bad leg, for which she consulted the most eminent medical men in that neighbourhood, but it would not yield to their treatment; her health suffered severely, and the state of her leg was terrible, the ulcers rapidly increasing in size, and the pain most agonising. In this state she commenced using Holloway's Ointment and Pills, and after continuing them for some time, the leg was completely cured, and she is now in the enjoyment of excellent health. Mr. Wilkinson, druggist, Blyth, vouches for the accuracy of this statement.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

DECAYED TEETH and TOOTH-ACHE.—Price 2s. 6d.—Patronized by Her Majesty and H.R.H. Prince Albert. Mr. HOWARD'S WHITE SUCCESSANUM for stopping decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and immediately HARDENS INTO A WHITE ENAMEL; in which the tooth may stay, rendering extraction unnecessary, and arresting the further progress of decay, and is far superior to anything ever before used, as it will never become discoloured in the tooth. All persons use it themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Prepared only by Mr. Howard, Surgeon-Dentist, 17, George Street, Hanover Square, who will send it into the country free by post. Sold by Savory, 220, Regent Street; Sanger, 150, and Hannay, 63, Oxford Street; Butler, 4, Cheapside; Johnston, 68, Cornhill; and all medicine vendors in the kingdom. Price 2s. 6d. Mr. Howard continues to supply the loss of teeth on his NEW SYSTEM of SALV-ADHESION, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. 17, George Street, Hanover Square. At home from 10 till 4.

THE HAND-BEDSTEAD FOR CADETS, weight 17 lbs.
BESEMERES and SONS, CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and Ready-made Linen Warehousemen, invite overland travellers to India to inspect this PORTABLE BEDSTEAD, price 12s. 6d., invented and made only by them. Although so light, it is strong, compact, of full size, and may be used without a mattress; it passes readily into a bag 6 inches in diameter, 24 long. Bedstead, bedding, blankets, sheets, quilt, &c., packed in one of their Waterproof Regulation Overland Trunks, weigh under 50 lbs. Overland Trunks, One Guinea each. The Company book passengers, and receive goods and parcels as heretofore for CEYLON, MADRAS, CALCUTTA, PENANG, SINGAPORE, and HONG-KONG, by their steamers, starting from SOUTHAMPTON on the 30th of every month, and from SUEZ on or about the 8th of the month.

The next extra Steamer will be despatched from Southampton for Alexandria on the 3rd October next, in combination with an extra steamer, to leave Calcutta on or about the 20th September. Passengers may be booked, and goods and parcels forwarded by these extra steamers to or from SOUTHAMPTON, ALEXANDRIA, ADEN, CEYLON, MADRAS, and CALCUTTA.

BOMBAY.—The Company will book passengers throughout from SOUTHAMPTON to BOMBAY by their steamers leaving England on the 20th May, and of alternate months thereafter, such passengers being conveyed from ADEN to BOMBAY by their steamers appointed to leave BOMBAY on the 14th May, and of alternate months thereafter, and affording, in connection with the steamers leaving CALCUTTA on the 3rd May, and of alternate months thereafter, direct conveyance for passengers, parcels, and goods, from BOMBAY and WESTERN INDIA.

Passengers for Bombay can also proceed by this Company's steamers of the 29th of the month to Malta, thence to Alexandria by her Majesty's steamers, and from Suez by the Honourable East-India Company's steamers.

MEDITERRANEAN.—MALTA.—On the 20th and 29th of every month. Constantinople.—On the 29th of the month. Alexandria.—On the 20th of the month. (The rates of passage-money on these lines have been materially reduced.)

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.—Vigo, Oporto, Lisbon, Cadiz, and Gibraltar, on the 7th, 17th, and 27th of the month.

N.B. The Steam-ships of the Company now ply direct between Calcutta, Penang, Singapore, and Hong-Kong, and between Hong-Kong and Shanghai.

For further information and tariffs of the Company's recently revised and reduced rates of passage money and freight, and for plans of the vessels, and to secure passages, &c., apply at the Company's offices, 12, Leadenhall Street, London, and Oriental Place, Southampton.

OVERLAND AGENCY.—HICKIE, BORMAN, & Co., East-India and General Agents, forward packages for Overland Route to India, China, &c., to the 18th of every month, at reduced rates. They also ship goods, parcels, and baggage, and engage passages by steamers and sailing-vessels to all parts of the world; effect insurances, execute orders for supplies and outfit, and transact every description of agency business with economy and despatch. Having offices at Southampton, every attention is paid to the requirements of passengers arriving or proceeding by the Overland Route.—Offices, 127, Leadenhall Street, London, and 4, Oriental Place, Southampton.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, FRACTURES, SPRAINS, &c.
HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c., are now daily patronized by all the leading members of the profession. Their superiority over every other fabric for artificial support is admitted by all who inspect them. They afford an equal, comforting, and permanent pressure on every portion of the limb, and are drawn on with the facility of an ordinary stocking. H. and Co. guarantee a comfort and support hitherto unknown in any other form of bandage. It is well known that all kinds of Surgical Stockings lately used have a tendency to impede the free and healthy action of the muscles, thereby producing relaxation and great diminution of the limb. Only to be obtained at HUXLEY'S Parisian Shirt Warehouse, 6, Vere Street, Cavendish Square.

This day is published, 6th Edition, in 2 vols. 8vo. cloth, with 4to. Atlas, Price £3. 2s.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE expedition against Burmah, as we announced in our last Summary, sailed from its respective places of embarkation, at the end of March,—the Calcutta squadron and force on the 27th, the Madras troops on board the Bombay fleet on the 31st. The latter, which appears to have created unusual interest, it being the largest force that had ever left the presidency at one time, was unfortunately delayed by the weather, the atmosphere all over India having been in a state of general disturbance for the last ten days of March. On the 31st, the troops were assembled on the beach at daybreak; one hundred and thirty-seven boats lay just within the reach of the surf, at that time very high. Under a heavy swell and strong current, four thousand men were transferred in less than two hours' time from dry land to the decks of the steamers in the open roadstead more than a mile away, without a single accident of note. The surf in many instances broke over the boats, wetting the clothes and bedding of the soldiers, yet not a murmur was uttered. One boat was swamped—her people were picked up by a catamaran and brought on shore, and an hour afterwards the sepoys—clothes, arms, and accoutrements, wetted as thoroughly—were again merrily on their way out to sea. The Madras papers indignantly repel the ungenerous imputation cast upon the native troops of that presidency by the Calcutta journals, that they had evinced an unwillingness to embark on foreign service.

The Calcutta squadron had scarcely quitted the Hooghly when a furious thunderstorm overtook them, causing, however, no particular harm. The first detachment arrived at the mouth of the Rangoon river on board the P. and O. Co.'s steamer Lady Mary Wood on the 30th March. The troops were for the time put on board the Burmese capture, a vessel of 1,000 tons, lying dismantled. The Madras troops were not looked for till the 6th; and on the 7th, active operations were to commence.

In addition to the force formerly enumerated, H. M.'s steamer Rattler, which left Penang on the 28th ult., with Admiral Austen on board, would have joined about the 3rd or 4th; and the Nerbudda and Mahanuddy from the Hooghly and Akyab—the Lord W. Bentinck taking the place of the latter—were ordered for river service.

The following extract of a letter, published in the Englishman, written by a gentleman on board a transport, at the mouth of the Rangoon river, and dated 31st March, gives the latest Burmese news:—

"The Serpent came in from Moulmein last night. The news she brought, is, that the people there are in a state of funk, the Burmese having sent a polite message to Col. Bogle, the British commissioner, to the effect, that if the British do not attack Martaban on the 1st April, the Burmese will attack Moulmein on that day. They have also sent a message to the commodore here, entreating him to bring up his force to Rangoon, and fight it out with them, as they express themselves tired of seeing our ships riding at anchor, doing nothing, but making mysterious signals to each other, vanishing for a while, and then reappearing. The fortifications at Rangoon are described as on a very superior scale to what they were in the last war, our heavy shot merely perforating the timber of the stockades, without doing further harm."

The Maulmain Times thus describes the preparations making or reported to be making by the Burmese:—

"Their preparations are, if report speaks true, and our eyes do not deceive us as to what our neighbours are about, on a very large scale. 20,000 men are encamped at the Aeng Pass, say correspondents from Arracan, ready to pounce upon our brave and devoted army as soon as we presume to fire the first shot. 50,000 are said to be collected at Rangoon, prepared to oppose our landing. Ava is furnishing men and money and provisions to enable the army to hold out. Stockades, differently constructed from those which were battered about their ears during the last war, have been very numerous built up. Martaban has its force of from 10,000 to 20,000 men armed to the teeth. Bileng has been well fortified, and contains an army of from 20,000 to 30,000 men. Our friends at Prome, Pegu, and Tounghnoo, are not without their due share of men, and he of Tounghnoo is said to have picked all the stout, bold, lawless adventurers of his district."

It seems to be thought likely that Rangoon will be occupied and maintained by our troops during the rains, the steamers keeping up the communication with Amherst in case of sickness; that Prome itself will be captured, and a strong outpost established in the interior beyond the limit of excessive fall, as far up as prudence permits, to enable operations to be resumed at once on the commencement of the fair weather.

The refractory 38th N.I. had been marched by land to guard the frontier. A further mutiny was expected to take place amongst them on the way; in which case they will most likely be disbanded. A Calcutta paper states that a correspondence had been discovered between some of the sepoys of the 38th B.N.I. at Barrackpore, and some of the 37th N.I. at Midnapore, advising them on no account to volunteer for service to Rangoon if called upon by Government to do so.

The 3rd Sikh irregulars, on hearing of the misconduct of the sepoys, came forward and volunteered to a man to go wherever and on whatever service Government desired: unfortunately they are too far away from a seaport to be available.

The north-west frontier of British India furnishes little news. The force under Sir Colin Campbell returned to cantonments on the 27th March, having accomplished the object of the expedition, by mulcting the Ranizaies, who harboured the Swatee party that attacked the Guides at Goojur-Guree, in 5,000 rupees (for the due payment of which they gave as hostages some of their maliks), which was considered a sufficient recompense for their attack on Lumsden's guides stationed at Sunghee. The forts of Dubb and Shubqudr, as well as the bridge of boats, had been strengthened by detachments from different regiments at Peshawur, under the impression that they were to be attacked; but up to the date of the last advices (the 30th March) all was quiet. The Lahore Chronicle, however, states that it was known at Peshawur, three days after the return of Brigadier Campbell and his force from the northern extremity of the valley, that the Momunds and Swatees had coalesced, and were assembling in considerable numbers, the latter under the leadership of their king, who is also their high priest. It was reported that some of them had seized the malik who had taken the lead in effecting the settlement of the "previous question" with Colonel Mackeson, plundered his house and property, and told the friends and relations of the hostages in the hands of the Commissioner, that they had better quit the country, as the sum stipulated for as a fine should not be paid. It was given out that they proposed laying down a different line of frontier to that marked out by our Government! It was even believed they might bring themselves to attack the post of Kupoor Gurhee, held by Lieut. Lumsden, of the Guides, and Lieut. Henderson, of the 3rd Punjab infantry, who quitted Hazara the 20th of March, and has been some ten days in the Yoozoofzaie country.

Lower down the frontier, at Dera Ismael Khan, a party of Sheoranees, estimated at 200, came into our territories on the 30th March on a marauding excursion; but a detachment of British troops, posted in the neighbourhood, gave them such a warm reception that they speedily decamped into their hills again.

Sir Henry Lawrence was at Dera Ismael Khan on the 16th of March. Lord Stanley had quitted that station en route for Bombay. "No visitor to India, during the last four years," says the Lahore paper, "will have seen so much and made such good use of his time during so short a period, as Lord Stanley, by the time he shall have reached this presidency. He is now hastening home to resume his parliamentary duties."

We learn from Cabul that Dost Mahomed has ordered his son, Shere Allee Khan, to proceed to Toorkistan with a regiment of infantry and one of cavalry, for the purpose of meeting Ukram Khan, his elder son, who is coming to Cabul. A messenger had arrived at Cabul from Syed Mahomed, son of the late Yar Mahomed of Herat, with a message to the effect, that as Sirdar Kuhundil Khan of Candahar had sent his son Mohamed Suddeek Khan with 5,000 troops towards Herat, where he had already taken possession of a place called Furrab, and intended to attack Subzmar and other places in Herat, he, the ruler of Cabul, would be pleased either to advise the sirdars of Candahar to withdraw their troops, or to assist the ruler of Herat. No reply has yet been received from Dost Mohamed, who is said to be awaiting the arrival of Ghoolam Hyder from Jellalabad, with whom he wishes to consult prior to returning any answer.

From Lucknow the Englishman has a letter, dated 25th March, which states that there is another intrigue hatching, which may have an important influence on the future of Oude.

"Mustapha Ally, who is generally supposed to be the king's elder brother, and who is now confined as a madman (though, if report be true, there is not the slightest foundation for the accusation that he is insane), has been charged with writing to our Government, and reverting to his claim to the throne of Oude, a claim which had been settled in favour of the present ruler by the British Government, as far back as 1842, in Amgud Ally Shah's time. Whether or not Mustapha is a son of the late king, I know not; but that he was disowned by him is certain, and he not only stated to the resident verbally, but also in writing under his seal and signature, that Mustapha Ally was not his own offspring, but the child of an unknown father, and that when he purchased his mother, the boy was a year and a half old. I do not think that his illegitimacy, if he were a son of the late king, would have excluded him, according to Mahomedan law, from all claim to the throne; but the written declaration of his alleged father was of course sufficient evidence to render all expectation he might have entertained of eventually ruling over Oude absolutely hopeless."

Another letter from Lucknow, published in the Delhi Gazette, says:—"There was a fight in the district of Oude a few days ago, between a party of troops under Lieut. P. Orr, and those of a rajah named Runjeet Sing, the same man that cut them up so fearfully last year."

From the Nizam's dominions we learn that the minister is likely to fail in carrying out his promised arrangements for the payment of the debt to the British Government. A crusade against the Rohillas has again been ordered in Berar. The Hyderabad correspondent of the Englishman reports, that the Nizam has requested the Government of India to send him five English officers to superintend the collection of his revenues. The writer believes that such a measure must inevitably terminate in the absorption of the country as the English officers are sure to pay a degree of attention to the complaints of the ryots, which no Oriental government will endure.

Intelligence has been received from Gwalior of the death of the Mama Sahib, minister of the court, which took place at Gwalior on the 29th March. The minister had been suffering for some time from the malady which at length carried him off.

The fortnight following the 19th March (when the storm first made its appearance) had been remarkable all over India, for the strangeness of the weather and the frequency of thunder and lightning, with violent falls of hail all over the country, from 6 deg. to 32 deg. north. The 19th, the 25th, the 31st March, and 3rd and 4th April, were the periods of most notable disturbance. The chief hailstorms occurred about the 25th; the thunder and wind, which were especially violent at Calcutta and Kurrachee, in exactly the same parallel, 1,500 miles apart, on the 4th April. On the 31st March there was a severe earthquake all over the N. W. provinces. Simla seems the northernmost point from which accounts had been received, Lucknow the southernmost; so that, as far as we at present know, it has extended from about 27 to 31 deg., and from 77 to 81 deg. east and west, or about 300 miles each way. It is said to have occurred at the same moment at Lucknow, Meerut, and Mussoorie; and if this be the case, the line connecting these points together will be that of emanation.

The Marquess of Dalhousie was at Calcutta; the governor of Madras at that presidency; Sir W. Gomm remained in the north-west. The Marchioness of Dalhousie had been compelled by sickness to return home. The governor of Bombay and commander of the forces were at Mahabuleshwar, enjoying the cool climate of the hills. They would spend the rains at Poona, and return to the presidency about November. Mr. Peacock, legislative member of council, arrived at Calcutta, and assumed office on the 2nd April.

Advices from Australia to the 24th of January state that news had just arrived of the discovery of gold in New Zealand, in the island of Waikiki, about 15 miles east of Auckland. The deputy-governor was stated to have sailed for the spot, for the purpose of collecting information and specimens.

A correspondent of the New York Herald, writing from Honolulu, confirms the report of the establishment of a republic at Tahiti, and the deposition of Queen Pomare. In this movement several Americans were engaged. The same writer asserts that the example will soon be followed at the Sandwich Islands, the king being anxious to resign his crown and retire into private life. Some Americans had made extensive purchases of land in the islands.

BURMAH.

The vessels and the steamers of the Bengal division got to sea on the 29th instant. The steamers which were despatched with so much expedition from Bombay were still lying in the Madras Roads on the 20th, but would doubtless have received orders to put to sea with the Madras division, so as to reach their destination at the same time with the troops despatched from Calcutta. The whole expedition would probably arrive before Rangoon about the 10th of April, when they were likely to have a clear month of dry and seasonable weather. Martaban and Rangoon would fall into our hands, in a few hours, but the further movement of the army would depend on the aspect of circumstances. It was given out, that the orders of Government strictly enjoin on the general to leave the Burmese territory and return as soon as the rains set in; but the report is received with little confidence. Any retrograde movement is to be avoided above all things. It would discourage those who were favourably disposed towards us, in which number the whole body of Peguers may be included, and prevent their furnishing us with supplies on any future occasion; and it would enable the Burmese authorities to attribute our withdrawal to a feeling of fear, and to cover the country with proclamations, announcing that, after having attacked Rangoon, we had been constrained to save ourselves by decamping. What we have to dread in Burmah is not the two hundred cannon of the enemy, or his magnificent navy of forty war boats, or the rabble of 30,000 soldiers; but the climate, and the difficulty of carriage. But the effects of the climate of Rangoon might possibly be avoided by pushing on to Donabew, which, as far as we can ascertain by an examination of the map, is not a hundred miles up the stream. It has been confidently affirmed, that the depth of water there in the dry season, is between two and three fathoms, so that we might always reach it by water in two or three days with facility, possibly in less. Promise, we believe, about 120 miles from Donabew, but it is feared that the present force is too small, and the season too far advanced for the occupation of that important post. But if it be found that steamers of light draught can reach Donabew, we shall always be able to keep open a communication between that place and our fleet at the mouth of the river, and if the position was found salubrious, we might send additional troops to it, if necessary, even during the rains, and there collect the means of marching to Ava in the cold season. If we could give the inhabitants of Pegu the assurance that we should not again abandon them to the tender mercies of the Burmese, we might have the whole of the Delta occupied by a friendly population, who would effectually counteract the hostility of the Burmese.

It is to be feared that as soon as the war commences in good earnest, the Burmese will lose no time in pouring their troops down on Arracan through the Aeng pass, and into Cachar through Manipore; they did so in the last war, and it is probable that the same movements will be repeated on the present occasion. As the rainy season presents no obstacle to the movement of their troops, who are not encumbered with a heavy encampment and a European commissariat, they may be tempted again to beat up our quarters in Cachar and in the province of Arracan. Both those provinces therefore require to be provided early with the most effectual means of resistance. The troops collected at Arracan might form the nucleus of the army which would march across the Aeng pass, during the cold weather into the valley of the Irrawaddy, and co-operate with the army from Rangoon in its march to the capital, where alone we can make peace with any confidence of its permanency.—Friend of India, April 1.

The Lady Mary Wood steamer, returned from Rangoon, reports having spoken nearly all the vessels which left Calcutta at the beginning of last week. She was only four days from Rangoon to the Sand Heads. The Bengal contingent will, however, reach their destination nearly a week before they can be joined by the division from Madras. The Madras authorities do not seem to know the value of moments, which, at the present time, with the rains threatening the expedition, are inestimable. The steamers from Bombay arrived in the roads on the 7th of March, and the Madras Government had received the fullest instructions to be ready to embark the expedition, on the receipt of the final despatch from hence. Lord Dalhousie had so exactly timed the departure of both divisions of the expedition, as to provide for their being united at Rangoon at the same time, but this arrangement has been in some measure frustrated by the dilatoriness of the Madras authorities.

From advices which we have received from the eastward, it would appear that nearly all the Burmese troops have left Martaban, and retired to Belin, about forty miles distant, on the direct road to Toung-oo and Prome, where it is supposed they have assembled a body of 12,000 or 15,000 armed men. With the exception of about 2,000 men despatched from Ava, the governor of Martaban has nothing to depend on but the peasantry; and they will take to flight as soon as they come in contact with the British arms. Toung-oo is a large fortified town, about fifty miles from Prome, and the capital of a very fertile and wealthy province. The force of the enemy has been concentrated at Rangoon. With the bricks of the custom-house, the Armenian church, and eight or ten large godowns, they have erected a strong fortification on the main wharf, and underneath it are placed bags of powder with a train leading two or three hundred yards back. In the same manner they have established mines in every direction around the great pagoda, which they have also fortified with about 100 pieces of cannon. The river has been stockaded on both banks all the way up to Rangoon, and we shall probably have twenty of them to demolish, as well as four or five small forts. The number of troops in and around Rangoon is estimated at 30,000, and that town has now been rendered a much stronger position, than at any preceding period for 100 years. The Burmese authorities appear to have the most unbounded confidence in the strength of their defences, and their ability to resist the invaders. But the Peguers and Karens, who compose four-fifths of the population in the lower provinces, will not give their aid to the Burmese officers one moment after they discover that they can abandon them with impunity. We are assured that steamers can go from Rangoon to Prome in four or five days, and that a position more admirably situated for defence could hardly be desired. The hills rise abruptly from the water's edge on the west. On the other side, the town lies on an inclined plane, and behind it are lofty elevations. It is high and dry, and not one-half the rain falls there which does in Rangoon. Even the unhealthiness of this town has been exaggerated. Those who have resided there for any length of time have never had reason to complain of its climate, which has been found to be nearly as healthy for European constitutions as Moulmein; but, if European troops are to be fed, as in the last war, on salt junk for five months, and to be left almost destitute of medical aid or stores, why they will, and must die.

The steamer last arrived reports that the Burmese at Martaban had threatened to burn down Moulmein unless we were more expeditious in attacking them ourselves. Likewise, that the Burmese officers about Rangoon had taunted us with our delay, and asked why we did not at once advance against the town, and storm their fortifications, instead of lying off the mouth of the river, idly exchanging signals. If there be any truth in these reports, it would appear that the Burmese are prepared to dispute every inch of ground with us, and that they are not likely to be frightened into a peace, by our present demonstration. In times past, Tharrawaddy employed an agent in Calcutta to bribe the subordinates in the public offices, and thus obtained copies of the Government despatches almost as soon as the Resident himself. It is not to be supposed, therefore, that the Burmese have neglected to employ the most effectual means of obtaining intelligence of our plans and movements through their emissaries at Moulmein; and if they learn, which they are sure to do, that we do not intend to advance beyond Rangoon during the rains, they will certainly contrive to prolong hostilities.—Ibid. April 8.

BENGAL MILITARY FUND.

The annual meeting of the Military Fund took place at Calcutta on the 29th inst.

The statement of affairs laid before the meeting supplied no information beyond the fact, that the expenditure exceeded the income by the sum of Rs. 39,000, and the directors appeared not to be prepared to answer any questions put to them. On finding a deficiency of Rs. 39,000 without any explanation, Col. Sage moved a resolution, proposing "that the passing of accounts be suspended until the secretary be able to furnish a detailed explanation of this sum, forming an unaccounted balance on the accounts; the said explanation to be attached to the accounts as a foot-note, and circulated to the army, and laid before a special meeting." This motion, although Dr. Mouat objected, and quoted one of the rules of the Fund, "that the accounts should be first passed, and then they should proceed to business," appears to have been assented to by the meeting. The Englishman says that the accounts were suffered to pass, and that explanations would be circulated to the members of the Fund hereafter; but we do not find this in the published report. Major Marshall assured the meeting that it would only take a month to ascertain how the deficiency had taken place. The subsequent proceedings of the meeting gave full authority and encouragement to the directors to continue this style of business. Major Hogge was anxious that details of all contingent charges should be made for the information of Mofussil members, and moved a resolution accordingly, which was seconded by Col. Sage. Major Browne opposed it, as it would entail unnecessary expenses on the fund. How it would entail further expense on the fund is not at all clear, nor did Major Browne attempt to show this, nor did he attempt to show why the expense was unnecessary if it were incurred. The meeting did not dispose of the resolution on the ground of expense necessary or unnecessary, but it was negatived by a majority of one, because, as Dr. Mouat said, such a resolution would, in some measure, be calling in question or insinuating a reproach on the acts of the directors. There were twenty-five members present, and only sixteen voted, eight for the resolution and eight against it, when Dr. Mouat brought forward the argument, backed by his vote, that upset it. It is surprising that directors should continue the very easy and convenient method of furnishing accounts in the aggregate, when the members of the fund reject a proposition of inquiry into details out of delicacy to them? We do not see why this delicacy should be confined to small matters.

The Rev. Mr. Gawen (a zealous director of the military fund) has made a curious and acceptable discovery, which goes far to confirm the opinion expressed by Mr. Neison, that the present alarming disproportion between the invested capital of the fund and the annual demands upon it may be found to arise, not from any defect in the constitution of the fund, but in the administration of its details. In other words, that by prudent management the institution may be restored to a sound financial position, without having recourse to the desperate measure of raising the rates of subscription. The discovery, so discreditable to past directors and secretaries, is this. Ever since the beginning of the present century, no attempts, worthy of the name, seem to have been made to recover the arrears of subscription due to the fund by certain officers at the time of their decease, their resignation of the service, their dismissal from it, or their voluntary withdrawal from the fund. The number of these unsettled accounts is numerous.—Delhi Gazette, April 8.

SUPREME COURT, FEBRUARY 28.

Watt v. Saunders.—This was an action for two libels published by the defendant in the Agra Messenger of the 4th and 18th of January. The plaintiff, Capt. Watt, belonged to the 6th regiment of Bengal cavalry, and in the year 1850 was also a director of the North-western Bank. The defendant is the publisher of the Agra Messenger.

The defendant had pleaded certain pleas, justifying the libels complained of, by alleging the truth of the facts stated in them. The pleas were demurred to, and the Court, after argument, held that the pleas were bad, as the facts stated therein, if true, were not sufficient to justify the epithet and inferences contained in the libels. The defendant had now amended his pleas of justification, by excepting some of the passages in the libels before attempted to be justified, upon which amended pleas issue was joined, and the cause now came on for trial.

Mr. Dickens opened the case for the plaintiff, and stated that he, in 1850, resided at Meerut, was a director of the North-western Bank, and was at this time possessed of 116 shares in the Bank. Being desirous of selling his shares, he advertised them for sale, and on the 25th of September wrote to Mr. O'Brien Saunders, the brother of the defendant, and a share-broker, then residing at Delhi, the manager of the Delhi Gazette (since become the editor), authorizing him to sell some of the shares at Rs. 405 and Rs. 410 per share. In pursuance of this authority, Mr. Saunders disposed of 30 shares for the plaintiff to Capt. Barlow, in the service of the king of Oude, at Rs. 405 per share. On the 13th of October, the plaintiff again wrote to Mr. O'Brien Saunders, directing him to sell 20 or 30 more shares at Rs. 410 each. Upon this communication, 22 shares more were sold to Capt. Barlow at Rs. 410 each. Previous to this time, Major Angelo, an invalid officer, had been the secretary of the Bank, and about this time the directors had reason to believe that certain entries made in the accounts by Major Angelo were not authorized. On the 3rd of October, a private investigation into this affair took place, and it was afterwards discovered that the defalcations of Major Angelo amounted to a lakh and a half of rupees. At the time of the sale of the shares, the plaintiff was totally ignorant of the defalcations of Major Angelo. As soon as it became publicly known, the value of the Bank shares fell very much in the market, and Capt. Barlow called upon the plaintiff to take back the shares, and refund the amount paid for them. Under the circumstances, Capt. Watt considered himself justified in declining to take them back, upon which one of the libels complained of appeared in the Agra Messenger.

Publication was admitted.

Mr. Morton, for the defendant, admitted that there must be a verdict for the plaintiff, for those parts of the libel which had been excepted out of the defendant's pleas of justification. It was not easy to see the object of the plaintiff in bringing this action. The facts stated in the libel were all publicly known and acknowledged. The plaintiff must have known of the defalcations of the secretary at the time he sold the shares, though they were not known to the public, or the body of the shareholders. The plaintiff had made use of this knowledge, privately obtained, and sold his shares at a good price, whilst he must have known that, when the facts became public, the shares must immediately be depreciated one half. Others might consider such a transaction to be of doubtful morality; some might consider it justified, others not strictly correct; whilst some would think it wholly unjustifiable. That the plaintiff must have known of the defalcations, was evident from a letter written by him from Meerut, dated the 28th of November, wherein he stated that the squabble amongst the directors was the consequence of an opinion expressed by him two months before. He called the following witnesses:—

Mr. O'Brien Saunders, the brother of the defendant, was not a shareholder in the Bank. The paid-up capital was advertised at 32 lakhs. Plaintiff had come early in 1850 with his regiment to Meerut. Shares had then fallen from Rs. 500, the par value, to Rs. 410, Rs. 420 per share, in consequence of losses. About the 25th of September, witness received a letter from the plaintiff, requesting witness to negotiate the shares at Rs. 405 to Rs. 410 per share. Capt. Barlow was resident in Oude. October 11th, witness wrote to plaintiff that he had sold 30 shares at Rs. 405 per share. October 13th, witness received another letter from plaintiff, asking him to sell 30 more shares at Rs. 410, and 52 shares in all were sold to Capt. Barlow. Witness at this time was perfectly unaware of the defalcations of Major Angelo; they were also perfectly unknown to the public. Since the defalcations had become known, the shares had never been higher than from Rs. 250 to Rs. 280, and for some time they were unsaleable altogether.

Mr. O'Brien Tandy, manager of the North-western Bank. The eventual loss to the Bank by the defalcations of Major Angelo would be about Rs. 1,20,000. The plaintiff was still the holder of 54 shares.

Mr. C. B. Wood, formerly deputy-secretary to the Bank at Meerut: The inquiry into the defalcations commenced on the 4th of October, 1850. Witness had been employed to investigate the accounts, and gave in a report on the 4th October. The plaintiff was present at a meeting of the directors on that day. The plaintiff was aware of two false entries on the 2nd, but before that time witness thought the plaintiff had no knowledge or suspicion of Angelo's defalcations. The defalcations were kept secret from the shareholders till the 11th of October.

The Court thought the plaintiff entitled to substantial damages, for inferences and epithets not warranted by the facts, and it could not be considered that the whole body of the public was so reasonable as to be able to reject from their minds every observation that was not warranted by the facts. The negotiation for the shares was begun on the 25th of September, upon the fixed price of Rs. 405 per share, at which time plaintiff was a director of the Bank. The Court attached no particular importance to the fact of the plaintiff being a director. A director ought to be at liberty to dispose of his shares as any other person might do. The plaintiff's avowed reason for selling his shares was, that he might be enabled to discharge a debt due to the Bank. There was no reason to suppose that the plaintiff had any knowledge of the defalcations at the time of the sale of the shares, or that he had such knowledge previous to the 2nd of October. He certainly appeared previously to be generally dissatisfied with the affairs of the Bank, and would have been glad of another secretary; but the expression of such dissatisfaction could not be extended to a knowledge of the defalcations. The Court was certainly of opinion that, at the time of the sale, the plaintiff had no knowledge of these defalcations. There appeared no such great anxiety in the plaintiff to get rid of his shares, for the offer of the second lot was at a higher figure than the first. When the offers were made by the plaintiff to sell his shares, there was nothing whatever of unfairness in those acts. Whether a man of a very refined sense of morality might not have said, between the first and second contract, "Something has come to my knowledge which I am not now at liberty to disclose, but which urges me to advise you to pause before you accept my offer," was a question the Court would pronounce no opinion on. That was a question for the decision of a moralist, rather than a lawyer. The Court ought to be satisfied that the plea of the defendant was made out, namely, that the plaintiff was at the time of the sale aware of the defalcations, and that he also knew what would be the depreciation in the value of the shares. The Court could not find any indication of actual malice against the plaintiff; but the language was very unjustifiable, and particularly dangerous to a military man; and though the Court would accede to all classes the credit of the possession of an equally nice sense of honour, yet the soldier was exposed to punishment by a tribunal of great power, which severely visited breaches of honour. It was very difficult satisfactorily to assess damages in cases of libel; but it seemed to the Court that justice would be met by finding a verdict for the plaintiff, with Co.'s Rs. 1,000 as damages.

THE LONDON MAILS of Jan. 24th and Feb. 24th arrived at Calcutta on the 13th ult.

LALLA JOTER PERSAD has received payment from the treasury of a portion of his claim against Government, to the amount of Rs. 14,22,000. The only difficulty which existed is said to have been started by the law officers of Government, who wished to delay the payment until all the accounts had been adjusted. The Governor-General, however, overruled the objection, and the money was paid.

PROFESSOR WEIDEMAN.—The Calcutta journals mention the death of the Rev. Professor Weideman, of Bishop's College, believed to have been drowned while crossing the river, during a squall, as he was last seen on board a small boat.

THE COURT-MARTIAL on the ressalidar of the 5th Nizam's cavalry has closed its proceedings. The verdict has not transpired officially, but we believe there is little doubt that the ressalidar has been acquitted, as indeed every one anticipated. There are certain circumstances connected with this trial which gives it an interest beyond the circle of the Nizam's army, but we shall not notice them until the verdict of the court appears in General Orders. The ressalidar was charged with having addressed to Brigadier Beatson, then commanding the Nizam's cavalry, an anonymous petition containing very scandalous charges against Capt. Yates, the commandant of his regt. There were other charges of less moment. We have seen a copy of the petition, and it is certainly a most insolent production, leading one to form a very unfavourable opinion of the state of subordination in at least one regiment in the Nizam's army. It is not a tale of individual grievances, but of alleged injuries suffered at the hands of Capt. Yates, by nearly the whole regiment. One complaint is that Capt. Yates has denounced nearly 100 men as of inferior caste, because their mothers were slave girls, and the brigadier is reminded that one of the officers of the regiment is of illegitimate birth! But the most serious accusation relates to the supply of troop horses, which the commandant is accused of turning to his own profit. These and similar charges, all, we have little doubt, equally false and ridiculous, form the substance of this notable urzee, which has almost set the whole Nizam's army together by the ears for the past twelvemonth. There is, we suspect, a curious secret history connected with the case, which it will be our duty some day to unfold. The interference of the chief personage in the land will probably be requisite, before harmony can be restored.—Dehi Gaz., Mar. 27.

THE CHOLERA has been making fearful ravages in the district of Burdwan, and along the great trunk road. A gentleman, travelling down to that town states that the disease was raging with the utmost violence on the road, and that in some places half the population appeared to have been carried off.—Friend of India, April 1.

MR. MACKAY.—We regret to learn from a Bombay paper, that Mr. Mackay, the gentleman who was sent out by the Manchester Chamber of Commerce to report on the causes of the present depression of the Indian cotton trade, will be speedily compelled by ill health to return to England. Mr. Mackay's inquiries have been hitherto confined to Guzerat and the neighbourhood of Bombay. He was sent out, we believe, for purposes hostile to the East-India Company, but we none the less regret that he will be compelled to leave India before qualifying himself by a longer residence to give accurate information regarding the state of the country and the real wants of the people. The wish of every right-thinking man must be that the honest truth may be told to the public of England on this subject; and as the evidence of persons connected with the services has always been received with suspicion, there would be great value in the well-formed testimony of a person possessing Mr. Mackay's peculiar qualifications. But we are, it appears, doomed to disappointment. Unless Mr. Mackay be a miracle of sagacity, a year's residence in one corner of India can only have endowed him with a vast fund of those false impressions which have afterwards to be diligently unlearned by any one who intends to obtain a real knowledge of the country.—Delhi Gaz. April 8. [The Manchester newspapers announce the death of this very able and amiable man.]

We have been informed that the Governor-General has signified his wish to the Board of Administration, that ladies should not visit Kashmir during the present season, Mrs. Macgregor alone being the exception to the rule thus laid down. Whether the growing infirmities of the Maharaja of Jumoo, and the possibility of some disturbances, in the event of his death, which would render the presence of the ladies in the valley objectionable, have influenced his lordship in coming to this decision, we cannot take upon ourselves to say, but we should not be surprised to learn that such had been the cause, and must confess that the grounds of objection seem valid. It is much [more] prudent to take precautions than to have to run any risk. The disappointment to some will, no doubt, be considerable, but will be borne with resignation when the probable causes of the decision are taken into consideration.—Lahore Chron. April 3.

THE "SAGE" CASE is at length disposed of, and that officer is acquitted of all the accusations brought against him, except that of being overbearing in his manner towards his subordinates.—Friend of India.

THUGGEY.—The Delhi Gazette informs us, that since the annexation of the Punjab to the British dominions, a vast system of Thuggee has sprung up, which is believed to have swept off more than two thousand persons. The Government have, it is said, already obtained a clue to the organization, and Capt. Sleeman has started for Lahore, with Major Graham, a most active officer, in order to organize measures for its summary suppression.

HONOUR TO THE SIKHS.—It is with the most sincere satisfaction we give publicity to the following extract from a letter, conveying the gratifying intelligence, that the 3rd regt. "Local" Sikh Infantry, stationed at Hooshearpoor, had volunteered, in the most unreserved manner, to go wherever the "Sirkar" might please to send them. Our correspondent writes on the 31st March:—"The native officers of the 3rd Sikh Infantry went in a body yesterday evening to the quarters of their commanding officer, Capt. Repton, and said, that having heard that a regt. had refused to proceed by sea to Burma, and that Government were in want of troops, they had come to offer their services to go there, or anywhere else; and when Capt. Repton afterwards went into the lines, all the men turned out and loudly confirmed the assurances of their 'ancients.' The great majority of the regt. are Sikhs, the rest Mussulmans and Hindoos, and a very serviceable set of fellows they look!" Such a display as the above must be peculiarly gratifying to the Government in respect to the loyal feelings of the Sikhs, and to the commanding officer as regards his men. The Commander-in-chief, himself on the spot, was, according to more recent communications, so highly pleased with this display of zeal, where it was perhaps least expected, that he expressed a wish to see the officers of the corps which had so distinguished itself, and they were accordingly presented to his Excellency by Capt. Repton, on Thursday last, the 1st of April, receiving, through the Persian interpreter, all the praise they deserved for their soldierly offer to earn, without grudging, the salt they are eating.—Lahore Chronicle, April 3.

QUININE A REMEDY FOR CHOLERA.—A correspondent of the Engishman, with reference to some remarks which appeared in the Citizen, respecting the treatment of cholera by quinine, mentions that he had himself followed that mode of treatment with complete success in cases of cholera of the worst type in the zillah in which he resides. He says—"The effect was magical; in every case the patient has been saved. I have given the quinine in doses of from four to six grains along with the usual dose of elixir of vitriol; in very few cases have I had to give a second dose and in no one instance has it failed."

THE MUSTACHIO ORDER.—To the Editor of the Lahore Chronicle.—Sir: I regret to say, that my old and very dear chum, Nicholas Bullwinkle, put an end to his existence this morning, after parade. On his dressing-table were found a pair of razors (seemingly never used), a small phial of Tyrian dye, and the following copy of verses, which may, perhaps, throw some light on his dark and dreadful fate.—ALL

Since mighty Gomm, that chieftain stout,
Forbade the infantry to clasp,
No gent dare show his face without
Some hair upon his upper lip.

A young cadet was heard to say,
'I would I had a writership,
I should not then be jeer'd all day,
'Bout hair upon my upper lip!'

Each new-fledged ensign buys a puss,
But quick repents the ownership;
For licking will not bring a mous-
Tache sooner on the upper lip.

The wretch who cannot make it grow,
To other worlds should take a trip;
There's in Elysium no G.O.
For hair upon the upper lip.

Adieu, my friends, from sheer despair,
In Lethe's stream I go to dip;
The pittance that I leave my hair,
Was not upon my upper lip.

ANGLO-RUSSIAN FABRICS.—A while ago, the Bombay Government addressed the local Chamber of Commerce touching an alarming influx of Russian chintzes into Afghanistan and Scinde, where they were likely to supplant British manufactures. It appears now that there is every likelihood of these Russian fabrics turning out to be the product of Lancashire looms; that the goods are of English manufacture, exported to Persia, purchased in that country by the Russians, and sold at an enhanced price as Russian goods in Central Asia.

QUININE A REMEDY FOR CHOLERA.—Dr. G. J. Berwick, of the Bengal medical service, in a letter to the secretary to the Medical Board, states that, from repeated observations, for some years past, in cases of pure Asiatic cholera, and from the want of success, nay total failure in all remedies hitherto proposed for its cure, his attention was at length drawn to the resemblance between many of the symptoms of that disease and those of jungle fever and the other diseases arising from malaria or marsh miasma, and he applied to the Board to afford him a more extensive field of observation in the treatment of cholera, with the view of carrying out a course of experiments regarding the efficacy, in cholera, of those remedies which have proved most efficacious in other miasmatic diseases. "Since that time," he says, "cholera made its appearance at Dum-Dum, where I had charge of a body of European artillery, and during the months of October and November, I was scarcely ever without a case of pure Asiatic cholera. The conclusion I have arrived at is, quinine exercises the same controlling power over cholera as it does in jungle fever, or any other disease arising from that peculiar atmospheric state which has been termed malaria. The indications to be attended to are the following: to allay the irritability of the stomach and the bowels; to quiet the spasmodic muscular action; to neutralise the morbid poison, the cause of the disease; to keep up the heat of the extremities, and support the strength of the patient. To prevent the first (vomiting and purging), the acetate of cantharides is rubbed into the pit of the stomach; to quiet the spasm, chloroform is inhaled; to neutralise the malaria, quinine is administered; to keep up the heat of the surface, hot sandbags or hot-water bottles are applied; and to support the patient's strength, sago with port wine is cautiously given at intervals."

LIEUT. FAITHFUL.—Charges of immorality have been brought against Lieut. G. T. Faithful, assistant commissioner of Aeng, by the Rev. Mr. O'Brien, American missionary. The Government, in reply, say that they have no business whatever with the private conduct or moral character of its public servants; but when their conduct becomes a public scandal, it considers it necessary to remove that scandal, and has, therefore, directed the Commissioner to inquire into the matter.

FAMILY OF THE DEWAN OF MOOLTAN.—The Governor-General has confirmed the grant of pensions to the members of the family of the late Dewan Moolraj, and of his father, Sawun Mul. Some daughters are included in the list.

MR. WOODCOCK.—The Citizen repeats a report, first mentioned by the Englishman, of an illegal act said to have been committed by Mr. Woodcock, the joint magistrate of Maldah, who condemned an indigo planter to a month's imprisonment, with hard labour, for removing a boundary post on a Khas mehal. As Mr. Wight is a European, the magistrate, in the present state of the law, was bound to commit him to the Supreme Court, and in any case the legal penalty of the offence is a fine without imprisonment.

LEOPARD SHOOTING.—"At Kishnagur the villagers brought us khubur of some half dozen baghs, that were killing their well-fattened sheep, goats, and calves, and begged we would go and shoot them. So away we went, P. S., A. H. S., J. H. S., and H. O.—four as fine boys as ever donned sola topees. We had just got to our old stations at the four corners of the jungle, when out rattled a fine dog-leopard within three yards of me. I believe the soor was about to spring at me, when I gave him the contents of two barrels of snipe-shot. The brute took a roll or so, and made such a spring at me, that I had barely time to bob my head, and make a bolt, when the fellow boned my sola topee, and there was poor I, bareheaded, cutting across country, as hard as I could split. While arguing the matter, my friend A. H. S. has touched him up too, and halloo! he is off also. Away goes my friend straight on end for a large tree; but how to climb it, there's the rub, and the leopard not very far off either. Never mind, I am in trim, and have charged my gun with buckshot this time, so that, while poor A. H. S. is slipping up and down the tree, I pitch into the varmint, and finish him. What's 'tother report though? Come, J. H. S. and A. H. S. are not the only run-aways, for there goes P. S., scudding as fast as his legs can carry him, and singing out lustily for 'barood churah'; but what ails the animal?—he is going round and round on one spot, as if trying to catch his tail? The mystery is soon explained, he has had both his eyes shot away, and there you have H. D., with his double, to finish him."—Englishman.

INSOLVENTS.—Twenty-five cases were heard in the Insolvent Court of Calcutta on the 6th March. Two captains of the 64th N.I. applied for their discharge; the first, Capt. G. P. Thomas, showing debts to the amount of Rs. 22,603. The official assignee bore strong testimony to the honourable efforts made by Capt. Thomas to pay his debts. Capt. Colin Corsar also applied for his discharge from liabilities to the amount of Rs. 74,300, to meet which he had only Rs. 4,000 of assets. He was discharged with an order to pay Rs. 100 a month out of his allowances for the benefit of his creditors.

RADHAKRISHNAUD ROY.—A correspondent of the Englishman (evidently a native) forwards an account of the death of Baboo Radhakrishnaud Roy, the eldest son of the celebrated Rammohun Roy. After enumerating various good qualities of the deceased, the writer says:—"He was honoured with the friendship by some of the mighty ancient potentates of the Gangetic valley, and his amiable disposition and attractive manners drew the admiration of all that saw him."

BURMESE IN CALCUTTA.—The military editor of the Hurkaru descants in a most alarming style upon the danger to which Calcutta is exposed by the presence of so large a number of Burmese and Sikhs. He says, that the metropolis is almost denuded of troops, that the militia is inexperienced, the police force is "abundantly blessed with the better part of valour," and that it is not impossible the strangers may make an émeute, and lop off Governor-General, Council, secretaries and all! We will tell him a much more alarming contingency. Three-fourths of the cooks in Chowringhee are Burmese. Suppose they should turn patriots, and mix arsenic with the soup, or emetics with the entrées!—Friend of India.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

MESSES.

Adjutant-General's Office, Head Quarters Camp, Sealkote, Feb. 12, 1852.—Extra subscriptions have been levied in several regiments for the purpose of extricating their messes from difficulties, resulting from losses in the late campaigns, long marches, removal to new cantonments, where mess houses were built or purchased, etc.; and such extra subscriptions having been in every instance peremptorily prohibited by his Grace the Commander-in-Chief, a special reference was made by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India, to the Field-Marshal the Duke of Wellington on the subject.

2nd. An extract of the reply is annexed for the information and guidance of officers commanding regiments.

3rd. The Commander-in-Chief in India deprecates all extravagance, and reminds commanding officers of regiments that his Excellency can never admit an excuse for mess debts, that successive mess committees have been improvident or careless, for it is the business of the commanding officer to take care that no extraordinary expenditure is incurred by the mess committee, without his sanction, and that no neglect of established rules takes place.

4th. His Excellency further reminds commanding officers, that the increased rate of regular subscriptions now authorized, is only to be considered the maximum, and that where the old rates have been found sufficient, no increase should be made.

5th. Tentage, horse, command, and contingent allowances are not to be included as part of the pay actually received by the officers; and the Commander-in-Chief is of opinion that the maximum rate of subscriptions on appointment of promotion, when payable in this country, should be levied on pay, and Indian allowances only, according to the first column in the pay table, page 124th of the code of 1849.

6th. Where officers are in receipt of extra batta, this allowance may, on emergency, be included in the calculation of the annual rate, but his Excellency considers that with proper management, it should seldom be necessary to include it, and that if unavoidably included for a time, the advanced rate should be discontinued as soon as possible.

Extract of a letter from the Adjutant General, Horse Guards, dated 29th October, 1851, to the Commander-in-Chief in India.

"In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 3rd ult. relative to the refusal of two officers to join in an extra mess subscription, for the purchase of a mess-house, I have the honour, by the direction of the Commander-in-Chief, to assure you, that his grace will not only not grant his sanction to the introduction of any additional mess subscription, but will encourage and support any officer who has the good sense and discretion to resist payment of such an unauthorised impost.

"I am to observe, however, that by the rule laid down in Art. 63, page 130, of her Majesty's regulations, the annual contribution of officers to the mess is liable to be charged at the rate of pay actually received by the officer, and that no one can complain if he is not assessed beyond that rate.

CAPT. C. G. FAGAN.

Fort William, Feb. 20.—The following military letter from the Court of Directors to the Governor of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal, dated 17th Dec. 1851, is published for general information:—

"Our Governor of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal.

"We have received your military letter, dated 3rd September, 1851, forwarding your reply to our reference on the subject of Mr. Christopher G. Fagan's Memorial, praying to be restored to the service, in which it is stated that his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief trusts he may be excused from pronouncing an opinion on the matter; but that the Governor-General has recorded his opinion that the evidence on the trial did not convict Mr. Fagan of dishonour. In the sentiments expressed by the Governor-General the other Members of Council concur.

"We have given our most careful and attentive consideration to the proceedings of the court-martial held on Capt. Fagan, in March, 1850, to the representations addressed by him to us, and to the reply of your Government to our reference, calling for your sentiments on the prayer of his memorial, and more especially to the Minute of the Governor General, dated 4th August, 1851, in which his Lordship, after a review of the whole of the evidence, states his opinion that Capt. Fagan was innocent of conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman in the transactions which formed the subject of his trial.

"We have now to announce to you, that we have resolved to restore Capt. Fagan to his rank and standing in the 8th regiment of light cavalry from the 3rd inst., the date of our resolution to this effect.

"This resolution has been approved by the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India, in conformity with the Act of 53 Geo. III., c. 155, sec. 83.—We are, &c.

(Signed) "JOHN SHEPHERD, and thirteen other Directors.

NATIVE LANGUAGES.—STANDARD FOR REWARD OF RS. 1,000.

March 9, 1852.—The Governor of Bengal has been pleased to direct that the following test of qualifications, sanctioned by the Government of India as the standard which shall entitle military officers attaining to it, in two or more of the native languages, to claim the reward of Rs. 1,000, granted by the Court of Directors, be published for general information.

The languages from which candidates are at liberty to select those in which they will be examined are—

Arabic, Persian, Oordoo, Sanscrit, Hindee, Bengalee, provided that one of the languages chosen must be of Mahomedan origin, either Arabic, Persian, or Oordoo, and another of Hindoo origin, either Sanscrit or one of the other languages mentioned above in the same column as Sanscrit, according to the presidency to which the officer examined belongs.

The test-books in the several languages are to be—

In Arabic	1. Alif Laila. 2. Ikhwanooos Safa. 3. Nafhatool Yaman.
In Persian	1. Gulistan. 2. Bostan. 3. Anwari Soheilee.
In Oordoo	1. Baghobahar. 2. Gooli Bakawalee. 3. Betal Pachesee.
In Sanscrit	1. Ikhwanooos Safa. 2. Hitopadesha. 3. Mahabharata.
In Hindee	1. Rajneeti. 2. Prem Sagur. 3. Baghobahar.
In Bengalee ...	1. Betal Punchlimshate. 2. Bangalar Itihas. 3. Purush Pariksha.
Maharatta and Goozeerattee	1. Punchopa Khyan. 2. Æsop's Fables. 3. Bali Mittra.
Canarese	1. Æsop's Fables.
Tamil	1. Punchatuntra.
Telagoo	1. Morris's Selections. 2. Punchatuntra. 3. Vikra Marka Tales.

The candidate will, of course, not be permitted to have access to any dictionary or other book, or to receive any kind of assistance in the performance of his exercises either written or oral.

The written exercises to consist of—

1. A paper not less than an ordinary octavo page in length, printed in the language in which the examination is held, to be translated into English.

2. A paper in English of the same length to be translated into the selected language, in such a manner as to evince a decided familiarity with the language and some elegance of style.

3. A paper of short sentences in English, the greater part on professional subjects, to be rendered into the language of examination accurately and idiomatically.

The candidate will then be called upon to read fluently and translate correctly portions of any of the test books, and also a fairly, but not very clearly, written manuscript in the language selected; and, when that is still a spoken language of the country, he shall further be required to carry on a conversation with the examiners, or with one or more natives in presence of the examiners, on such subjects proposed by them, as are calculated to test his colloquial facility both as regards scholar-like expression and knowledge of the terms and phrases commonly used by the poorer and uneducated classes.

The examinations under these orders will be conducted by the college examiners at Fort William and Fort Saint George in the case of Bengal and Madras officers respectively, and by the examination committee at Bombay when the candidate belongs to that Presidency.

UNIFORM OF THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Head Quarters, Camp, Puthun Kote, March 10. 1852.—With the sanction of the Most Noble the Governor-Gen. of India in Council, his Excel. the Com.-in-Chief is pleased to direct, that the uniform, as prescribed for the "medical department" in the dress regulations of 1837, shall henceforward be the established dress of the entire body of Medical Officers of this presidency, with the exception of the under-mentioned modifications in respect to those serving with regiments and corps.

Trowsers.—Oxford mixture, with scarlet stripe down the outward seam, one inch and a half wide, or white linen, according to the season.

Forage cap.—Plain blue cloth, with black silk braid band, oak leaf pattern, without any device or number; peak, plain patent leather.

Shoulder straps.—The same as worn by infantry officers.

For Waist-belt.—Snake clasp.

Button.—Gilt, with the words "Medical Staff," [on a star raised thereon.

Medical officers on the staff, and those serving with infantry corps of the line, will adopt the uniform above prescribed, without a y unnecessary delay; but those serving with the regiment of artillery, with corps of regular and irregular cavalry and local infantry, are permitted to continue to wear their present uniforms until they require to be renewed, when the dress now laid down is to be adopted and precisely adhered to, by all medical officers so situated.

RATE OF EXCHANGE. FAMILY REMITTANCES.

Fort William, March 27, 1852.—It is notified for general information, that the Hon. the Court of Directors have been pleased to fix the rate of exchange for officers' family remittances and effects in the official year 1852-53 at two shillings (2s.) the Company's rupee.

BARNES PEACOCK, ESQ.

Fort William, Home Department, April 28, 1852.—The Hon. the Court of Directors having appointed Barnes Peacock, Esq., to be Fourth Ordinary Member of the Council of India, in succession to the late John Elliot Drinkwater Bethune, Esq., and the said Barnes Peacock, Esq., having arrived at the Presidency in the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's vessel Oriental, he has accordingly this day taken the oaths and his seat as Fourth Ordinary Member of the Council of India under the usual salute from the ramparts of Fort William.

MADRAS.

THE WOODIAGHERY FAMILY.

This is certainly the time when all who have claims against the Indian Government, or wrongs to be redressed, should speak out; but to bring forward charges which cannot be substantiated, and claims without foundation, must inevitably strengthen the East-India Company, and hurt the prospects of the natives of the country generally. The Madras Athenæum brings before the public a case which, if entirely true, must entail lasting disgrace and to the government under which it occurred, to all parties concerned in it. The Athenæum speaks of the affair as if no doubts existed of the correctness of the statements produced.

It appears that a Mussulman gentleman, of reduced circumstances, whose forefathers for five generations had been nawabs of Woodiagherry, somewhere in the Nellore district, lately presented a petition to our contemporary, soliciting the aid of the press in restoring him to his rights. The jagheer belonging to this family yielded an income of a lakh of rupees per annum, and they exercised royal power within its bounds. The last jagheerdar was a bed-ridden cripple, who was accused by the then collector of Nellore of conspiring against the Government, and a commission, consisting of only one individual, was ordered to investigate the matter. The witnesses produced against the jagheerdar appear to have been men in the employment of the collector. The unfortunate individual requested, as a favour, to be confronted with his accusers; but this common act of justice was denied him. The consequences were, that he was deposed, sent a prisoner to Chingleput, confined there, and speedily died. As a matter of course, his jagheer fell into the hands of the Government, who liberally placed the names of two of his sons on their pension list, and awarded them the princely income of a hundred rupees a month. The above is what we derive from the Athenæum, who should be correct, as he appears to collect his data from official accounts of the transaction, which occurred only thirteen years ago. But may there not be many circumstances connected with this affair with which our contemporary is unacquainted? May not charges of another nature have been brought forward and proven against this prince, but enshrouded by that cloak of mystery that Government is so fond of wrapping round its actions, even at the present time?

Being possessed of no information on the subject, except what we have derived from the article of our contemporary, we have but little to say on the subject; but if the last nawab of Woodiagherry has been treated by Government as above stated, we sincerely hope his son may yet have justice done him, and that the cause may be speedily brought before the British Government, as a specimen of the Company's mode of increasing their revenue at the expense of Indian princes.—Bangalore Herald.

We adverted in a former issue to the peculiar case of the Carnatic stipendiaries, whom the Madras government now threaten with deprivation of the pensions for which, some fifty years ago, they were compelled to exchange their jagheers, on the convenient hypothesis that this arrangement included only the individuals then existing; in other words, that the estates of the jagheerdars were not commuted, but confiscated. The Madras Athenæum details the circumstances of another "vigorous" proceeding, that will shortly form a subject of discussion in the House of Commons. The sufferer, in this instance, is the representative of a line of Indian princes, the nawabs of Woodiagherry, now enjoying from the bounty of Government an annual income of 120L, in lieu of a rental of some 12,000L per annum! The overthrow of this man our contemporary justly named pronounces to be "a sample of the machinery by which men obnoxious on account of their wealth are ruined in this country." The case referred to is a flagrant, and has long been a notorious, one; but the powerful efforts made here to defeat justice can only be adequately met by assistance from home.—Overland Athenæum, March 13.

EXPEDITION TO BURMAH.

Notwithstanding nearly a month had been allowed for pre-visional arrangements, it was found impossible to start the expedition on the day mentioned in the order of the Government; the embarkation had consequently to be postponed to the 31st March. By dawn on the morning of that day the troops were drawn up on the north beach; and, in the presence of some thousands of sympathizing spectators, whom the unusually exciting spectacle had drawn together, in gallant trim and high spirits, entered the boats. In the course of a couple of hours the whole brigade, consisting of some 4,000 men, were safely on board the steamers and transports, and before evening had set in, the last vessel of the flotilla was out of sight. The Madras army have beheld with regret their necessary exclusion from the many opportunities of honourable distinction which the events of late years have opened to their comrades in the sister presidencies; they have at last got geography on their side, and right well are they disposed to improve the opening. The soldier-like alacrity of the sepoy to go where duty called them, was the subject of general admiration; not the slightest symptom of reluctance was manifested, not the faintest murmur heard; the 9th and 43rd M. N. I. were no less forward than their European comrades of H. M. 51st to occupy the post of peril. The insolent and unmilitary, if not positively mutinous, temper displayed by the spoiled Bengalees, has found not the shadow of a counterpart at Madras.

With regard to the preparations of the Burmese we have nothing but epistolary rumours to depend upon. Armies of formidable strength are said to be in readiness at Rangoon, at Ava, at the Aeng Pass, to resist invasion, or to retaliate upon our provinces. Fancied indications of the guidance of European skill and experience have been detected by some in the foresight and prudence displayed on the fortification of Rangoon and Martaban; all those parts which might have served for cover to a besieging army have been deliberately destroyed, all the women and children removed to places of safety, while every point of the river and every approach bristles with the stockades, the construction of which is the chef d'œuvre of Burmese engineering. As we have already remarked, there is doubtless a strong spice of exaggeration in the descriptions given of the power of resistance arrayed against us; but, after every reasonable allowance has been made, there remains enough to justify the prediction, that we shall not reach the end of this war quite so easily or quite so soon as was at first expected.—Athenæum, April 13.

THE LONDON MAILS of Jan. 24th and Feb. 24th arrived at Madras on March 29th.

THE PORTO NOVO IRON WORKS.—It is melancholy to learn the condition of this enterprise. An experiment which promised magnificent results, and has been attended with vast expense, is pronounced hopeless. Its history will show how little dependence is to be placed upon European theories in the East. No man who hears for the first time of the singular advantages possessed by the association formed to work the iron mines, whether as regards the unequalled richness of the ores, the apparent extent of fuel, and the completeness of the monopoly granted by Government to them, can fail to adopt the conclusion that their venture must be eminently successful. We are very sorry that it has turned out otherwise. A correspondent writes:—"When I visited the spot, the engines had been removed; the houses fallen down; the pits partially filled up with the earth carried into them by the rains; and, with the exception of the engine chimney—which stands alone as a monument—the whole place is a melancholy ruin."—Athenæum, Mar. 22.

MERIAH SACRIFICES.—The Spectator states that Col. Campbell, agent for the suppression of Meriah sacrifices in Orissa, has returned to Russelcondah, having rescued 157 victims.

MR. ALEXANDER BAIN, barrister of the Supreme Court, who expired at the Adyar, had powers which would have extorted respect in any walk of life, and he used them so as to win the affection of all with whom he was brought in contact. He could do more than the occasion demanded, be it never so exacting, and had always a reserve of knowledge in store at the end. No man had more friends, and he husbanded his stock as if it were perpetually in danger of running short. We only speak our share in the general esteem felt for him, and have tried to express with reference to it what is cherished by society at large.—Spectator.

The three directors of the Madras Bank, who recently resigned in consequence of the discussion with the Government, have been replaced by gentlemen unconnected with the great houses—Major Smith, a military officer, Mr. P. Carstairs, an East Indian, and Mr. F. Lecot, of the firm of Amalric, Lecot, and Co.

THE FIRST APPLICATION OF STEAM POWER to a practical purpose in the Presidency, has been made, according to the Athenæum, by a native, C. V. Conniah Chetty, who has set up a steam-engine of twelve-horse power in his paper-mill. "The site," it is said, "was cleared, the requisite brickwork constructed, the engine put up, deficient fittings supplied, and the machine fairly at work in less than a month."

WORKS OF IRRIGATION.—The Spectator supplies us with two instances of the extraordinary profit which has always been obtained by our Indian Government, from works of irrigation. The Samulcottah canal, which was commenced in 1846, and finished in 1849, cost only Rs. 23,541, and, in four years, the revenue had increased by Rs. 22,630, or very nearly equal to the entire outlay. This statement is extracted from the recently published reports of the civil engineers; and in another place we are informed, that forty thousand bullocks, laden with salt alone, yearly pass over the high road between Ellore and Masulipatam for Hyderabad. From the want of sufficient bridges, the bullocks were in former times often detained for weeks by the rising of the waters, yet the bridges were not erected till 1848. The cost was only Rs. 4,029.

THE MOPLAHS.—Mr. Strange is busily engaged in prosecuting the duties of commissioner in Malabar, but we have not yet heard what are the results of his inquiries into the late outbreaks. The Moplah tangul, or primate, suspected by some to be the instigator of the disturbances, has been prevailed upon to make a pilgrimage to Mecca, for the good of his soul and the quiet of the province.—Athenæum, April 13.

PONDICHERY was visited by a hail-storm on the 24th March, during a squall from the north-east. The hail-stones, which fell in large quantities for about fifteen minutes, were generally formed of a transparent covering over a white but opaque interior, and most of them were flattened or armed with points. The largest might have been an inch and a half in diameter. Pondicherry (says Le Moniteur Officiel) has never been so visited before in the memory of man.

LIEUT. D. O'BRIEN AND ENSIGN T. G. PEACOCKE, of H. M.'s 81st regt., have been sentenced to a year's imprisonment in H. M.'s jail, and are now en route to the presidency, under an escort, for the purpose of undergoing their sentence. These are the young men who rode down an old woman in the streets of Trichinopoly a short time ago.—Athenæum, March 27.

LIEUT. JOHNSTONE.—After all the reports to the contrary, we learn that the trial of trooper Khadir Khan, for the murder of the late Lieutenant and Adjutant Johnstone, of the 3rd L. C., will take place in April, before a general court-martial, and that Major McGoun has been ordered to prosecute; Captain Pritchard taking charge of the conduct of the proceedings. The trial will take place at Secunderabad. We are rejoiced at the prospect which this decision of the authorities affords, of justice being at length brought home to the assassin.—Spectator, March 24.

BOMBAY.

BARODA AFFAIRS.

From Baroda we learn that the Guicowar continued to pay no attention whatever to the wishes of the Bombay Government, conveyed to him through the resident, to the effect that he should cause the Settanee Joetabhaee to receive an allowance monthly for maintenance, such as became her position, and pay the debts incurred by her during the period of her bondage, out of the funds of the firm. The settanee had, meanwhile, been recommended by the resident not to press matters further just at present—"in six weeks or two months more, the views of the home Government regarding her case would become known;" to the consternation, as we most fervently hope and trust, of her oppressors and their apologists and abettors.—Bombay Times, April 16.

A native friend, writing from Baroda, gives a sad account of the life which his highness the Guicowar is at present leading. The details into which our correspondent enters are totally unfit for publication. Suffice it to say, that continual hard drinking is the smallest, and least disgusting, of the list of delinquencies put on record against the maharajah. Every matter, and all business connected with the revenue of the country, is left in the hands of the minister Bhawoo Tambekur, who derives immense profits from being able to guide the state bark as he pleases. In administering justice, or rather in administering injustice, Bhawoo Tambekur is the supreme authority. His highness cares not what goes on in his country, so long as he is not tormented by business, and is allowed to indulge freely in his pleasures. It is ten thousand pities (says our correspondent) to see this fine country going to the dogs as it is. Lacs of rupees are taken out of the treasury by the Bhawoo, who makes the Maharajah believe that these sums are wanted for the purpose of bribing British functionaries in Bombay. The money of course finds its way into the private treasury of the Bhawoo, who, when he comes to be turned out of his present position and office by the British Government (which must eventually be the case), will be found to have feathered his nest in right earnest. The rumour of Lord Falkland being about to return to England, has reached Baroda. The minister gives out,—and has persuaded the Guicowar—that nothing could be more to the advantage of his highness than the presence of the Governor of Bombay in England, as thereby he (Bhawoo Tambekur) will thwart all Colonel Outram's proceedings at home. "Give me but money," says the minister to his master, "and I will disgrace Outram Sahib in every court in England."—Bom. Telegraph, April 19.

LAW.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT, MARCH 15.

In re Ragoonath Hurrychunderjee.—This case has been repeatedly before the Court. The debts in the insolvent's schedule amount to about Rs. 2,00,000, and his assets are within a very few thousand rupees of that sum. He would not be before the Court but for the failure of his principal debtor, Madhoo Rao Sahab Putwurdhun, the greatest sirdar in the southern Mahratta country, who has for the last thirty years or more been a supplicant to Government for justice, as regards the restoration to him of a vast amount of enam and other property which he claims. In 1845 this chief came to Bombay with a large retinue, with the object of pressing his claims on the personal notice of the Governor, but was referred back to the political agent. Before he could set out on his return, he was arrested and cast into the common jail of Bombay, and but for the kindness of the insolvent, who paid the amount and expenses of the writ, under the express guarantees of Mr. H. L. Anderson, he might still be in the custody of the high sheriff. Ragoonath Hurrychunderjee had paid 90,000 rupees on the chief's account, under an agreement and guarantee that he should be repaid by annual instalments of 10,000 rupees each. The first instalment is the only one ever paid. Ragoonath is now bankrupt. Madhoo Rao would pay the money if Government would only settle his account of so many years' standing.

A correspondence was read in court between the official assignee (Mr. O. W. Ketterer), Mr. Inverarity, the political agent, Belgaum, and Mr. C. Malet, the chief secretary of Government, in which the former offered to furnish, in proof of the insolvent's claim, "solemn declarations, before a justice of the peace, of the parties to whom and through whom the several payments were made," or, if that were deemed insufficient, he proposed that the political agent should issue a commission to take the evidence of these parties visd voce. The secretary (Mr. Malet) is directed by the Governor in Council to reply to these propositions that "all the political agent is to do is, to be satisfied that the claim for Rs. 90,000 was a bond fide one; that he had no legal power to issue a commission to examine witnesses; that a sum of Rs. 90,000 could not have been advanced without some receipts, vouchers, and accounts, in proof of the advances, and that, if such cannot be produced, suspicion at once arises against the bond fide nature of the claim." Mr. Ketterer replies, "of course, there are receipts and vouchers; but of what use would it be to lay them before the political agent without testimony as to the genuineness of the signatures, the payment of the money, &c.? I have all the vouchers that there ought to be in such a case, forthcoming. If they are accepted as genuine, without more, I can show them to any authority in Bombay, or can send the insolvent with them to the political agent in the Southern Mah-ratta country (if the Government will be good enough to grant him leave for that purpose); but if that officer requires more—namely, oral testimony as to their genuineness—I request that I may be informed, if solemn declarations are not accepted, in what way I am to furnish the other proofs?" The secretary rejoins that "Rughoonath Hurrychunderjee will be allowed special leave to be absent from duty, on his application coming before Government; and that the Government "perceives no necessity for pointing out how the claim can be proved, but that, on presentation to the political agent in the Southern Mahratta country of such evidence as the complainant may tender, that officer will judge of its sufficiency."

Sir Erskine Perry.—This is a very remarkable case, and I really think that Government cannot be thoroughly acquainted with the facts that are now before me. There is an insolvent whose schedule exhibits debts (due by him) to the amount of Rs. 1,75,000, and good debts (due to him) of Rs. 1,40,000, besides doubtful debts of about Rs. 1,600,—showing that, in point of fact, there is not much of a balance against the insolvent. The first debt that appears in the schedule is one of Rs. 80,000 due by the Mahratta jagheerdar, Madhoo Rao. In 1845, the insolvent obtained a decree in the Supreme Court against the jagheerdar for Rs. 90,000, being the amount of principal and interest of a loan to the jagheerdar. At a subsequent period, the insolvent appears to have advanced to the jagheerdar a further sum of Rs. 14,000, to enable him to obtain his release from jail, where he had been confined for debt. The jagheerdar eventually fixed the amount of his liabilities to the insolvent at Rs. 1,50,000, which, under an arrangement made by the assistant political agent in the Southern Mahratta country, he contracted to pay by annual instalments of Rs. 10,000. Of this sum, one instalment of Rs. 10,000 has been paid by the jagheerdar. The insolvent now comes up to this court for his release, representing that a very large sum is owing to him by Madhoo Rao. Government, however, are not satisfied that this claim is a bond fide one, although the insolvent is in possession of a decree from the Supreme Court for the greater portion of it. Of course, if Government are not satisfied that the transaction between the parties was a bond fide one, notwithstanding the decree of the Court, guaranteed by the officer of this court, they are entitled to call for a further investigation on the subject, and to take whatever evidence is necessary to substantiate the justice of the claim. If the jagheerdar was living in a country where there is an organized system of justice, Mr. Ketterer could go and get the amount of the Supreme Court's decree. No Mofussil Court would question a judgment of the Supreme Court, unless there was proof that it was fraudulently obtained; and, similarly, the Supreme Court would not question a judgment of a Mofussil Court; for each court respects the decision of the other. But this jagheerdar resides where there is no regular court of justice, to which Mr. Ketterer could carry his claim. He has, therefore, no alternative but to petition Government, relying on the judgment obtained in the insolvent's favour in the Supreme Court: Government are accordingly appealed to, and they say that they are not satisfied that the claim is a bond fide one. Upon this, the official assignee says, "What am I to do?" In fact, this is one of the most remarkable cases in my experience on this bench. A judgment of this Court is entitled to be executed in any part of the British empire, unless it has been obtained by fraud; but it can be established that the judgment in this case has not been so obtained. It seems now to be wished that the insolvent should be allowed three months more leave to go to the Southern Mahratta country, for the purpose of proving the transactions between him and the jagheerdar Madhoo Rao. But the question is, how to prove this? If he produces documents, the political officer will probably ask where the witnesses are, as receipts will not do; and it seems that this officer cannot himself examine witnesses or issue a commission for examining them in Bombay. This case is altogether a most extraordinary one, and I have had it before me in chambers several times. There are other parties who will share in the amount recovered by the insolvent from the jagheerdar, and who are now claimants in an equity suit against the insolvent. It has been suggested that, as this insolvent had a situation worth only Rs. 200 a month, it was strange how he could advance such large sums to this jagheerdar, as he says he has done. It turns out, however, that he had property of his own and also other property in trust, as executor of an estate, which he could lend, and which there was no doubt he did lend. His lordship remarked that there were great difficulties in the case. The insolvent wants his release; other parties are suing him in an equity suit; and, as for the jagheerdar, he is beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. This case has now been going on for more than a year, and the insolvent does not appear any nearer his discharge than when he first made application to the Court.

Mr. Dickenson.—The sirdar was of course amenable to the Court when here, but now he can only be treated with politically through Government.

Sir E. Perry.—The insolvent bought his release from jail to enable him to get away from the jurisdiction of the Court. I confess, I am rather surprised at the conduct of Government in this matter. The decrees of this Court run everywhere. Government doubtless are acting conscientiously, but the objection raised by them seems an insuperable bar to receiving the money unless they change their views.

Mr. Dickenson.—Then, my lord, the matter now stands adjourned for three months?

Sir E. Perry.—Why, there seems to be nothing else for it. In the meantime, however, both parties are starving—one wants to get his money, and the other to obtain his discharge:—they are in a dead lock, in fact!

The further hearing of the case was adjourned for three months.

THE LONDON MAIL of March 8th arrived at Bombay on April 3rd, per Acbar.

PASSENGERS TO ENGLAND.—The following is a list of the passengers who have taken their passages to Suez by the steamer Acbar, to leave Bombay on the 3rd of May:—Mrs. E. M. Stuart, and a child; Mrs. Fraser, and two children; Mrs. Burgess and Miss Gardiner, and two children; a lady and a child; Mrs. Jamieson; Mrs. Goldsmid; Miss Edith Stuart; Colonel Waddington; A. W. Ravenscroft, Esq.; Captain J. E. Mayne; J. Maclean Lee, Esq.; W. M. Elles, Esq.; A. Kavanagh, Esq.

THE JUBBULPORE SCHOOL OF INDUSTRY is about to add a new branch of manufactures to those formerly pursued at that institution. A Brussels carpet-weaver, with looms and all other apparatus, is now on his way out, when on his arrival this department of work will be entered on, and we have no doubt carried out successfully. We question if even Col. Sleeman or Capt. Brown, in bringing this admirable establishment into existence, contemplated ever beholding in reality a colony of professional robbers and murderers engaged in the general improvement of the arts and manufactures of the country; yet so it has been. And to like valuable ends might all similar institutions, when well managed, be turned. The native is somewhat slow in taking in matters recommended only by actual reasoning; he adopts improvements fast enough when once he has seen and satisfied himself that they really are such.—Bom. Times, March 27.

THE JEWS OF BOMBAY.—A remarkable movement has lately taken place among the Jews of Bombay, which is believed to be the forerunner of an important change in their local customs. It appears that the wealthy Jewish families of the presidency have fallen into the Oriental custom of secluding their females, and allowing them to remain without even the rudiments of education. Mr. David Sassoon, the head of their creed, has at length taken the lead in innovation, and has sent his daughters, dressed in the European style, to a female school in the island.

OUR RAILWAY is progressing rapidly. A considerable length of permanent way is now laid down, and every exertion is being made to have a single line of rails from Bombay to Tannah before the rains commence. As we observed in a former notice of the locomotive engine (which is now daily at work ballasting), the natives have given it the same name as a steamer, viz. "Ag Boat." As this was a very incorrect term for a steam-carriage, and as a proper name ought to be spread amongst the thousands of this country, Mr. Faviel has been requested to print the name on each side जगिनरथ (Agnee-ruth), or "Fire Carriage," in the Mahratta and Guzerattee languages. There is no word in those languages to express the meaning of steam, or it would have been more properly named "Steam Carriage." The curiosity of the natives continues unabated; there are thousands daily assembled to witness the engine draw up a steep incline twelve waggons loaded with ballast. They are evidently much astonished at the ease with which the driver guides the motion of such a large and powerful "horse," and the shrill whistle which it makes if the crowds do not clear the way. Every precaution is adopted by the contractors to prevent accidents, and hitherto successfully, as not the slightest injury has occurred to any one. Twelve men with sticks, headed by a European, are constantly employed to keep the crowds back, and from interfering with the progress of the works. We also observe that some enterprising native has taken advantage of the press of visitors, who spend hours near the railway, to put up a booth for the disposal of various creature comforts, such as palm-juice and cakes.—Bom. Telegraph, April 17.

THE CHARTER.—The Dyanodaya informs us, that the sirdars and other principal inhabitants of Poonah, have held several meetings to consult upon the steps to be taken with regard to the renewal of the Charter. They have received communications from the National Association of Bengal, and have appointed a committee to report on them.

JURISDICTION OF HER MAJESTY'S COURTS IN INDIA. — In a case in the Supreme Court, the council for the plaintiff excused himself for not having subpoenaed a certain witness upon the ground that the man was residing at Belgaum, and the Court had no jurisdiction over him. Whereupon the Chief Justice (Sir Erskine Perry) said: "Without meaning to argue the matter, I yet have very little doubt that, either in a civil or criminal case, this Court has power to subpoena any witness residing in the Mofussil."

MR. WILLIAM SMYTTAN, accountant of the Bank of Bombay, died, somewhat unexpectedly, at Mahabuleshwur, on the 29th of March. Mr. Smyttan had been connected with the Bank since its formation, having arrived here as its first deputy accountant. He succeeded to the office of accountant in succession to Mr. John Stuart, who was promoted to his present office of secretary and treasurer when Mr. Cargill retired to found the Bank of Western India.—Ibid.

THE FAKKER NOOR-OD-DEEN.—We regret to announce the death, at Lahore, on the 27th March, of Saïud Fakker Noor-od-Deen, a native gentleman of great influence and much consideration, and well known to Lahore tourists and to readers of their works. He has held high offices during the several reigns of Runjeet Sing, Kuruk Sing, Shere Sing, and Dhuleep Sing, and was a member of the Council of Regency, formed on the conclusion of the treaty of Bhairuowal. He was distinguished for the suavity of his manner, and was altogether one of the most respectable members of the former Lahore Durbar.—Bombay Telegraph, April 17.

COTTON FRAUDS.—A very important omission seems to have been made in constructing the act against false packing of cotton. Very severe penalties are imposed against the offence, but no arrangements whatever are made to discover when it has been committed. In India, where the sympathies of the natives seem in so many cases to be so much more on the side of the criminal than the law, to look for the assistance of the common informer is the most visionary thing imaginable; and, accordingly, false packing never flourished more vigorously than at this moment. Stones, dirt, kuppas, and every conceivable kind of adulteration, is to be met with in a large proportion of the bales on our greens; and what is wanted is a body of authorized searchers, receiving a salary from Government, and a gratuity in addition for every case of false packing that they discover.—Bombay Times, April 16.

CHILD-STEALING.—A private letter from Ahmedabad informs us that the foudjar of that city, Chuggenal Jadovai, has lately made a discovery that there exists—and has existed for years back—a regularly organized body of child-stealers in Ahmedabad. Chuggenal has long had his suspicions regarding the manner in which female children have frequently disappeared in Guzerat, but it is only lately that he has been able to lay his hands on the real culprits. It appears that Baroda, Cambay, and the Hubshee's country, are the great marts to which these dealers in human flesh resort. Not only are girls stolen by these miscreants, but young grown-up women are also often carried off, and sold as slaves to rich natives at Hyderabad (Scinde) and elsewhere. After the battle of Hyderabad, a sepoy belonging to one of the Bombay regiments discovered, amongst the women of the ameers, his own wife, whom he lost some fifteen years before, at a village in the Konkan, and whom he believed to have been drowned. This same foudjar, Chuggenal, is the man who, owing to some of his enemies obtaining the ear of certain officials in Bombay, was for a considerable time suspended from his situation, and was not restored for a long time after he was found to be wholly innocent of the infamous charges brought against him. Through his exertions several very heavy gang-robberies have lately been discovered and brought to justice.—Bombay Telegraph, April 17.

CEYLON.

THE LONDON MAILS of Jan. 24th and Feb. 24th arrived at Ceylon on March 27th.

The Governor is still in Kandy, where he has been joined within the last few days by the members of the Executive Council. Their consultations doubtless refer chiefly to the approaching session of the Legislative Council and the measures to be brought forward. There seems to be no doubt that the Law Reform Ordinances will be greatly altered.

The Waterloo has carried away a large number of passengers from our shores. Amongst the rest,—the aged commander of the forces, Lieut. General Smelt. Col. Frazer, of course, as senior officer, takes the command until the arrival of a major general.—Colombo Obs., April 14.

THE OVERDUE MAIL.—The Ganges arrived at Hong-Kong on March 27th without the London Mail of Jan. 24th, in consequence of the detention of the Haddington, disabled at Suez. The steamer Singapore, with the missing mail, together with the subsequent mail of Feb. 24th, had, however, reached Singapore on the 3rd ult. on her way to China.

We are without any particular intelligence from the provinces, although the usual number of reports of a belligerent nature are continually arriving. We give the following letter from an esteemed correspondent:—

"I do not think it necessary to enter into any long argument to prove the existence of a rebellion going on in the adjoining province of Kwang-se, though there may be some room for dispute as to its extent and importance. A reference to the Pekin Gazette, to say nothing of other sources of information, at once settles the former point, and of the latter I think there is sufficient evidence to satisfy any candid person. For some time past, I have had frequent opportunities of conversing with intelligent natives, who have all agreed in saying that the disturbance in question has become a matter of serious importance, and a cause of great difficulty and embarrassment to the provincial government, as well as a source of anxiety to the emperor himself. It is of importance, too, to notice, whilst speaking of these official documents, that the term 'rebel' is now used instead of 'robber' or 'bandit,' hitherto employed in the several articles referring to the disturbances in Kwang-se. It is also an undoubted fact that the inland navigation to the westward of Canton is much impeded, and in some places altogether stopped. We have also the fact of an unusual demand on foreign dealers for various munitions of war, especially rockets and shells, which, had they been in the market, would have brought very high prices from the agents of both the contending parties. We must also take into consideration the evidently declining energy of the present rulers of China.—It is now more than 200 years since they conquered the country, and it is seldom that a dynasty lasts so long.—A sure proof of their weakness is their now invariable attempt to put down any petty bands of pirates or robbers by endeavouring to win over the ringleaders by conferring on them honours and rewards, instead of the punishment with which they had in the first instance threatened them. From all history we learn that such a state of things has never lasted long without some great and fundamental change occurring, and we have no reason to expect anything different from what has been. In conclusion I would beg to assure your readers that there is indeed a rebellion going on, not very far from Canton; slowly it may be for a time, but surely, and certain at no very distant period (though not perhaps so soon as you might lead one to suppose) to lead to most important results."—Friend of China, March 30.

For many months past, the Manchow premier Saishangah has been in person with the army in Kwang-se, and the most noted generals in the empire have been employed with him, but they have only succeeded in confining the disorder within Kwang-se, and not in crushing it. At one time it threatened to extend into the province of Hoo-na, and a most abundant harvest throughout Central China last year, perhaps availed more in arresting its progress than all the efforts of government could effect.

Our sympathies, we must confess, are entirely on the side of the existing government. The native dynasties could never have achieved a position so great, powerful, and predominant among the neighbouring nations and tribes, as the empire has attained under the Manchows. It has rather been united with them at the sacrifice of its native rulers, than subjected to their sway, and this union of the warlike northern tribes with the pacific sons of Han, relieved the latter from untold miseries, and terminated a warfare of two thousand years. But had the Manchows proved a curse, rather than a glory and a blessing, to this great empire, we should be loth, we admit, to raise our voice in aid of the "sacred right of insurrection;" and believing, as we do, that there is less of arrogance, bigotry, and conceit in the Manchows than amongst the Chinese, and that the country suffers most from the rapacity of officers of the native race, we cannot desire to see any encouragement held out to revolt in favour of any pretender, but, on the contrary, we sincerely wish the government success in quieting these disturbances.—North China Herald, March 13.

In Hong-Kong the troops continued healthy, though the weather has been very unfavourable. The journals are full of the trial of the Erix's case, brought against the Peninsular and Oriental Company, for illegally selling cargo and retaining proceeds. A verdict had been given against the company. The emigration to California is still in progress. Upwards of fifty ships have sailed, taking, it is estimated, about 15,000 emigrants.

Sir George Bonham had taken his departure for England in the Ganges for a temporary absence. An address from the residents and merchants of the colony and Canton had been presented to him.

Major-General Jervois will assume the government and all the functions of Sir George Bonham till the arrival of the January mail, which it is supposed will bring Dr. Bowring's commission as plenipotentiary and chief superintendent of trade.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The last accounts are to the 1st of April from Cape Town. H.M.'s steamer Hydra, which left Plymouth on the 10th of February, had arrived with Lieut.-General the Hon. G. Cathcart and suite the day before. His Excellency was to proceed forthwith to the seat of war, from whence the intelligence is, on the whole, more satisfactory; Sir Harry Smith had entered the Waterkloof, and seemed determined to follow the enemy to the Amatola mountains, where they were assembled under Sandilli. The following "memorandum of movements" had been published by Sir Harry, dated Seven Kloof Point, Amatolas, Camp, 24th March:—

"The columns under Cols. Michel, Eyre, and Perceval, will have this day completed the movements previously ordered in the Inner Amatolas for the expulsion of the rebel Gaikas, and will thus continue to prosecute this service. Col. Michel will establish the base of his operations at Fort Cox. Col. Eyre will march via Fort White, and establish himself near his old camp in the Keiskamma Hoek, as the base of his operations. Col. Perceval will march via Fort White, and, as the base of his operations, establish himself on the Quilli Quilli Range. Col. Pole will march via Fort White and King William's Town, and, with a corps of cavalry, levies, and Fingoes, establish himself on the Kabousie Neck. These corps will daily despatch strong patrols in every direction from their respective bases, so as to render the Amatolas too hot for the rebels to remain in them. The garrison of Fort Peddie will frequently patrol the Fish River bush; the garrison of Fort Brown, the Ecce bush; and the garrisons of Fort Hare, Blinkwater Post, Post Relief, Eland's Post, and Whittlesea, will patrol their respective neighbourhoods with vigour and activity. Meanwhile, Major-General Somerset, with his field force of regular soldiers, levies, and burghers, will act upon the north side of the Amatolas, penetrating these mountains daily, and communicating with the Cradock burghers under Commandant Gilfillan, and with the cavalry under Col. Pole, on the Kabousie Neck."

The Cape Town Mail, in its summary of events, includes the following incidents since the departure of the previous monthly mail steamer:—

Some days before the time fixed for the burgher muster, a portion of the forces belonging to Major-Gen. Somerset's division were detached, and thrown into a position of much peril in the Waterkloof, where, after destroying some huts and killing a number of Caffres, they were attacked at a disadvantage on their return by a large body of the enemy, and during a conflict of several hours, before the arrival of support, they sustained considerable loss. The troops engaged were, 300 of the 91st regt., under Col. Yarborough, 150 of the 74th, and 70 of the Cape Corps. Col. Yarborough was severely wounded, one sergeant and three men were killed, and Ens. Hibbert, three sergeants, and eleven men wounded. The 74th Highlanders had one killed and four wounded, and Capt. Bramley, of the Cape Mounted Rifles, was also wounded. On their return to camp, the Caffres immediately reoccupied the ground whence it had been so ineffectually attempted to dislodge them.

On the following day, the 5th March, Sir H. Smith advanced from King William's Town, with about 2,500 men, in three columns, under Cols. Pole, Michel, and Eyre, and entered the Waterkloof. Here a number of desultory operations appear to have taken place, the results of which have not been made public in any connected form. It would appear that the enemy generally avoided meeting the troops; and although considerable numbers must have fallen, by the shells thrown among them wherever they were seen in numbers, it is believed that the main body succeeded in joining Sandilli and his followers in the Amatolas,—a stronghold which they have held throughout the war, and whither Sir Harry, by the latest accounts, was engaged in following them up.

One of Macomo's principal retreats in the Waterkloof, previously deemed impracticable for European troops, was successfully penetrated by the column under Eyre, but the enemy disappeared, leaving in our hands a large quantity of stores and about 130 women, one of them the principal wife of Macomo, with three of his children.

In a later affair, in the Waterkloof, the Hon. H. Wrottesley, 43rd regt., lost his life, and ten privates of the 91st were wounded.

The operations of the column under Col. Michel are spoken of as highly successful; but at no point, it appears, did the Caffres make any decided stand. This part of the force does not seem to have met with any opposition; and although it was known that the ravines and kloofs were swarming with Caffres ready to cut off stragglers or take advantage of any unguarded movement, the whole of the Waterkloof was traversed for days, the troops destroying the enemy's huts and crops, without a single casualty.

At the date of the last reports from the front, these operations were still being carried on. Great numbers of Caffres are constantly reported to have been killed, chiefly by the shells and other projectiles with which their haunts are assailed; and many of their women and children have also been unfortunately destroyed by those means. Still, no indication is given of a wish on their part to submit, and the prospect of a satisfactory peace seems as remote as ever. Nor is their mode of carrying on the war in any degree relieved of its inhuman character. To give or accept quarter is unknown in Caffre tactics. Our men, whether colonists or soldiers, who fall alive into their hands, are put to a death of torture, more or less protracted, according to their opportunity of wreaking their horrid vengeance undisturbed. It has been ascertained that Sergeant Laing, of the 91st, who was taken by them in the affair of the 4th, was roasted alive; and the bandmaster of the 74th (Mr. Harting), who also fell into their ruthless hands, was for three days subjected to every conceivable method of torture before death put an end to his sufferings. A satisfactory feature in the aspect of frontier affairs is the almost entire absence of depredations within the border, the marauding bands who formerly infested the eastern districts having been apparently recalled to assist their chiefs.

In the Orange River Sovereignty, everything was quiet by the last accounts.

From Port Natal there is very encouraging news. A Mr. Morewood had succeeded in the cultivation of the cane, and has manufactured sugar of a very superior quality. Copper has, it is said, been discovered within twenty miles of Pieter Maritzburg.

H.M.'s steamer Rhadamanthus had started for the mouth of the Orange river, for the purpose of intercepting a quantity of gunpowder, said to have been shipped in Ireland, on board French or American vessels, for the use of the Caffres.

The Draught Constitutional Ordinance had at last passed the Legislative Council, but in a considerably amended form; the alterations made in Lord Grey's draught being the increase of the number required to form a quorum in each House; altering the 25l. franchise to a higher one; increasing the property qualification of members for the Upper House, and permitting government officers to vote as electors.

Forty-nine bodies had been washed up from the wreck of the unfortunate Birkenhead, and buried. One of them was recognised as that of Dr. Lang, staff-surgeon, by a gold watch and 18l. in money which he had about his person.

H.M.'s steamer Megara, with the 1st battalion of the Rifle Brigade, under Col. Buller, C.B., reached Cape Town on the 23rd March, after a long passage of seventy-six days from Plymouth. During the last part of her voyage the men were put upon half rations. The greatest anxiety had been felt for her safety.

Major-Gen. Somerset is to be succeeded in the command on the frontier by Major-Gen. Yorke.

There can be no question that the terms of Lord Grey's despatch to Sir Harry Smith are the most severe of which any superior officer can avail himself towards his subordinate; but whilst we make this admission, and are of opinion that unnecessary harshness has been used by the Colonial Minister towards the victim of his own perverseness, impartiality demands the painful admission that Sir Harry Smith has himself been the willing instrument of his fall. Many of the circumstances that have conducted to it are directly chargeable to his heartless judge; but notwithstanding this, the fact cannot be overlooked that he was willing at all times to execute his master's commands and suggestions, without having the moral courage to deviate therefrom in the least particular, or even to thwart the designs of his subordinate in office, Mr. Secretary Montagu.—Zuid-Afrikaan, Mar. 29.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

At a meeting of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, on the 3rd of March, an extract from a letter of Capt. Layard was read as follows:—

"My short visit to Gour has been one of much interest to me, although from being obliged to return to the duties of my office, I was unable to complete my sketches and inquiries in the southern suburbs of the city, near Chandnee. I was fortunately able to visit the whole of the northern portion of the ruins, as far as Gungarampore on the banks of the Kalindree, which I take to be the most ancient part of the city, or rather the Gour of the Hindoos, previous to the invasion of the Musulman conqueror, Mahommed Bukhtyar. Besides sketches of all the ruins, I have taken drawings of many remains of architecture, of columns, cornices, friezes, &c., scattered about the jungles, and built into mosques, &c., also of many ancient and curious sculptures, which, with the kind assistance of Mr. Gray, of Goamutty, I have been able to collect. The principal sculptures I have to offer now, consist of a very beautifully carved image of Soorija, highly relieved and surrounded by numerous smaller figures, standing on the car drawn by the seven coursers of the Tum, driven by Arun; the height of the principal figure is about 2½ feet. Coleman, in his mythology of the Hindoos, gives a description of Soorija and drawing of an image at Benares (if I remember right); but this sculpture, which I was fortunate enough to find in the jungle near Gungarampore, appears to be far superior, and much more elaborately ornamented than that described by Coleman, or even those mentioned in Buchanan Hamilton's work. Next to this stone, I must mention one found by Mr. Gray, which represents a female figure lying on a richly-ornamented couch, with an infant by its side; the lady is being shampooed by a female attendant. There are several other figures on the stone, and amongst them a row of presiding deities on the upper portion; the whole is beautifully carved in very high relief, and very slightly mutilated. I have another portion of a stone representing the same scene as the above, but very much smaller, and much destroyed by having been cut up. There are several other sculptures, more or less ancient and curious. I have taken impression on cloth of all the inscriptions lying about the jungles or fixed on the mosques, which I will try and decipher. There are also some copper coins which I was fortunate enough to pick up (mostly from coolies who dig for bricks), and which may lead to some information regarding the sketches of Gour."

A very interesting native picture by a Burmese artist, formerly attached to the royal court at Ava, was presented by Dr. A. Thomas, of Ramree, by whom it is thus described:—"On one side of the picture is represented the royal palace and the royal monastery, the priests in their sacerdotal garb, the white elephant, &c. &c., are all shown. On the other side is a grand procession showing that a lad is about to enter the order of priesthood. This picture, while it affords us some partial insight into the rites and ceremonies of the Burmese religion, shows also what the artistic powers of a semi-civilized nation are," &c.

At a meeting of the Bombay branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, held on the 11th March, a copper-plate charter was laid before the society, respecting which the Rev. P. Anderson stated as follows:—

"I place upon the table for inspection two copper-plates forwarded to me from Guzerat by A. Kinlock Forbes, Esq., who writes thus:—'I procured them from the aunt of the present thakoor of Wulleb, after unheard-of difficulties. The old lady had shown them to several wise men of the East, who, as they knew nothing about the contents, merely returned them with the remark, that the treasure alluded to in them was not in her naseeb. She made me promise to return them with my own hands, and let her know what the meaning of the inscriptions is—also she insisted that the thakoor should pledge his word that, when the treasure was found, she should have a fourth share. All which stipulations having been agreed to with due solemnity, she remarked that she had four or five other such, which I might see when the present was returned. They told me the plates were dug up with the others in the middle of the ruins at Walleb, fifteen or twenty years ago.' The letters on the plates, it will be perceived, can nowhere be very distinctly traced, and in many parts are quite illegible; however, I have ascertained that this is a grant of land made by King Siladitya, of Valabbhipura. A genealogical list of kings is given as usual, and their names are distinctly traceable; they are as follows:—

1. Guha Sena.
2. His son Dhura Sena.
3. His son Siladitya.
4. His younger brother Isbara Gralia.
5. His son Dhara Sena.
6. His younger brother Dhruva Sena.
7. His son Dhara Sena.
8. His son Dhruva Sena.

This list is precisely the same as that given in the Bengal Asiatic Society's Journal, vol. vii. p. 967, and three-fourths of their plates are similar to those of which an account is there given. The actual grant contained in the latter part of the inscription now before the society is illegible, but perhaps some members of the society may be able to decipher more than I have succeeded in deciphering. Siladitya is a family name, and probably the donor in this instance is Dhruva Sena; but it appears to be impossible to ascertain this with any degree of certainty."

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—I lately had an opportunity of communicating with Professor Lassen on the vexed question of Zend authenticity. Finding that the learned professor, in a portion of the text of the Vendidad, just published by him, had omitted any notice of the Pahlavi version of the work, I requested his acceptance of some extracts from it, which contained both the Zend text and the Pahlavi translation; forwarding to him, at the same time, the three letters which appeared, under the signature of "KAMGAR," in Allen's Indian Mail of the 19th September, 19th November, and 17th December, 1851. I also referred Professor Lassen to the fact of Professor Westergaard having recently relinquished faith in the Pahlavi as a genuine language; transcribing, with this intent, a few lines from my letter to Dr. Wilson, relating to the subject, as they appear in Allen's Indian Mail of the 17th March last.

By Professor Lassen I was favoured with an answer, courteous and candid; and, adverting to the opinions held by me, he thus expresses himself:—"Professor Lassen regrets very much that he cannot subscribe to Mr. Romer's view of the Zend language, which he considers to be a genuine one, chiefly on the following two grounds. In the first place, it agrees so intimately in its system of consonants with the ancient Persian, that it must be considered to have been a sister language, chiefly distinguished by its vowel system, which exhibits several distinct traces of a more modern state. It would, in the second place, be necessary to suppose, if the Zend language was fictitious, that the Parsees possessed a knowledge of comparative grammars, the Zend being rich in regular Indo-Germanic analogies."

To this I replied that, putting the Zend and Persian,—without adverting to a common parent, and remembering, according to Kennedy, that the last was without affinities,—in the relationship of sisters, was new to me; and that with Anquetil du Perron's and Colonel Rawlinson's conflicting opinions, as to whether Zend was the parent of Persian or Persian the parent of Zend, added to the conclusions of Richardson, Sir William Jones, and Kennedy, that the language called Zend was no true language at all, a fourth view was now disclosed, which certainly was worthy of further examination. I went on to say that it did not appear clear to me that the agreement of the Zend, in its consonantal system, with that of the Persian, established the fact of their being sisters, for the same might be said of the "Asmani Zuban." Further, it could not be doubted that the Persian language, for some time after the Arabian conquest, continued to be written in its ancient indigenous character, the same which is now used for writing Zend, and is occasionally similarly employed at this day. But above all, as the vowel system of the ancient Persian character is identical with that of the Sanskrit, this must have contributed largely to the facility of framing the Zend, which has also borrowed sundry aspirated consonants from the Sanskrit, under forms of letters unknown to the old Persian alphabet. Finally, I said, in regard to the abundance of Zend analogies with Indo-Germanic languages, I thought this could only occur when the Zend words could be traced to derivations from vocables of pure or corrupted Sanskrit, with which, as is known, an intimate connection with these languages exists.

M. Lassen, as he states, having no accurate knowledge of Pahlavi, declined offering any opinion on Professor Westergaard's view of it. To obtain the opinion of the former on this point, I entertained hopes that by the examination of the Pahlavi (which we may now assume to be spurious) with the Zend, considered by M. Burnouf to be an indispensable adjunct to the last, when he says (Prof. Yacmi, xxiii.):—"On donc regarder comme un fait certain, quoiqu'il manque à cette assertion la preuve la plus décisive, c'est à dire, la comparaison du texte Pehlvi lui-même avec la traduction Sanakrite, que la travail de Neriosangh est une copie fort exacte de la version Pehlvi qui existait il y a trois siècles dans la Guzerate,"—some light might be struck out to guide us in the investigation; but, from two causes, I regret to add, this satisfaction has been denied,—first, from Professor Lassen declining to enter upon an examination of the authenticity of the Pahlvi; and then, from a continued silence of some duration, the probability of his not intending to favour me with further communications having occurred.

I have not, however, judged it necessary, because of this but partial success, to withhold the above notice of the present state of the Zend question.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, May 18, 1852.

THE Indian journals, received by the present mail, are greatly incensed at the strictures passed by some of those of London upon the eagerness with which, as the latter imagined, Lord Dalhousie and his government had embarked in another Burmese war. "Even journalists who could dwell pathetically on the very apocryphal wrongs of Don Pacifico," observes the Delhi Gazette, "appear to have no sympathy for their countrymen who have been plundered, imprisoned, and put to the torture by the insolent governor of Rangoon." We agree with the Indian editors that Lord Dalhousie has experienced a good deal of injustice upon this score, and that, with better information, his English critics would have seen that, if his lordship has erred, it has been on the side of too great forbearance. That the Burmese court has been for a long time careless about maintaining amicable relations with the Government of British India, was no secret; and that the former was ready for and desirous of a war, is manifest from the tone of its messages, the insolence of its local functionaries, and the promptitude with which strong forces were brought to bear upon all the points likely to be menaced by the British. It is even hinted that the Burmese have received encouragement from enemies of our power in India to persevere in their determination to come into collision with us; but this we do not believe.

Every one in the least familiar with the policy and habits of thinking of Eastern potentates knows very well that if once a notion is entertained by one of them that he can steal a march upon his neighbour by a little bit of war, nothing will do but beating it out of him. Remonstrance, argument, entreaty, every form of negotiation, will be regarded as a confession of weakness. Artifice may suggest a temporizing policy, for the purpose of gaining time, or securing some advantage; but the ultima ratio must be hostilities, and nothing else.

All experience has shown this; in the case of Burmah, the last war was a case absolutely in point. The expedition of 1824 was notoriously delayed, through the pacific policy of preceding Indian Governments, several years too late; and the unwillingness of Lord Dalhousie to engage in another Burmese war has only given the court of Ava four months' warning, and time to collect its military resources, and to strengthen its maritime defences.

The great aim of the assailant, in all emergencies of this kind, and especially in Eastern hostilities, should be to act promptly; and it is on this account, no doubt, that the force already despatched to Rangoon is upon so small a scale, compared with the armament of 1824. The time did not permit of collecting a larger body of troops,—if the intention be to withdraw the army before the sickly season, that is another reason,—and the object was to suffer as little time to elapse between the determination to commence war and the appearance of the invading army at the scene of attack.

Our present purpose, however, is merely to join our protest to that of the Indian journals against an imputation upon the Indian Government to which it is not obnoxious.

In spite of many provocations and temptations, the nations of Europe seem to be governed by one common resolution to abstain from war. Since the final overthrow of Napoleon, nearly forty years ago, besides those incentives which, in antecedent times, were wont, slight as they were, to rouse the angry passions of rival nations and bring them into collision, there have not been wanting grave subjects of dispute, the peaceable adjustment of which can only be attributed to a general wish to shun an appeal to arms.

This happy disposition is not, we fear, the pure result of moral causes,—a sense of the responsibilities which attach to the authors of an unjust war; of the social evils and calamities of which the most necessary war is the parent; or of the folly of resorting to such an extremity,—which brings down civilized societies to the level of savages,—until every other form of arbitrement had been tried and had failed. It is to be traced, probably, to less generous motives,—to policy; in other words, to self-interest.

It is obvious that the spirit of forbearance, which operates with such beneficial effect in Europe, extends no farther; that the states of that continent and of America impose no restraint upon their belligerent propensities without the charmed circle of the old world's politics. England is at this moment carrying on two wars in India and another at the Cape of Good Hope; the United States has lately been engaged in hostilities with Mexico, and is now seeking a quarrel with Japan. There must, therefore, be some other reasons besides a conscientious abhorrence of war,—which is as hateful in one hemisphere as another,—for its fortunate tendency to disavow in Europe.

What has taken place in France during the last five months will illustrate the preceding remarks. The coup d'état in December would, at an earlier period of modern history, have set all the military powers of Europe, ourselves included, about getting up their armaments to the war point. When that is done,—and here we concur with Mr. Cobden,—the slightest friction is sufficient to cause such a vast collection of combustible materials to explode. It seems, as if to incur the cost of raising a large army without doing something, would be the submitting to a positive loss; and when military powers are prepared for war, they are too prone to go to war, especially if they see a rival power in a less forward state of preparation. Yet there was no indication of a desire to fly to arms last year. Fulminations, amounting almost to threats, were, indeed, published in some of the German journals, which averred that any symptom of aggressive revolution would summon into action "hundreds of thousands of bayonets," with no other end, however, than that of confining the eruption to its own crater. But we are not aware that a single soldier was added to the armies of the Continent.

This fact goes far to prove that the political caprices of a single state will not, as in times past, provoke the interference of its neighbours; that the doctrine, at once irrational and unjust, that a people cannot change their form of internal government without the permission of other nations, is exploded; and that each state may alter, modify, improve, or, if it pleases, deteriorate, its own institutions, so long as the changes do not directly menace the tranquillity of other states, or disturb the balance of power. This is not only a just principle of international law, but the true policy and interest of every state; and the recognition of this principle extinguishes one of the most fruitful sources of continental wars in bygone years.

Here, then, we find one cause of the pacific temper of the European states. But there is another cause, allied to the former, which operates upon these states individually, and checks any manifestation of a policy adverse to their aggregate interests. This is not a principle referable to fear; it originates in the same sentiment of self-interest; it is the desire not to give offence where there is no eagerness to take offence, with the conviction that to afford a just and reasonable ground of resistance or resentment would combine all Europe against the state that should defy its general opinion. Hence, the Danish question, which has tended more nearly than any other to excite a continental war,—and which did lead to actual hostilities,—has been adjusted by the submission of the disputants to the arbitration of other powers.

But, in our opinion, the most pregnant proof of the readiness of individual states to conform to the opinion of their neighbours, and in matters, moreover, apparently touching their internal regulation, in respect to which each state is its own judge, is furnished by the recent military fête, "on the distribution of the eagles," in the Champs de Mars at Paris. Few persons who have watched the course of events in France, from the period when Louis Napoleon assumed absolute power down to the present, can entertain more doubt than the Count de Chambord, that the secret aim of the present ruler of that country is to transmute his title of "President" into that of "Emperor." He may have substantial reasons for this change. It is not to be necessarily concluded that he is actuated solely by personal considerations; he may be conscientiously persuaded that the good of his country is connected inseparably with his retention of the supreme power, which can only be insured by his being clothed with a sovereign title transmissible in his family. But whatever be his motive, he has halted in the pursuit of his object, which that fête was obviously designed to realize, not on account of any anticipated opposition amongst the people, still less in the army, who are upon pretty good grounds believed to be eager for its accomplishment. The reason is to be discovered in that deference which each of the Continental rulers is now accustomed to pay to the opinions of other states. The opposition of the two emperors to the assumption by Louis Napoleon of a similar title,—though jealousy may mingle as an element,—is avowedly founded upon the belief that the idea of "empire" in France, and especially in the French army, is indissolubly associated with certain territorial limits that must be won back by force. In short, the "empire" and "war" are supposed to be so nearly related, that the advent of the one should inspire at least an apprehension of the other. Hence our, too, own Militia Bill.

Some very acute politicians in this country,—probably with the view of palliating inconsistencies, and mystifying constituents,—have endeavoured to distinguish between aggressive war and defensive war. The distinction can be made out only by a verbal juggle. All wars are both aggressive and defensive,—aggressive on the side of the wrongdoer, defensive on that of the party wronged; but both the belligerents invariably assume to be in the latter category: war is resorted to upon the plea that there is no other mode by which the wronged party can obtain justice. An assailant, and therefore an aggressive party, in war, may resort to that alternative as purely in self-defence, to recover a right, as a plaintiff in a suit at law.

The result is, that the basis, upon which the public peace of Europe now rests, is far more secure than any which the reveries of peace-mongers can furnish, since it is built upon the recognised interest of all the nations of that Continent. When the whole world shall be brought into the same condition as Europe,—when the motives which we have supposed to be the actuating principles of its rulers shall operate in Asia, Africa, and America,—then, and not till then, we may look for the halcyon era of universal peace.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—The Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette (8th May, 1852), regarding the 38th regiment Bengal Light Infantry, and as to the discipline of the Bengal army, recommends "renovating it (its discipline) by reforming the regiments and enlisting the sepahes for general service!" It does not appear that the Editor understands the system adopted in the Bengal army. We have no sea-board to defend in Bengal, like the Coromandel and Malabar coasts. The Bengal operations have been chiefly confined to inland warfare. I will detail some of the occasions when Bengal troops have been employed on foreign service beyond sea. In 1781, when Sir E. Coote left Calcutta by sea, with a reinforcement of Europeans and artillery, to take the command of the army against Hyder Ali Khan, as the sepoys did not like to go by sea, Col. T. D. Pearce (Bengal artillery) marched via Midnapore, in February, 1781, by land, through Cuttack, and joined before the battle of Porto Novo: these were regular battalions, near 5,000 men. In 1791, when Lord Cornwallis went to Seringapatam to assume the command of the army, Lieut. col. Cockereil marched overland to Seringapatam with several (four) battalions of sepoys—regular corps. In 1799, the last attack on Tipoo, there were three battalions of volunteers sent. In 1801, a battalion of volunteers went to Egypt. In 1810, two volunteer battalions were sent to the Isle of France. In 1811, the 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, and light volunteer battalions went from Calcutta to Java. In 1801, Bombay sent sepoys, but not Madras; in 1811, there were only Bengal sepoys sent. Bengal sent, in 1818, volunteers to Ceylon. In 1840, Bengal sent a volunteer corps of sepoys to China; Madras sent regular corps. The mode has always been to publish a general order, calling upon a certain corps (nearest the presidency, and not far up the country) to volunteer, and a company was sent from each corps, with a captain and subaltern, who also volunteered, and went according to seniority.

On the return of the three volunteers from Seringapatam, in 1800, Lord Wellesley formed them into the 18th and 19th Bengal N.I., now the 36th, 37th, 38th, and 39th N.I.: these corps are marked, in consequence, volunteers. After the Burmese war, certain corps were made general service corps; the 36th was not one of them. The 25th and 40th N.I. were battalions of the old 20th (or marine regiment); they and the general service corps may be ordered to go on service beyond sea.* The sepoy in Bengal do not enlist, except in the above corps, for foreign service.

In former times, the militia were enlisted for counties. An Act was passed for general service in any county; and last, to serve out of England,—and they did go to Ireland. The Bengal army has seventy-four corps of N.I.; Madras and Bombay (fifty-two and twenty-nine) eighty-one regiments. Surely there are plenty of corps to be sent from Madras. In the late war on the Sutlej (1845-46), Madras took some of our stations; and Bengal might, in the case of a Burmese war, take Madras stations. It would be very difficult (I believe impossible) to enlist sepoy for all the regiments to serve on expeditions by sea; and the few (G.S.) corps they have in Bengal are not all kept near the presidency. We must defer to prejudices. The mutiny in the Bengal 47th N.I. (Barrackpore), in 1824, arose chiefly from the circumstance of the men not being able to procure carriage. The commanding officer reported the case to the adjutant-general, who kept the letter in his desk! In the mutiny of the light infantry battalion at Java, in 1815, the sepoy had been not well treated. The G.O.C.C. (Bengal) 12th Dec. 1810, said, "To have the same indulgences as were granted to the volunteers" who went to Egypt. "After the service (Java) shall be over, they will be permitted to return to the battalions from which they were received, or to join any other corps to which they give the preference." The volunteers to Egypt (1801) returned in 1802. The Java volunteers sailed from Calcutta in April, 1811; Cornhill was taken in August, and certainly by 1814 there was no serious opposition. The mutiny broke out in October, 1815, when the sepoy had been four years and a half absent. It is not fair to keep sepoy away from their homes for so long a period. (The Isle of France volunteers did not stay beyond eighteen months.) The sepoy at Java thought they were destined to be permanently kept on the island. The option should have been given to the men, and others sent to supply the places of those wishing to go, after three years had elapsed. Of these general service corps, I was told by the adjutant of one, that the commanding officer thought it would please Government to report that the regiment wished to be a general service† corps. Just speaking a sabadar, who said "Very well," the corps was so reported; whereas the corps ought to have asked on a general parade. The adjutant said, "Some day the Government will find that the regiment never consented." The commanding officer and adjutant are dead.

At present, I shall pass over the Editor's proposition to dismiss the native officers, and give four European officers to each company of sepoy; nor notice the plan of eight European (Company's) regiments for Bengal, six for Madras, and five for Bombay, besides the Queen's regiments. The plan is not feasible; and if it were, any distrust of our sepoy would be very dangerous—forty years' service in India assures me of this fact.

A BENGAL OFFICER.

PROSPECTS OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION IN INDIA.—The Madras Athenæum mentions that the lawyers of that presidency are in a state of lamentable destitution; that there are not more cases than barristers, and that all able-bodied barristers and attorneys should embark for the diggings, rather than stay to be starved in Madras. "We cannot recommend them to come here," says a Calcutta paper, "for we have more cats than catch mice already; and though game is still plentiful, it is not equally distributed." The Madras judges having nothing to do, the Athenæum recommends that they should work at the Sudder, by way of doing something for their salaries.

It is a rule with the aborigines of Australia to destroy their half-caste children (i.e. by white fathers) immediately after birth, and instances of the kind at the hands even of the mother, Mr. Schmidt says, have come under his own notice. On one occasion, a mother, in excuse for destroying her child, said "it was half white." Half-caste boys, the magistrates at Dungog stated, are believed to be always murdered.

* The 40th N.I. now sent.

† I shall know the cause of the corps not going, as wished, in a short time, most likely.

RECAL OF SIR H. SMITH.

In the London Gazette of May 11th is published a despatch, addressed by Sir H. Smith to Earl Grey, dated "Camp, Blinkwater, March 17th," in which he acknowledges the reception of his lordship's despatch of the 14th January, notifying to him his recal. "At that period, however," Sir Harry continues, "such were the prospects of this war, and so rapid the progression towards that state of things which can alone perpetuate peace, that a sense of the duty which has guided me in the service of my Sovereign and country for so many years, induced me to persevere in the preparatory steps I had taken for the expulsion from certain strongholds within the colony of the rebel Gaikas and Hottentots under the wily chief Macomo, a renegade from the authority of his paramount chief Sandilli; as also for expelling the Gaika tribes from British Caffraria, and driving them over the Great Kei." He then details the operations against the enemy from the 4th to the 17th March, on which day the columns of Lieut. cols. Michel and Eyre, under Sir Harry's immediate command, were to move, with five days' provisions, on the Chumie range of the Amatolas, for the purpose of dislodging the tribe of Tyalie and the rebel Hottentots, and then penetrating into the heart of the mountains, while Major-gen. Somerset with his division was to pursue the retreating enemy, 200 Cradock burghers operating at the same time from Whittlesea against the Tambookies. "I deeply regret," he adds, "for the credit of the frontier inhabitants, to report that only 200 burghers from the district of Somerset, 200 from Cradock, and 33 from Graham's Town, have responded to my command. They first objected to the volunteer system which I offered to their loyalty. They then requested to be commanded to turn out. Their shuffling conduct is melancholy. I am fully aware that I have been accused, during the progress of this campaign, of using the language of hyperbole in describing the numerous reconnoitres which have occurred, and in giving praise to the gallant officers and troops, as well as burghers. Possessing, however, some experience in war, I must maintain that such is not the case. Troops acting in the open field expect not the stimulus of praise; the soldier sees his foe, and his British courage rises at each step; but he who, after, perhaps, a night march of great length, has to ascend mountains or penetrate dense bush and ravines, filled probably with a daring and intrepid enemy, as resolute as athletic, ready to murder any one who may fall into his hands, and whose warfare is of the most stealthy and enterprising kind, appreciates the praise of his commander, because when his acts are conspicuously daring he is conscious he deserves it. He does his duty; but human nature renders even the soldier's intrepid heart sensible of the approbation of his superior, which he is proud to know may reach the eye of his parents and friends."

LIEUT.-GENERAL LORD FREDERICK FITZ CLARENCE, G.C.H.* has been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Company's forces on the Bombay establishment.

ASSAM COMPANY.—At the annual meeting of the Assam Company on the 7th inst., a dividend of 2½ per cent. was declared on the paid-up capital. The chairman announced that there was not only every prospect of this dividend being maintained, but there was good reason to believe it might hereafter be gradually advanced. Notwithstanding the difficulties the company had had to contend with, it was felt a prosperous position had at length been secured. The report stated:—"In the last report the shareholders were informed that Mr. Burkin- young, the managing director in Calcutta, had undertaken to visit the establishments of the company in Assam, and had then left Calcutta with that view. Mr. Burkin- young performed that service; and, almost immediately after his return to Calcutta, came to England; and the directors have had the opportunity of personal communication with him for a period of four months. Their intercourse with that gentleman has been of a peculiarly satisfactory character. At the time when Mr. Burkin- young was at Nazeral, the tea-manufacturing for the season 1851 was in progress, and the crop was then estimated at about 280,000 lbs. of tea. The amount of tea made, the directors are not at present precisely informed of, but it will probably fall short of the quantity estimated by about 30,000 lbs., the season having been unusually cold and unprosperous. In the present manufacturing season they have every reason to believe that there will be a considerable increase, and the newly-cultivated lands will now begin to tell upon the crop. The information received since the last annual general meeting convinces the directors that the extension of cultivation must necessarily be carried into effect very gradually, for in consequence of the paucity of labour in the province it would be unwise, if not impossible, to clear and plant a large tract of land in any one year. At the same time, it will be their aim to add to the cultivation in every year as much as possible, for the reasons stated on a previous occasion. The tea of 1850, sold during the past year, has produced a net total of 18,153*l.* sterling, and at an average price of 1*s.* 6*d.* per lb. A portion of the tea of 1851 has been received, and was sold on the 31st of March last; it produced a net average of 1*s.* 9*d.* per lb.

THE RAJAH OF COORG, his family and suite, have arrived in London. The rajah's wives left the Eurine, completely veiled, on the night of the 3rd, and were conveyed to Radley's Hotel in a closed carriage. They were met at the door of the hotel by the rajah and one of his principal attendants, who both held umbrellas over the heads of the ladies as they alighted. As soon as they left the carriage, they took the umbrellas themselves, and completely screened themselves from view. During the process of their alighting from the carriage, however, a glimpse of one of them was obtained, and it was noticed that the lady had a thin gauze veil over her face, and fine black eyes. The rajah was exceedingly anxious that no one should observe the ladies, and appeared agitated until they were safely in their apartment. His agitation was so great when he had conducted them up stairs, that he could not open the door of the apartment, and, imagining it was locked, he requested that the gas should be extinguished in the passage where they were standing, which was immediately done. The name of the rajah is Naindra Sing.

AMERICAN EXPEDITION TO JAPAN.—A note transmitted to Mr. Webster by the minister of the Netherlands at Washington has been published, its purport being that the government of Japan had solicited the Dutch government to inform the other powers that, although vessels cast upon the Japanese shores had since 1842 been furnished with provisions, &c., this proceeding was not to be construed into any relaxation of the policy of separation and exclusion which has been in force for more than 200 years.

NATIVES OF INDIA.—On the 11th May, Lord Monteagle presented a petition to the House of Lords, signed by only one person, representing the feelings of many of the natives of India on the subject of their position and their political rights under the last Act for the renewal of the East-India Company's Charter.

FRENCH INTOLERANCE AT TAHITI.—In the report of the proceedings of the London Missionary Society, read at the anniversary meeting on the 13th May, detailing their missionary operations, the committee notice with concern that the treaty which guaranteed perfect freedom to their missions in Tahiti was by no means observed. "The natives were prevented by an indirect and powerful influence from rendering any voluntary assistance, and many obstructions were placed in the way of the teachers." The French governor, in obedience to orders from Paris, had last year celebrated the anniversary of the French Republic, which happened on a Sunday, with various irreligious amusements; and the Rev. William Howe, for inviting the natives not to join in them on that day, was indicted for attempting 'to bring the government into contempt,' but acquitted."

THE MIGRATION TO CALIFORNIA OF THE CHINESE is now being carried on on a much larger scale than has been supposed. It is discovered that the Chinese are among the most ingenious, laborious, economical, and docile of labourers among the mines. They demand less wages, and California is so abundantly supplied with rats, that they can live like celestial emperors and pay very little for their board. The rats of California exceed the rats of our older states, just as nature on that side of the continent excels in bountifulness of mineral wealth. The California rats are incredibly large, highly flavoured, and very abundant. The most refined Chinese in California have no hesitation in publicly expressing their opinion of "them rats." Some of the Californians have made arrangements by which contracts are entered into in China for shiploads of Chinese, who engage on their arrival in California to labour for the meagerest pittance per diem, and, as many of them have struck for higher wages soon after their arrival, a law is proposed to enforce the execution of those contracts. These curious people have also made their way to the island of Cuba, and entered successfully into competition with negro labour. Who can tell but Providence, in its unlimited wisdom and resources, may have destined a final termination to the slavery of the African race, by the substitution of a more economical and reliable system of labour, which will at no distant day give a secure, gradual, and almost insensible end to this now apparently irremediable evil.—Times' New York Correspondent.

Mr. Piddington, of Calcutta, the well-known writer on the law of storms, calls attention to a method of extinguishing fires where there are no engines available. The plan is simply to pelt the fire out with mud. It is thus described:—Dig up earth about the fire, pouring water upon the earth as fast as it was dug, so as to convert the whole to soft mud; and then order every one to throw this wet mud on the fire as fast as possible. Mr. Piddington has tried this expedient with eminent success.

A letter from Sholapore states that a "Dongee Bawa" had taken up his residence in the temple of Sedashwur at that place, who avers that he has not tasted a morsel of food for twenty days! The fame of his exploits had attracted many thousands of people to visit him daily.

BOOKS.

Narrative of the Burmese War in 1824-26, as originally compiled from Official Documents, with a Map. By HORACE HATMAN WILSON, M.A., F.R.S., &c. London. Wm. H. Allen & Co.

Few governments have taken as great pains as that of India by the East-India Company, to place the public in possession of authentic information respecting all the measures of their administration, whether domestic or foreign, judicial, financial, or political. This has partly been imposed upon them by the searching investigation to which their proceedings have from time to time been submitted by parliamentary committees, from about the year 1772 down to the present, and the necessity of furnishing ample details in print, and partly by a similar necessity in relation to the proprietors of India Stock; but in a still greater degree by the feeling that they have nothing to hide, nothing that will not bear examination, and by the desire that the public, in exercising their judgment, should be possessed of materials upon which reliance may be placed. The same spirit has always animated their local governments, and hence the valuable printed papers illustrative of the war with Tippu and the Mahrattas, of the war with Nepal, the Pindars, the last Mahratta war, and the publication which we have to notice, the documents illustrative of the hostilities with the Burmese in 1824-26.

During the operations that were carried on along the British frontier on that occasion, besides the usual official despatches, a number of interesting communications were made to the Government and to the Calcutta journals, which threw great light upon the scene of action, the greater portion of which had never before been visited by Europeans. Upon the termination of hostilities, also, much valuable and interesting information was furnished by European residents in Ava, supplying accurate views of the character of the principal members of the court, and the policy by which they had been influenced. The whole of these were collected, under instructions from the Government, by Mr. H. Wilson, who was then officiating as superintendent of the Government Gazette, and were published in Calcutta in 1827, with a narrative connecting the whole prefixed by the compiler. The better knowledge that we have since had the opportunities of acquiring by our permanent occupation of Assam, Kachar, Arrakan, and Tenasserim, and the travels and reports of Wilcox, Fisher, Pemberton, Richardson, Hannay, and other distinguished officers, have diminished the value of the topographical "Documents;" but they still present, in a convenient form, much information which cannot fail to supply a serviceable chart for the conduct of a contest in which we are again about to embark. Their extent, however, precludes their re-publication; but the narrative, which is based upon them and on the official despatches, is of a more manageable size and extent, and is now reprinted in a portable form, accompanied by a map of the countries in which the operations occurred. Independently of the interest attaching to the events themselves, the record may be expected to furnish a serviceable guide to transactions which must in a great degree follow a similar course, and to obviate a recurrence of the mistakes which were made on the former occasion—mistakes which were mainly attributable to our ignorance of the climate, of the country, and of the people. The author has added to the narrative a few important details from authentic sources, regarding the mortality that prevailed amongst the British troops, and a brief review of the relations that have subsisted with the Burmese government subsequently to the close of the last war.

Thirty-five Years in the East. Adventures, Discoveries, Experiments, and Historical Sketches, relating to the Punjab and Cashmere, in connection with Medicine, Botany, Pharmacy, &c.; together with an original Materia Medica, and a Medical Vocabulary, in Four European and Five Eastern Languages. By JOHN MARTIN HONIGBERGER, late Physician to the Court of Lahore. Two vols. in one, with engravings. London. Baillière.

This is essentially and substantially a medical work: although we have some details of journeys and adventures, and historical as well as biographical sketches, they are all subsidiary to the author's main purpose, that of announcing to the world his medical theories, the persons upon whom he operated internally and externally, the extraordinary cases he met with, the treatment he adopted,—which was a "middle system, between Homœopathia and Allopathia,"—and the astonishing cures he performed. The second volume is entirely devoted to the subject of medicine. Prefaced by an "Introduction to the Medium System," is a catalogue of diseases and remedies, filling no fewer than 216 pages. Then follow the "Materia Medica," in 150 pages, and the "Medical Vocabulary," 70 pages. In the 186 pages of the first volume devoted to the "Adventures, Discoveries, Experiments, and Historical Sketches," the matter likely in the smallest degree to interest the general reader, might be put in, perhaps, twenty or thirty pages.

We grieve to think that a gentleman who has seen so much of Asiatic countries,—for he has visited not merely the Punjab and Cashmere, but Afghanistan and Bokhara,—and who must be a good Oriental linguist, should have been so ill-advised as to publish this huge book, which none but professional men, or critics, will, or perhaps should, wade through. Of the transactions at the court of Lahore, where he resided during an exciting period, he has given a very loose and confused narrative, and he appears in several particulars to be inaccurate, trusting perhaps to his memory instead of written notes.

Dr. Honigberger's account of the assassination of Mahamja Shere Sing, if it is to be relied upon (and he was all but present), sets the question at rest. He says:—

"Sheer Sing used to review his troops every day. On such an occasion, being in the royal garden (Shahbelore)* for the purpose of mustering the Scindawallah's troops, and sitting before the window of a small room, to look at the soldiers, Ajeet Sing approached him, and exhibited a loaded double-barrelled fowling-piece, as a nazerana (present), and at the moment Sheer Sing was stretching out his hand to receive it, he was shot with that gun on the spot. Ajeet Sing's troops, arranged before the window, gave a volley of musket-shots through the window, to kill the men surrounding Sheer Sing, and penetrated into the room to cut off his head. I was by accident not farther than ten steps from the place where the horrid crime was committed, five minutes before his atrocious murder, and had spoken to him in the garden, under a tree, where he ordered me to remain until his return. The subject of our interview was a gunpowder-mill, with machinery, which Dhyam Sing had ordered me to make."

Pertaub Sing, the son of Sheer Sing, he says, was cut to pieces whilst occupied in prayers and almsgiving. Of the assassination of Dhyam Sing he gives no particulars. In fact, all the most important facts are briefly and very negligently related, whilst trivial matters are largely treated of.

We cannot omit mentioning that some of the medical details, even in the first volume, intermixed with the "Adventures," &c., and unnecessarily obtruded, are so offensive to delicacy, that, although shrouded with the thin veil of the Latin language, they render the book unfit for the perusal of any but professional readers.

The Panama railroad was regularly opened for travel on the 15th of March, and passenger trains pass daily over from the Atlantic terminus to the Bufo Soldado.

* See, but it should be "Shah Belawal."

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, this Company now offers to future insurers FOUR-FIFTHS of the PROFITS, with QUINQUENNIAL DIVISION, or a LOW RATE of PREMIUM without participation of profits.

The divisions of profits will be declared in June, 1855, when all participating policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1854, will be allowed to share in the profits.

At the several past divisions of profits made by this Company, the reverendary bonuses added to the policies from one-half the profits, amounted, on an average of the different ages, to about one per cent. per annum on the sums insured, and the total bonuses added at the four septennial divisions exceeded 770,000l.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The extra premiums required for the East and West Indies, the British Colonies, and the northern parts of the United States of America, have been materially reduced.

INVALID LIVES.—Persons who are not in such sound health as would enable them to insure their lives at the tabular premiums, may have their lives insured at extra premiums.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50l.

ASSIGNMENTS OF POLICIES.—Written notices of, received and registered.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 14th of May, 1851, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.

. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.

NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5. 5s. in boards, SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.
* To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fittest corresponding translations into Hindustani.

Review in "Times," Jan. 3.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." * * * "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 53,000 words and phrases explained, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." * * * "In India, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

The highly important and interesting Collection, as exhibited by the Hon. the East-India Company at the Great Exhibition, in 1851.

MESSRS. HOGGART, NORTON, and TRIST have received instructions from the Hon. the Directors of the East-India Company to OFFER for SALE, at the Mart, during the months of May and June, on the several days hereinafter mentioned, a very considerable and by far the greater PORTION of the valuable and interesting COLLECTION exhibited by them at the Great Exhibition, representing articles from the whole extent of territory within the limits of the four Presidencies of Bengal, Agra, Madras, and Bombay, and extending from Singapore on the south to Lahore on the north, and from Assam on the east to Aden on the west, giving a very general view of the vast resources of the country, the habits and customs of the people, and displaying some of the most interesting, costly, and beautiful specimens of native skill, ingenuity, and industry; interesting not only from their having formed a very conspicuous part of an exhibition commenced under the auspices of the most illustrious personages of the realm, and attended throughout with a success brilliant beyond the most sanguine expectation, but as abundantly evidencing in all their extensive and beautiful variety that, however unimportant many of the least valuable and perhaps hitherto unnoticed specimens may appear, they will be found on inspection, and a more intimate knowledge of their application, to possess much that is useful, valuable, and instructive for the purposes of art or commerce, and, as a general collection, much that is interesting, not only to this country, but to all other parts of the world where science may be said to have attained a higher position. The arrangements will be in two separate sections instead of three as previously advertised, each day's sale commencing at one o'clock precisely.

The Sale of the First Section will take place on Monday, May 31, and four following days, and will comprise—native jewellery in brooches, bracelets, necklaces, &c., in gold and silver, agate and jade boxes and cups set with diamonds, rubies, and emeralds, agate and jade ornaments, carved rock crystal cups, richly embroidered shoes and slippers, ivory and sandalwood punkahs or fans, silver cups and baskets, embroidered silk and cotton dress pieces and scarfs, splendid throne covers and elephant cloths in velvet, richly embroidered in gold and silver, garlands of state, ribands in gold and silver tissue, native dresses, silk and gold brocades, sarrees, plain, flowered, and embroidered Dacca, Chundeyree, Bengal and Travancore cottar muslins, many of the finest possible texture shawls and scarfs from Moultan, Lahore, Delhi, Dacca, and Hyderabad, Tusser silk, silk brocades from Moorshehabad, Cashmere shawls and embroidery from Rajpootana and Loodiana, beautifully carved and inlaid ivory, buffalo horn, elk horn, sandalwood and porcupine quill work and other boxes, chess tables, elephants' tusks, Cambay agates in boxes, cups, brooch pieces, and slabs, Lahore dress pieces, gold and silver tissue shawls, ribands, lace, &c.

The Sale of the Second Section will take place on Monday, June 14, and seven following days (Sunday only excepted), and will comprise splendid carvings in ivory, elephants' tusks, lace, elegant mosaic tables and inlaidens from Agra, swandown muffs, boas, and tippets from Commercoolly, ostrich feathers and boas, magnificent gold and silver kineeb brocades from Rajpootana, Benares, and Ahmedabad, native jewellery and ornaments in great variety, saddles richly embroidered, khush-khus baskets from Poonah, &c., japanned boxes from Bengal, figured mats and hand-screens, bamboo and cane garden seats and baskets of great variety, dress pieces from Benares and Cutch, scarfs and shawls from Loodiana and Puttala, gold and silver thread and wire, Amboyna wood and japanned boxes from Java and Sumatra, splendid carpets and rugs from Lahore, Madras, and Bengal, satin punkah and state umbrellas, magnificent velvet cloths and ottoman coverings, most exquisitely carved blackwood furniture, the very interesting collection of arms and armour from Lahore, Hyderabad, Bengal, Calicut, Nepal, Assam, and Java, of very curious and exquisite workmanship, solid silver and other war accoutrements, a great variety of musical instruments and gongs, principally from Singapore, bookahs, leopard and tiger skins, buffalo and cow hides, tracery open work screen, beautifully carved models of shipping and nets from Singapore and Bombay, fishing rods, very curious and fine specimens of bidery, metallurgy, alloys and pottery in jars, vases, coolers, &c. from Amroha, Ahmedabad, Asimghur, Kotah, Sewan, Madras, and Lahore, figures illustrative of native customs, costumes and trades, models, and an infinity of curiosities and native articles.

Each section will be on view two days preceding the sale. Catalogues of the whole collection may be had, at 2s. each, of Messrs. Hoggart, Norton, and Trist, 62, Old Broad Street, Royal Exchange.

116, Jernyn Street, St. James's, London.

MESSRS. MANTON and Co., of Calcutta, GUN MAKERS, having purchased the Good-will, stock of Guns, Pistols, &c., belonging to that celebrated maker, Mr. SARUM Nook, of the Regent Circus, Piccadilly, and the license to use that name, they respectfully inform their patrons that they have taken premises at 116, Jernyn Street, St. James's, a few doors from Regent Street, Waterloo Place, where the business will be carried on under the same superintendence and workmen as were employed by the late Mr. Nook. They invite the attention of sportsmen and gentlemen proceeding to India to their superior assortment of Double Guns, Rifles, and Pistols, which are of first-rate workmanship, and they pledge themselves that every article manufactured by them shall be in that superior style of excellence for which Mr. Nook was so justly celebrated.

The above business will be carried on in connection with the house in Calcutta; and, to meet the exigencies of the times, the prices of all their goods will be such as not to deter any young gentlemen from suiting themselves with every article in the sporting line requisite for their equipment to India.

MANTON and Co.'s superior H.E.I. Company's Cavalry, Infantry, and Navy Swords, continue to be manufactured, and can be had always at the London establishment.

11, Wigmore Street, Cavendish Square.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, &c. &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKING, KNEE-CAPS, ANKLETS, &c., which have been tested in the hottest climates, and proved invaluable in all cases where support is necessary. They are drawn on with ease, as an ordinary stocking, and perfectly porous. They produce a pressure equal and permanent in every part, and not a muscle of the limb is impeded in its free and healthy action. They are now recommended by every London practitioner of eminence, and may be ordered through Messrs. JOHN WOODMAN and Co., Bombay (of whom prospectuses may be obtained); Messrs. GRINDLAY and Co.; and 5, Vere Street, London.

TO LADIES.—The high and universal celebrity which ROWLANDS' KALYDOR continues to maintain as an active, yet mild and soothing, extirpator of all impurities of the skin, is, during the period of Spring, most pleasingly evinced. This preparation, eminently balsamic, restorative, and invigorating, is equally distinguished for safety in application, as for unfailing efficacy in eradicating all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous vitiations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. To ladies during the period of nursing, and as a wash for infants, it cannot be too strongly recommended. Gentlemen, after shaving, will find it allay all irritation and tenderness of the skin, and render it soft, smooth, and pleasant. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the growth, and for preserving, improving, and beautifying the human hair. Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for preserving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and for rendering the breath sweet and pure. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

The patronage of Royalty throughout Europe, their general use by the aristocracy and the élite of fashion, and the well-known infallible efficacy of these articles, have given them a celebrity unparalleled.

Beware of SPURIOUS IMITATIONS!—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS," preceding that of the article on the wrapper or label. Sold by A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London; and by Chemists and Perfumers.

DECAYED TEETH and TOOTH-ACHE.—Price 2s. 6d. —Patronized by Her Majesty and H.R.H. Prince Albert. Mr. HOWARD'S WHITE SUCCEEDANUM for stopping decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and immediately HARDENS INTO A WHITE ENAMEL; in will remain in the tooth many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, and arresting the further progress of decay, and is far superior to anything ever before used, as it will NEVER BECOME DISCOLOURED in the tooth. All persons use it themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Prepared only by Mr. Howard, Surgeon-Dentist, 17, George Street, Hanover Square, who will send it into the country free by post. Sold by Savory, 220, Regent Street; Sanger, 150, and Hannay, 63, Oxford Street; Butler, 4, Cheapside; Johnston, 68, Cornhill; and all medicine vendors in the kingdom. Price 2s. 6d. Mr. Howard continues to supply the loss of teeth on his NEW SYSTEM of SELF-ADHESION, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. 17, George Street, Hanover Square. At home from 10 till 4.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS the BEST REMEDIES for the CURE of BAD LEGS.—Mrs. Heppel, of Blyth, near Morpeth, was afflicted with a dreadful bad leg, for which she consulted the most eminent medical men in that neighbourhood, but it would not yield to their treatment; her health suffered severely, and the state of her leg was terrible, the ulcers rapidly increasing in size, and the pain most agonising. In this state she commenced using Holloway's Ointment and Pills, and after continuing them for some time, the leg was completely cured, and she is now in the enjoyment of excellent health. Mr. Wilkinson, druggist, Blyth, vouches for the accuracy of this statement. Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Burmese war has opened auspiciously. The cities of Martaban and Rangoon have been taken, and the Burmese have witnessed a display of force, which, notwithstanding the gasconade and bravado of their chiefs, they probably did not anticipate.

On the 5th April, the company's steamer Proserpine, with General Godwin and Admiral Austen (the Commanders of the expedition) on board, arrived at Moulmein, followed by her Majesty's steamers Rattler, Hermes, and Salamander. They immediately proceeded to reconnoitre Martaban, which is situated on the Saluen river, opposite to Moulmein, from which it is separated by a small river, debouching, like the Saluen, into the Gulf of Martaban. The same evening, the troops intended for the attack were embarked,—consisting of a detachment of Bengal artillery, a wing of the Royal Irish (the 18th), a wing of her Majesty's 80th regiment, and the 26th Madras N.I.—about 1,400 men,—under Colonel Reynolds; and at daybreak the next morning, the force, with the steamers, was before Martaban. The enemy, in considerable numbers, lined a mud wall running along the bank of the river, and returned the fire of the steamers with guns and musketry; but they could not stand the effective cannonade of the former, every shot telling. The troops landed, and advancing rapidly, with artillery, drove the enemy from position to position, the town being at the same time cleared, the governor setting the example of flight. In four or five hours, the place, reputed to be of great strength, held by 3,000 men, was entirely in the possession of our troops, without any actual loss, only 17 men being wounded. The heat is described as excessive, though all was over at a little after 8 o'clock, A.M.

The 26th Madras N.I. having been left behind to garrison Martaban, with a company of Madras artillery, a company of Bengal artillery, the Royal Irish regiment, and a wing of her Majesty's 80th, re-embarked on board the Rattler, Hermes, Salamander, and transport Jessie, for Rangoon, and on the 8th April joined the Bombay steamers, with the Madras troops on board (which had arrived on the previous evening), at the mouth of the Rangoon river.

The fleet, consisting of the Fox frigate, the Serpent brig, three Queen's steamers, and twelve Company's steamers, weighed anchor on the 11th, and proceeded opposite to Rangoon, when a fire was opened upon them, first from the Dalla side, and afterwards from the southernmost stockade at Rangoon. After a terrific cannonade of an hour and a quarter, the steamers opening their broadsides on the Burmese works on both banks of the river, the enemy's fire ceased, when a detachment of European infantry and seamen was sent to attack the Dalla stockade, which was carried, with the loss of Ensign Armstrong.

In this engagement, Captain Lynch, of the Bombay squadron, states that "the stockades, although giving a good fire for the first quarter of an hour, were quite unequal to heavy guns, which sent shot and shell right through them—the latter bursting in the middle of them. They were soon seen to slacken fire, and a shell blowing up their main work at the King's wharf, sent the immense pile into the air."

On the 12th the troops disembarked; on that day, and the 13th, they attacked and carried several stockades, including that of Kemendine, which was first assailed by the Serpent; but the enemy's fire was so severe, that the brig was obliged to haul off. Two war steamers were thereupon sent up, when the Kemendine batteries were silenced, and a landing having been effected, the enemy deserted the works, which were occupied by sailors and marines from the ships, and European troops.

On the morning of the 14th, the army advanced to the attack of Rangoon, throwing out skirmishers, the Burmese fighting well in their fashion, and knocking over many of our men. On our troops reaching an opening in the rising ground all around them, two stockades concentrated their fire, and did some damage. On arriving at a distance of 1,000 yards from the great pagoda, four 8-inch howitzers continued to fire till about 1 o'clock, when the order was given for the storming party to advance, headed by the 18th Royal Irish. Seconded by a tremendous fire of artillery, they advanced rapidly but steadily towards the pagoda stockade, taking some minor ones in their forward movement. Towards noon it was resolved to deliver the general assault, which was made by all arms with the greatest spirit and intrepidity, on the north-east angle of the Pagoda hill and stockade, when the enemy gave way and retreated at all points. They never expected that the assault would have been made at this point, and a gate was actually found open there, through which our troops rushed in and instantly occupied the place, when all the fighting was concluded by two o'clock in the afternoon. The first who ascended the steps leading to the great pagoda were Lieutenant-Colonel Coote, Lieutenant and Adjutant Doran, of the Royal Irish, and Captain Latter: the first officer was severely, and Lieutenant Doran mortally, wounded.

The army were by the last accounts occupying quarters about the great pagoda. The artillery captured numbers 100 pieces, of all sizes. Our loss cannot be considered severe: several of the officers suffered from coups de soleil, the heat having been intense. The loss of the enemy is not stated; but it must have been very great.

Nothing was known respecting the future operations of the force. As Admiral Austen had proceeded to Calcutta to confer with the Governor-General, it is probable that he intended to suggest some change in the original scheme.

The Calcutta papers mention that a Mogul, who had arrived there from the Burmese territories, stated that the golden-footed sovereign had secured the aid of an European military man in the organization of his army. He is supposed to be a Madras officer, and it is suggested that it may be Captain Impey.

The vexatious little war still continues on the north-west frontier, where there have been several encounters with the hill tribes. The Afreedies attacked one of our villages to the westward of Peshawar, but were driven back with severe loss by the villagers. The Momunds, who occupy the hills further north, were not disposed of so easily.

The fort of Shubqudr, about twenty miles N.W. from Peshawar, is occupied, as our readers are aware, by a British garrison, for the protection of the surrounding villagers from the attacks of the Momunds, who inhabit the neighbouring hills. The villages around Shubqudr had, for some time past, been threatened with hostile visits from the hill tribes, and the troops stationed at the fort had been thereby kept in a constant state of uncertainty. On the morning of the 31st March, reports of fire-arms having been heard in the direction of the threatened villages, the 5th troop of the 7th light cavalry, under Lieut. F. R. Tottenham, were ordered out. They proceeded towards the spot, and soon succeeded in getting between a party of Momunds and their native mountains, occupying the only two roads by which their enemies could escape. The Momunds soon came in sight, and on finding their path intercepted, they fired a brisk volley into the party. Lieut. Tottenham gave the order to charge, and dashed forward; but he was only followed by four of the troopers, the remainder having positively refused to obey the order! Every means of inducing them to advance was urged, but in vain, and the Momunds reached their homes in safety.

Later news from the scene of this misadventure is more satisfactory. The Momunds, under their chief Saadat Khan, assembled in great strength, for the purpose of attacking the fort and village of Shubqudr. On the 10th April, Sir Colin Campbell, with two troops of the 15th Irregular Cavalry, under Captain R. H. Hicks, rode out to reconnoitre; but they returned the same evening to Peshawar, the troops of the irregular cavalry remaining at Shubqudr. On the 14th, two guns of Waller's troop of horse artillery, under Lieutenants Mackinnon and Blunt, with fifty additional sowars of the 15th Irregular Cavalry, were ordered out, and the brigadier again went to Shubqudr. On the evening of the 15th, heavy firing was heard in the direction of the force, and news was soon received that the Momunds had come down close to Shubqudr, 6,000 strong. The brigadier went out to meet them, accompanied by 200 of the irregulars, 100 of the 7th Light Cavalry, and the two horse-artillery guns, followed by a portion of the companies of native infantry on duty at the fort. As this little force advanced, the enemy retreated, and were pursued to the foot of the hills. It being useless to pursue them farther, our force returned, and then, as is their custom, the enemy made a show of pursuit; but as our cavalry followed the guns, and opened out every now and then to allow them to fire, whenever the Momunds came too near, they were kept at a respectful distance. This skirmishing lasted for three hours. The 15th irregulars were the only sufferers on our side; their loss was three men killed and seven or eight badly wounded.

On the 16th, 600 of H.M.'s 53rd started for Strubqudr, the men all on elephants, and officers on horseback, the four remaining guns of the 2nd troop 1st brigade, under Major Waller, accompanying.

The Delhi Gazette, to which we are indebted for the foregoing particulars, says, "There is some talk of a hill campaign; but as the weather is described as fearfully hot, we conclude, from the tenor of our letters, that the force has returned to cantonments. If this be the case, we should not be surprised if another attack on the fort followed their withdrawal, as the punishment the Momunds have received will only serve to exasperate them, and provoke further annoyance whenever they think they have a fitting opportunity."

A Peshawur letter says,—

"Last year Captain Coke took possession of a village called Nurree Uboo, and situated near the Kooram boundary. This village was independent; but as it was in Kohat, our Government thought proper to take it. The troops of Mohamed Auzem Khan (son of Dost Mohamed Khan), the ruler of Kooram, are escaped about twelve koss from the village of Nurree Uboo, and the Wuzeroes residing at Kohistan of Kooram, and who are likewise independent, have joined the chief, Mahomed Auzem. On the night of the 12th April, this force, mustering about 3,000 Wuzeroes, cavalry and infantry, attacked the village of Nurree Uboo, and created great havoc, killing, it is said, one hundred or more of the villagers, and taking about thirty prisoners: among the latter are the theanadar and some of his police. Requisitions have been received from Major Mackeson for European troops to march at once to Kohat, and they were to leave Peshawur for that place on the 15th."

The Punjab was tranquil. Sir Henry Lawrence, president of the Board of Administration, returned to Lahore on the 15th April, having, during his absence, visited Hazara, Peshawur, Kohat, and gone down the whole of the Derajat, returning by Muzufurghur, Mooltan, and Futehpoor Gogaira.

Large parties of officers were preparing for a summer trip to Cashmere; but the Governor-General had declared it advisable that ladies should not at present proceed to the valley. It is supposed that this caution has reference to the infirm state of Goolab Singh, and the probability of his death being the signal for strife and disturbance.

The politics of Afghanistan are still in disorder. Dost Mahomed had written to the son of the late Yar Mahomed Khan of Herat, that he was about to send Gholam Hyder Khan with 5,000 troops to Herat, and that, unless the sirdars of Candahar relinquished their intention of making hostile movements in the Herat district, he would compel them to do so.

The people of Kohistan Huzara, situated between Cabul and Toorkistan, have rebelled against Dost Mohamed, and have had a collision with his troops. Mohamed Shurreef, the Dost's youngest son, proceeded to the spot, taking with him four guns, two regiments of cavalry, and one of infantry, for the purpose of punishing the rebels, who gave hostages as security for their future obedience.

We have inserted elsewhere the latest news from Lucknow and Hyderabad, which shows the disorder prevailing in these native states. It is worth remarking, that the condition of the former is almost normal. Lord Teignmouth, writing in 1795, describes Oude much as he would portray it now:—"Disaffection and anarchy prevail throughout; the prince is in a state of bankruptcy, without a sense of his danger, and without a wish to guard against it."*

The Marquess of Dalhousie was residing at Barrackpore, going down to Calcutta when councils and other business of the state required his presence there. The Marchioness was in Ceylon; but as her health was not improving there, it was her intention to proceed to England.

The Commander-in-Chief was last heard of at Umballa; he had been present at a grand wedding at Putteealla, during which visits were exchanged between his Excellency and the Putteealla Rajah, the Nawabs of Jheend and Naba. It was supposed that he had reached Simla.

BENGAL. OUDE.

The following letter from Lucknow is dated March 31st:—"You have heard no doubt of Runjeet Sing, the Rajah of Esinnugger, in Oude, who behaved last year treacherously to Capt. Orr, of Capt. Barlow's corps. That officer was very nearly cut to pieces by the fellow, whom he had gone to meet in friendly conference in July, 1851, to settle the revenue of his estates. Orr behaved throughout with the greatest presence of mind and gallantry. Bleeding from thirteen deep sword-wounds, he took the opportunity of escaping during the momentary confusion caused by the death by Orr's party of one of the rajah's chief men; and fainting though he was, and stretched on a charpoy, he led his followers gallantly through a host of enemies, who pursued his very small party, consisting of but ten or twelve men, keeping up a close fire, while the guns of the fort at the same time were opened on them.

"About a fortnight ago, Capt. Orr's spies brought intelligence that Runjeet Sing, on the approach of the Khyrabad chueklidar, had evacuated his fort a second time, and that he had encamped on this side the Gogra with about 250 men, and two six-pounder guns. On receiving this information Capt. Orr resolved on a surprise. He ordered his corps to start on the afternoon of the 24th March, and after a very distressing march of about eighteen coss (thirty-six miles), arrived in sight of Runjeet Sing's camp early on the morning of the following day. Unfortunately a cow-herd gave notice of the approach of troops to the enemy, who, on their approach, opened a fire of grape and round shot. Capt. Orr, accompanied by Lieut. Stokes, however, pushed on, at the head of his men, and succeeded, sword in hand, in capturing one of the guns. The rajah then fled towards the Nepal hills, but Capt. Orr pursued him, and captured the second gun. Then continued the chase for about an hour and a half, over a distance of nearly two coss (or four miles) of jungle, keeping up a brisk fire all the while. The jungle becoming at last almost impenetrable, and the wet mud very deep, the men fatigued after such a distressing march, were compelled to halt, and the rajah escaped. After the fight, which was constantly kept up, chiefly with the sword, the rain poured down in torrents. The loss on Orr's side was trifling, one naik and two artillery-men, and seven sepoy wounded, while on the rajah's side ten men were killed, about double that number wounded, and several taken prisoners. Most of his property was left behind, and of course fell into the hands of the victors. Among the loot is a fine tiger, which will probably be presented to the king."—Englishman.

CAPTURE OF MARTABAN AND RANGOON.

The following Gazette Extraordinary was issued late last evening:—

"Notification.—The Governor-General in council has the highest satisfaction in announcing that despatches have this day been received, reporting the capture of Martaban and of Rangoon, by combined attacks of the naval and military forces now employed in Burmah.

The Governor-General in council is pleased to direct that, in honour of this success, a royal salute shall be fired at every principal station in India."—Bengal Hurkaru, April 24.

Martaban was stormed at eight o'clock on the morning of the 5th April.

H.M. steamers Rattler, Hermes, and Salamander, worked in concert with the troops, bombarded the place, and covered the landing of the troops.

The troops engaged were a wing of H.M. 18th, a wing of H.M. 80th, a wing of the 26th M.N.I., with details of Bengal European artillery and Madras sappers, in all about 1,400 men. The attacking party was commanded by Col. Reignolds, and Capt. Gillespie of the 18th was first on the walls. Only eight men were wounded, no officer killed or wounded.

On the 10th and 11th of April H.M.'s and the Company's vessels destroyed the whole of the stockades on the Rangoon river. On the 12th, H.M. 51st, H.M. 18th, and the 40th N.I., landed and took, after severe fighting, a stockade called the White Horse picket, Major Fraser, of the Engineers, being the first into the stockade.

The heat was so excessive that farther operations on that day were suspended. Majors Oakes and Griffith, both of the Madras army, were killed by the sun. Colonels Foord, Warren, and St. Maur suffered severely from the heat.

On the 13th, the heavy guns were landed; on the 14th the troops landed at five a.m. Two companies of H.M.'s 18th, 80th, 40th N.I. formed the advance. The enemy's position was turned, and the pagoda approached on the east side. At eleven, after the artillery had played on and destroyed the east entrance, the storming party was formed. It consisted of one wing of H.M.'s 80th, two companies of the 18th, and two companies of the 40th N.I., under the command of Col. Coote. The troops advanced steadily, and stormed the pagoda with a rush. All the country round fell with the pagoda.

Martaban was taken on April the 5th, before the arrival of the Madras force, which was not all at the rendezvous till the 8th. The capture of this place seems to have been effected easily and with little loss.

Brig. Warren suffered from a stroke of the sun, but he recovered. Lieut. Col. Bogle, the commissioner of Tenasserim, who accompanied the force from Moulmein to Rangoon, received a ball in the leg.

The Admiral has come here to consult the Governor-General as to an immediate advance on Promé. He has been ill, and is yet infirm; but purposes, we hear, to return to the scene of action.—Englishman, April 24.

Since the above was in type, a communication from a correspondent, in the form of a diary, was received, from which we have only time to cull the following regarding the taking of Rangoon:—"Everything having been previously arranged, at daybreak on the 14th the Fox and Serpent opened fire, which caused fearful havoc in the enemy's defences. A little after seven o'clock the land-force marched up to the grand pagoda, under cover of the fire from the war-ships. The pagoda was reached and attacked on the north-east angle. The Burmese are described as having fought most bravely, and it was not till about two in the afternoon that their position was at length carried at the point of the bayonet. Two Europeans are said to have been seen in the camp of the enemy. Shortly after the Serpent and Phlegethon proceeded to Kemendine with a detachment of troops, who, without much trouble, carried it by storm. Thirty Burmese boats were seized, and the house of the Rangoon governor burnt. The Burmese prisoners—that is, the British subjects who were resident in Rangoon—had been starved for three days, and most brutally used by the Burmese." According to our correspondent, fever, cholera, and the smallpox, were much prevalent.—Ibid.

The following account of the capture of Martaban is from a correspondent:—

"On the morning of the 5th April, the Hon. Company's steamer Proserpine anchored off Moulmein, having on board Lieut.-gen. Godwin, c.z., and Rear-admiral Austen, c.z., and was followed during the day by H.M.'s steamers Rattler (bearing the rear-admiral's flag), Hermes, and Salamander.

"The general and admiral proceeded at once on the Proserpine to reconnoitre Martaban. The same evening the Salamander went up and anchored abreast of Martaban, at a distance of about 1,800 yards; and the following troops embarked on board the other steamers:—Sixty of the 2nd co. 5th batt. Bengal Artillery, under Brevet-major C. S. Reid; the left wing H.M.'s 18th Royal Irish, Lieut.-col. Reignolds, c.z.; head-quarters and right wing H.M.'s 80th regt., Major Lockhart; and the 26th regt. M.N.I., Lieut.-col. Johnston. At daybreak, the following morning, the whole proceeded to take up their position off Martaban. Unfortunately the Hermes grounded about 2,000 yards off, but the Rattler and Proserpine brought up, the former at 213 yards from, and the latter within fifty yards of, the main wharf.

"The enemy were in considerable numbers, lining the mud wall which runs along the bank of the river to the large pagoda, and as soon as the two steamers came opposite the wharf, each opened a sharp cannonade, which was returned with good will by the enemy, both with guns and musketry. The fire from all four steamers was most effective; the Rattler and Proserpine, from being so close, must have caused many casualties, and the practice from the Salamander and Hermes was admirable; even at the distance they were every shot told. Too much praise cannot be given to Capt. Brooking for the noble manner in which he worked and fought his beautiful little vessel, the Proserpine.

"When the landing-place was cleared of the enemy, the troops which were at hand were landed from the steamers, and most gallantly drove the enemy before them, following them up the hill, and from position to position, meeting with considerable opposition from their musketry, but immediately driving them from, and getting possession of, their guns. The town was at the same time cleared, the first to make his escape being the Governor. The place was entirely in our possession a little after eight o'clock a.m., but the last of the troops did not return to the high pagoda, where the general had established his headquarters, till about four p.m.

"The whole of the troops that were engaged did their work well, notwithstanding the heat, which was excessive, and fortunately the casualties were very few; a havildar of the 26th M.N.I., and a private of H.M.'s 18th Royal Irish, being the only two dangerously wounded, and fifteen Europeans slightly so. The loss of the enemy is not known, for they removed all their dead and wounded; but it must have been considerable, for the fire from the steamers was very sharp, and continued for some time.

"The artillery returned to Moulmein the same evening, and the European infantry the following morning, leaving the 26th M.N.I. to garrison Martaban, where they were joined during the forenoon by the company of Madras artillery, with its light field battery, with instructions to erect a bastioned stockade, with four guns on the top of the hill overlooking the town.

"Only two small brass and two iron guns, with five or six wall pieces, were captured, though it is well known that many others were in position when we commenced the attack. One or two light-fingered gentry are believed to have appropriated, after the action (when Martaban was filled with persons of all descriptions, who had come over from Moulmein), what they had not assisted in obtaining.

"Thus fell Martaban, an easy conquest, notwithstanding the various and exaggerated reports of its strength. On the morning of the attack the garrison consisted of 3,000 men, who were evidently unprepared for our rude visit. They had been hard at work for fifteen or twenty days previous, cutting down jungle and clearing away houses, but were too sharp upon them, and disturbed them in the midst of their preparations.

"On the evening of the 6th the following troops were ordered to hold themselves in readiness to embark for Rangoon the next morning:—2nd comp. 5th bat. Bengal Art., Major C. S. Reid, and head-quarters, and 100 of 18th Royal Irish, Lieut.-col. Reigolds, c.n., on the Rattler screw steamer; the remainder of the 18th Royal Irish, with the general and staff, steamer Hermes; right wing of H. M.'s 80th regt., camp-followers and baggage, Major Lockhart, steamer Salomander, and transport Jessie. The two first vessels, having received the troops allotted to them, weighed anchor at two p.m. on the 7th April (leaving the Salomander and Jessie to follow, as soon as the baggage was on board), and anchored at the mouth of the Rangoon River at one o'clock p.m. on the 8th. We found that the Bombay steamers, with the Madras troops, had arrived the previous evening.

"11th April.—The fleet weighed anchor at eight a.m., and proceeded opposite Rangoon. The steamers had all taken up their positions, when a fire of cannon and musketry was opened upon them from the Dalla side, and immediately afterwards from the southernmost stockade at Rangoon. The steamers lost no time in returning the fire, which continued for an hour and a quarter. A shell from one of the Bombay steamers exploded a mine or magazine in the right stockade, and shortly afterwards the enemy's fire was silenced, and orders were given to cease firing from our ships. All the stockades appeared to be filled with men. A detachment was sent to attack the Dalla stockades, consisting of a detachment of European infantry and seamen, who carried it immediately, losing one officer, Ensign Armstrong, H.M.'s 51st regiment.

"On the morning of the 12th the troops disembarked. The 2nd company 5th brigade Bengal artillery, landed at six a.m., and put together their guns, and were ready to proceed by eight o'clock, when the advance was made, headed by the light companies of the 51st foot. On coming within 850 yards from the first stockade, Brevet-Major Reid, with two 9-pounder guns and two 24-pounder howitzers, unlimbered, and came into action, firing shrapnel and round-shot. The practice was excellent, and most effective. It was instantly returned by a well-directed fire from the stockade. The enemy fired rather high at first, but after a few rounds they obtained our distance exactly. Just as Major Reid's ammunition was expended, Brevet-Major Oakes, of the Madras artillery, brought up two 24-pounder howitzers, and continued the fire till the order for the storming party to advance was given, and the stockade was carried without any loss. Before the advance of the storming party, a gunner of the Bengal artillery, and one of the Madras artillery, were killed at their guns, and two wounded.

"The following day (the 13th) was devoted to bringing up from the ships supplies of ammunition and other stores, and on the morning of the 14th the army advanced to the attack of Rangoon. Immediately on leaving the bivouac of the previous day, a sharp firing of musketry commenced on both sides, and on our reaching an opening in the rising ground all around us, two stockades concentrated the fire of their guns upon us, and did some slight damage. On arriving at a distance of 800 to 1,000 yards from the great pagoda, four 8-inch howitzers, which had been dragged up from the rear by the seamen of the fleet, were brought to bear upon it, and continued to fire till about one o'clock, when the order was given for the storming party to advance, headed by H.M.'s gallant 18th Royal Irish. It received little molestation till it commenced the ascent of the steps leading to the great pagoda, when it was received with a discharge from two guns, and from hundreds of muskets and matchlocks. The three first who ascended were Lieut.-Col. Coote and Lieut. and Adjutant Doran, of H.M.'s 18th Royal Irish, and Capt. Latter. I regret very much to add, that the first officer was severely, and Lieut. Doran mortally, wounded. Poor fellow, he received seven wounds, and expired, in half an hour, deeply and sincerely regretted by every officer and man in the regiment, and most deservedly so, for a nobler fellow, and more gallant and amiable soldier, never lived. No other officer was killed, and the returns of wounded have not yet been received from regiments.

"The army is now occupying quarters about the great pagoda, and evidently the enemy were totally unprepared for our attack; quantities of food just cooked, clothing, &c., were found in every direction. A return of the ordnance captured is being taken by Majors Reid, of the Bengal, and Montgomery, of the Madras, artillery; the number is about 100 guns, of various sizes (including nine 18-pounder iron guns), and seventy or eighty wall-pieces and jinjalls. Thousands of balls and pieces of china were lying by the guns, most of which were found loaded and spiked, some to within six or eight inches of the muzzle, one filled with duck-shot!

"The place is most offensive, from the number of dead bodies of men and dogs, and from the stench of the decayed fish, which the Burmese are fond of; and sickness has, I am sorry to say, commenced to a very great extent. Cholera is raging to a dreadful extent: one officer, Capt. Hint, paymaster of H.M.'s 80th foot, has already fallen a victim, and another is scarcely expected to recover. The soldiers of the different regiments are dying in numbers.

"The heat since the troops landed has been fearful: two officers, Brevet-Major Oakes, of the Madras artillery, and Brigadier Major Griffith, of the Madras brigade, died from a coup de soleil on the 12th, and Brigadier Warren and many others, with numerous soldiers, have suffered severely from the same cause.

"On the morning of the 12th, the guns of Major Reid's battery were dragged into position about 1½ mile, by the men of the company, the bullocks not having been landed, and after having been well fought by them, the limbers were taken back in the same manner for a fresh supply of ammunition.

"H.M.'s brig Serpent, and the H. C.'s steamers Mozuffer and Feroze, were sent on the evening of the 13th, to attack and take possession of Kimmendine, which they did most gallantly. We hear that two lakhs of rupees were found there.

"At present nothing is known of our future proceedings; but it is generally believed we remain here during the rains." —Englishman, April 24.

We have been favoured with the following letter from Capt. Lynch, in command of the Bombay portion of the Burmese squadron, to Sir H. Leeke, Commander-in-Chief of the Indian navy, dated Rangoon, 17th of April:—

"Feroze, Rangoon, April 17.

"You will be aware of our movements by the official reports which go with this, and which I try to make a faithful record of our proceedings; and as far as I can gather from the very kind manner and expressions of the admiral and Commodore Lambert, they are quite satisfied with our part of the work.

"We had a pleasant voyage across the bay, and found the commodore on the 7th off the mouth of the river, or rather inside it. The admiral and General Godwin joined from Martaban on the 8th, when we moved up to the Hastings Sand, where the whole fleet assembled by the evening of the 10th, crossed it in steamers, each towing two transports, on the 11th, and came under fire almost immediately we anchored.

"The general, I believe, had an idea that we should not come into action on that day, and our orders were to anchor out of range. But this was impossible, the whole space above the sand being in range, and we of course anchored above all; but the stockades, although giving a good fire for the first quarter of an hour, were quite unequal to heavy guns, which sent shot and shell right through them, the latter bursting in the middle of them. They were soon seen to slacken fire, and a shell blowing up their main work at the King's Wharf, sending the immense pile into the air, appeared quite to put them out—and the firing soon ceased. I have detailed so much in my official letter, that I need only add, that the Fox and Rattler and Tenasserim burnt the stockades on the Dalla side during the afternoon, and we moved up and silenced those on the Rangoon side in the evening, so that not a gun was fired from the river defences after dark, and all were burning next morning; after which we shelled the great pagoda with effect till ordered to go up and take Kimmendine, to which place the Mozuffer and ourselves moved the same evening, and joined the Serpent and Phlegethon, and burnt it without opposition next morning. This made an end of the river work, and we then returned and shelled the pagoda. All the troops advanced on the 16th, and took it by storm.

"Our crews are healthy, except the worm [guinea worm]; but I am sorry to say the cholera is among the troops, and a few cases afloat; but I trust it will not spread.

"This is a very fine-looking place. The effect of the great pagoda on the hill is very striking and beautiful; and the blaze of the burning stockades at night must have astonished the Burmese.

"I know nothing of the probable operations, or where any of the steamers will be at liberty to return to Bombay, and only trust you are not depending on them for your monsoon mail arrangements." —H. B. Lynch.

"P.S.—While closing my letter, I was called by signal on board the admiral, who informed me he should proceed himself to Calcutta, instead of the Sesostris, as had been arranged; and I cannot let my letter go to you without telling you of the very kind manner in which the admiral expressed himself with reference to our part in the late operations. He said he felt fully the value of our services—the vessels of the I.N., both in the attack and in shelling the place, and that the general had expressed himself fully satisfied with our practice; that we had been of the most essential service, and he would have much pleasure in making it fully known in the despatches.

SEPOYS FOR GENERAL SERVICE.

The refusal of the 38th regiment to proceed on-service by sea has given rise to no little stir in various quarters; amongst other things, it has produced a circular from the Commander-in-Chief, directing that liability to calls for general service, by sea as well as land, is to be kept continually intimated to the native commissioned, non-commissioned, and men of the sepoy regiments, and rammed, crammed, and shampood, into the brains of all recruits, both now and forever. In this respect, the sister presidencies have decidedly the advantage over Bengal: it is but to issue the orders, and the subordinate governments are sure of their being obeyed, without a murmur or a question. Here, where it is left to the option of the men, we can hardly wonder at hesitation, in corps deeming themselves exempt from the operation of commands which have reference only to what are termed general service regiments. Whether we have ourselves spoiled the Bengal sepoy by this distinction, we do not now stop to inquire, though probably we may consider the subject upon a future day; but that the difficulty is not regarded as insuperable, may be gathered from this very circular, which, we think, is, notwithstanding, a mistake in the manner of doing what might readily be accomplished by far simpler means. The time appears highly favourable to the innovation which the circular is intended to introduce; there is no internal enemy with whom to contend, and therefore the change could be effected without peril to the service at large. Those who have been induced to enlist, on the understood condition that they would not be compelled to take ship (though our opinion is that few, if properly addressed, would refuse), may be suffered to wear out their time by exhaustion, provided, on a frank application, they decline to follow the lead in any and every direction subserving the interests of the state; but if a General Order, by the heads of Government and army, were to issue, enjoining that whosoever enlisted hereafter should do so with the distinct understanding of his being entertained for general service only, and if it were further intimated that these orders to the native troops, of all denominations, would be placed at the foot of the Articles of War, and regularly read to regiments precisely as the Articles of War are read at the present day, we are persuaded the sepoy of this part of our dominions would be found as tractable, and as willing, as his comrades of Madras and Bombay. It is the half-measure, worked out behind the screen, which does all the mischief, by leaving room to such interpretations as the men think fit to put upon it; and, in this instance of the circular, it opens a door to some doubt whether the prospective injunction proceeds from the highest authority; the rather that the preamble says, the order itself emanates from the Court of Directors. What is there to be feared in the promulgation of such a rule? Far better does it seem to us, that the whole thing should be made known in its simplest and most decided form at once, than that it should bear along with it the semblance of coquetting with prejudices which are hourly subsiding from one extremity of the empire to the other. We are not aware that such regiments as have been either raised for, or become general service corps, or such as have, by force of circumstances been obliged to perform their duties as if of that description, have sunk in the estimation of their fellows. Something of bickering, indeed, we remember to have heard; but if it ever assumed a tangible form, it was never so critical but that the exertions of the officers were found fully equal to its instantaneous suppression; and even where it has existed, we believe it to have arisen more from the insouciance of a few vain and pert young soldiers, than from any settled regimental dislike in the veterans upon the score of religious prejudice. At any rate, it is clear that the sooner the possibility of such differences is removed the better; for, humanly speaking, it seems more than likely that our future wars of aggression will take us only to such places as must be reached by the sea—as China; because beyond Nepal (which will not stir against our undivided strength) and Cashmere, there is really nothing left in India to subdue.—Hurkaru.

THE RESTRICTION ON LADIES residing at Hureepoor (in Hazara), at Dhera Ismael, and Dhera Ghazee Khan, has been removed.—Lahore Chron.

VACCINATION.—A correspondent of the Hurkaru, writing from Darjeeling, alludes to a melancholy case of a European child, who died at that station from gangrene in the arm. The child had just been vaccinated, and the writer expresses his fear that much spurious vaccine matter is sent all over the country from Calcutta. It has, we believe, been proved that the matter is frequently adulterated in passing through native hands, but the natural deterioration of the lymph from climate is a subject which has not yet been fully investigated. It is the uncertainty of its effect, perhaps more than any religious prejudice, which has so long retarded its progress among the native community.—Friend of India.

THE PACHETE SUTTEE.—A correspondent of the Englishman observes that the charge brought against the rajah of Pachete, of having permitted or connived at the celebration of the rite of suttee by his mother, has been disposed of. We presume, therefore, he is acquitted; but the affair is said to have cost him Rs. 16,000 and many months of anxiety, lest his estates should pass away from the family. The fright and the fine will, we have no doubt, have their effect upon other families, who, but for the immediate inquiry instituted into the affair, might have ventured to perpetuate the rite under the shadow of their own jungles. The enormous sum which a rajah was recently compelled to disburse to save himself from the consequences of having waged an intestine war in the district of Hooghly, has been more effectual in repressing club fights in the district than even his conviction would have been.—Friend of India.

RETURNED COOLIES.—The ship Glentanner has lately arrived here with Indian labourers returned from Demerara. About eighty of her passengers died on her voyage, chiefly while the vessel was off the Cape in February. The commander attributes the mortality to insufficient clothing and unsuitable food, and it is suggested that the symptoms described indicate an inflammatory disease called beri beri, first observed in Ceylon, where it is prevalent during the season in which changes from heat to cold, and wet to dry, are frequent and sudden.—Hurkaru.

BREACH OF OFFICIAL CONFIDENCE.—The Bombay Times says, he has heard, on excellent authority, that not only are copies of the most important despatches procurable on the easiest terms imaginable, from the Secretariats of the Presidency, but that charges for copies additional to those regularly required have been openly made by the Karanee. The former part of the story is, we believe, as true in Calcutta as in Bombay, and if we remember rightly, the Citizen mentioned an offer of papers from one of the Boards which was made him by a clerk. Two hundred rupees will, at any time, procure any paper, and we have ourselves heard allusions made by native gentlemen to documents the existence of which ought not to have been known beyond the Secretariat. Tharawaddy, the King of Burmah, obtained copies of all the despatches sent by Government to the Resident at his Court; we believe he paid 150 rs. for each through the agency of Messrs. —.—.—Friend of India.

DR. O'SHAUGHNESSY.—The Calcutta Trade Association, with much good taste and good feeling, have set an example to their fellow citizens of gratitude to a public benefactor. The Association have addressed a letter to Dr. W. B. O'Shaughnessy in acknowledgment of the immense service he has done the community of Calcutta by the introduction of the Electric Telegraph. They ask him to sit for his picture that it may be hung up in the Town Hall. The Government of India have awarded to Dr. O'Shaughnessy £2,000, in testimony of his services in establishing the Electric Telegraph from Diamond Harbour to Calcutta. The Dr. proceeds home in June, to lay before the Court of Directors his plans for establishing lines throughout the continent of India.—Hurkaru.

POPULARISATION OF THE SANSKRIT SCRIPTURES.—The Bengal Recorder informs us that an association of gentlemen in Northern India have it in contemplation to reprint the entire text of the Vedas from the works of Dr. Max Müller, Dr. Weber, Mr. Beaufey, and others, with a Hindoostanee translation at the foot, in small Roman letters. It is believed that this will break the mystic charm of the Veda, by reducing them to the level of a native understanding. We are not quite sure that it will have this effect, as a learned native, to whom we showed Dr. Wilson's translation of the Rig Veda, coolly told us that it was a forgery, and had no more connection with the Vedas than the Purans.—Friend of India.

JOTEE PERSAUD.—A bill has been filed in the Supreme Court here by one Issoreepersaud, a nephew of Jotee Persaud, the great contractor, in which the former claims from the latter about a million sterling, belonging, as is alleged, to the estate of the plaintiff's late father, which Jotee Persaud is said to have managed for some years on behalf of the widow and son. He has also called upon the Government to suspend further payments to Jotee Persaud.—Hurkaru, April 14.

HOSPITALS IN HOLKAR'S TERRITORY.—We have received an interesting account of the successful efforts made by the British officers at the court of Indore, to establish hospitals and dispensaries in that principality. These efforts appear to have originated in the example set by the late widow of Jeswunt Rao Holkar, the mother of the present young Maharajah; who, in 1847, opened the Indore city dispensary. This institution soon obtained such usefulness that the resident persuaded the Durbar to grant funds for the support of a hospital, which was accordingly opened in September, 1849, and placed under the charge of Dr. Impey, the residency surgeon. Since then dispensaries, subordinate to the Indore general hospital, have been opened at Oojein, Rutlam Dhar, and Maunpore, and have been the means of most extended usefulness.—Delhi Gaz. April 17.

THE WING OF THE 14TH (SKINNER'S) IRREGULARS, quartered at Leodiana, have volunteered to go to Burmah. The Commander-in-Chief thanked them in person after a parade, but declined their services, saying that they were not at present required.—Ibid.

THE PUNJAB.—We are in receipt of letters from various parts of the Punjab, and with the exception of a few petty disturbances, all seems quiet. From Leia we learn that refreshing showers have fallen every second day, and the crops promise a most abundant harvest; grain is selling at very cheap rates,—wheat one maund and fifteen, to one maund and twenty seers per rupee; gram one maund and ten, to one maund and fifteen seers; barley two maunds and ten seers; bajrah one maund and thirty seers; goor fourteen, fifteen, and sixteen seers; and salt sixteen seers per rupee.—Delhi Gaz. April 21.

FATAL SCORE.—We announce, with regret, the death of Captain Charles Colby, H.M.'s 98th regiment, and commanding the convalescent dépôt at Murree, under the following distressing and warning circumstances. On the 30th of March, Captain Colby went out tiger shooting, at the foot of the hill on which the Murree dépôt is situated, and, having come upon a large male tiger, fired at and wounded him, as he supposed mortally. Upon this, he drew near with his elephant, and descending, approached the animal, which lay to all appearance dead, but which, on his coming close to it, rose, sprang upon him, and mutilated him dreadfully. He was rescued by the mahouts and other natives of the shooting party, some of whom immediately started for Rawul Pindee to give information of the occurrence, on receipt of which two medical officers at once mounted an elephant, and repaired to the scene of the accident, which they reached early the next morning. They found Capt. Colby dreadfully wounded, and judged amputation of the left arm absolutely indispensable, expressing their opinion and decision to the sufferer, who immediately consented. The operation was immediately performed near the shoulder; but so great had been the loss of blood and the injuries the tiger had inflicted, that the patient quickly sank, and expired the same evening.—Englishman.

THE 3RD SIKH LOCAL CORPS.—A correspondent of the Delhi Gazette, writing from Hoshiarpore, 18th April, says:—"Captain Repton's gallant 3rd Sikh Local Corps were drawn up in line to hear the contents of a communication read to them, which had been received from the Board of Administration, in reply to their volunteering for Burmah. On the word being given, 'Volunteers to the front,' every file, like a mighty engine, moved by a single spring, came to the charge, giving three hearty cheers, after which the line formed three sides of a square, and the commanding officer addressed the regiment in the most flattering terms, highly complimenting their spirit. The fine appearance of this corps does the officers infinite credit, and they might be justly proud of the character the regiment has gained. I have heard that it is the intention of the Board to recommend them to the notice of the Governor-General, but at the present time it is unknown if Government will accept the services of this fine body of Sikhs. They are of great stature, possess immense muscular power, besides a degree of energy and active enterprise that particularly distinguishes them from the apathetic natives of Hindostan. They have also the advantage of the latter in hardihood, and, from being more free from the trammels of caste, capable of enduring long marches, and patiently submitting themselves to the most painful privations; and there is not the least doubt they will strain every effort to maintain for themselves a degree of military reputation for bravery, and cause a spirit of emulation, when called upon to take the field, and to come in collision with the Burmese, who would find them an obnoxious foe."

A HEAVY BILL.—It is said that the Governor-General has sent in a bill to the king of Barmah for twenty-five lakhs of rupees up to the 31st ult., with a notice that he will be charged at the rate of a lakh a day for the expenses of the expedition until he comes to terms! If payment can be enforced, the war at this rate will be a profitable affair.—Englishman, April 22.

A HINDOO GENTLEMAN, named Lalla Bindrabun, has been nominated postmaster at Delhi.

BABOO PRASOON TAGORE intends, it is said, to bridge over the Echapore canal, and open a road from that place to Moolagore. We are glad to see intelligent native gentlemen setting an example to their countrymen of expending money on patriotic and public works instead of silly nautches. There are some enormously rich natives in Calcutta who still spend all their spare cash in absurd or licentious shows forgotten in a week, and who rarely contribute a pice towards public and permanent good. This is equally disgraceful and disgusting.—Hurkaru.

THE COUNCIL OF EDUCATION has abolished the Government Pay School at Burdwan, as there are many free schools there which leave the pay schools with scarcely any pupils.—Ibid.

STEAM NAVIGATION TO CHINA.—Messrs. Dent and Co., the China merchants, with a spirit which does them infinite credit, have started a screw steamer, on their own account, between Hong-Kong and Calcutta. She is called the Paon Shan, and is about the power and size of the P. and O. Company's steamer Shanghai. She left Hong-Kong at the same time with the Canton, belonging to that company, but was thoroughly beaten in the race; although the Canton had orders to stop at Singapore for coals, and the Paon Shan came on direct. In consequence of this competition, the P. and O. Company have resolved to start two steamers for China on the 18th inst.—Friend of India, April 9.

THE RAILWAY.—As we are not likely soon to return to the subject of the rail, we would take our leave of it at present by urging on the Government at home to take up the question at this presidency with greater decision. Whatever caution may have been required at the outset of the undertaking, now that we are fairly embarked in it, our movements ought to be marked by more promptitude and determination. It is now eight years since the question of the rail was first brought distinctly before the Court of Directors, and we have only 120 miles of rail in progress. At the end of eight years, we have nothing sanctioned beyond the first, or, as it was called, the experimental line. In eight years from the time when the first rail of 129 miles was completed in America, the Anglo-Saxons on the other side of the Atlantic had 3,399 miles open for traffic. It can never be the intention of Government to stop short at Burdwan or at Rajmahal. This would be to relinquish all right to the future Government of India. We should as soon expect to hear that the Court of Directors contemplated the abandonment of the Punjab and Scinde, as that they had ever dreamed of stopping the rail short of Delhi.—Friend of India.—We have always considered the interference of the East-India Company with the railroad as a public misfortune. Had it been left to the untrammelled efforts of a body of proprietors, it might have been finished and in active operation by this time. Under the retarding influence of the East-India Company, few of us, we suspect, will live to travel on it even to Mirzapore, and to reach Delhi will be reserved for another generation.—Englishman.

DURING THE RECENT FESTIVITIES at Puttealla upwards of thirty natives are said to have been crushed to death by elephants and in the crowd, during the progress of the processions, and whilst scrambling for money.—Delhi Gaz. April 24.

THE CODE FOR THE ARMY is at length finished, and in course of publication. It may be looked for in the course of a month.—Ibid. April 26.

THE MEN OF THE 38TH N.I.—The Englishman understands that the result of the Court of Inquiry held at Barrackpore, on the late proceedings of the 38th regt. is the summary dismissal from the service of eight men of that regiment, who made themselves conspicuous by their mutinous bearing on the occasions which called for the assembly of the court. It is further stated that, on the order reaching the camp of the 38th N.I. for the dismissal of the eight ringleaders, the entire corps had refused to proceed a step further!

SIGN OF THE TIMES.—Among the "domestic occurrences" reported in the Hurkaru yesterday, was one worthy to be noted as a sign of the times; we allude to the marriage, according to the rites of the Christian Church, of Baboo Gyanendromohun Tagore, an educated Hindu of the higher classes, who has embraced Christianity, to Kamal (we are glad to observe no "Miss" prefixed), the daughter of the Rev. Krishnamohun Bonnerjee. An accident prevented our being present at so interesting a ceremony, which was, we understand, attended by a large concourse of Calcutta fashionables. There is nothing "bread and butter" about Gyanendromohun's conversion, as, on the contrary, he imperils thereby his succession to a rich patrimony: we are therefore extremely glad that he has the good sense to abjure tail-coats, and mate himself with one of his own people.—Citizen, April 17.

BRIGADIER RICH.—A letter from Nynce Tal states that Brigadier Rich is in so bad a state as to preclude any hope of his ability to resume his command duties at Lahore, or elsewhere. We sincerely trust this may be soon gainsaid by better intelligence; but as we have reason to think the fact is unquestionable, we deem it probable that Brigadier Roberts may be ordered to the charge of the Lahore division.—Hurkaru, April 14.

GOVERNMENT SALE.—The sale of the presents made to the Governor-General during his late tour in the upper provinces, held by Messrs. Hamilton and Co., at their premises, was concluded yesterday; Messrs. Mackenzie, Lyall, and Co. were the auctioneers, and realized excellent prices. Throughout the sale, the greatest order and good temper prevailed, and biddings were very spirited. We have not ascertained the exact amount of the property sold, but imagine it must have been very considerable. One shawl tent realized upwards of Co.'s Rs. 5,000, and several magnificent shawls are thought to have realized full prices.—Hurkaru, April 5.

PRACTICAL JOKING.—We are sorry to hear a report that two officers of a regiment at Agra have been amusing themselves practising a little kaligraphy, but that, unfortunately, instead of confining themselves to their own names, they took to imitating those of some of their friends, and are likely to get into trouble by this equivocal and dangerous kind of mimicry, which we believe has already been made the subject of a court of inquiry.—Chronicle, April 12.

INSOLVENTS.—We are given to understand that some native gentlemen of Calcutta are about to present a petition to the Governor-General of India, praying him not to allow parties to take the benefit of the Insolvent Act without giving a satisfactory proof of their private mode of life; as one of them, Baboo Goluck Nanth, is likely to suffer a loss of about Rs. 40,000 on account of Mr. — seeking the benefit of the said act.—Bombay Telegraph, May 3.

THE FOURTH ORIUM SALE took place in Calcutta on the 12th April, and produced the following results:—

	Chests.	Highest.	Lowest.	Average.	Proceeds.
Behar...	1,920	1,075	1,060	1,065-14-9	20,46,575
Benares, 880	1,075	1,065	1,069-5-6		9,41,025

This shows an increase over the averages of the third sale, Rs. 36-4-7 for Patna, and Rs. 38-4-6 for Benares.

EQUIPMENT OF NATIVE CAVALRY.—The Delhi Gazette of April 26, in reference to the misbehaviour of the 5th troop of light cavalry at Shubqudr, observes,—"The most fatal error that the Government of this country ever committed was to raise regular regiments of native cavalry, and mount, dress, equip, and arm Hindoos and Mussulmans like British dragoons. In Bengal we have ten regiments of regular native cavalry, most of which, it is no exaggeration to say, are worse than useless to the public service. We do not mean this as a reproach to the men, for we see them behave admirably when they are mounted, dressed, and armed after their own fashion; but it is entirely the fault of the system. If a soldier of undoubted courage finds himself seated on a slippery saddle, cramped by tight clothes, and a sword in his hand that is good for nothing, but to make a bright show on parade, he will hesitate—nay more—he will refuse to charge an enemy; for if he does, he goes to almost certain destruction, while he knows that, far from offending the enemy, he cannot even defend himself. It is imperatively necessary that a cavalry soldier should find himself strong and firm in his seat, easy in his dress, so as to have perfect freedom of action, and with a weapon in his hand capable of cutting down an adversary at a blow. There is scarcely a more pitiable spectacle in the world than a native trooper mounted on an English saddle, tightened by his dress to the stiffness of a mummy, half-suffocated with a leather collar, and a regulation sword in his hand, which must always be blunted by the steel scabbard in which it is encased. This poor fellow, who has the utmost difficulty in sticking to his saddle, whose body and arms are rendered useless by a tight dragon dress, and whose sword would scarcely cut a turnip in two, is ordered to charge the enemy. And if he fails to do what few men in the world would do in his place, courts of inquiry are held, regiments disbanded, and their cowardice is commented upon in terms of astonishment and bitterest reproach. This is truly ridiculous. The system, and not the men, are to be blamed. Let them be mounted on their own horses, their own saddles; dressed after their own fashion, and armed with the sharp native sword, and they will fight as well as the native irregular cavalry. Until this change be made, we shall constantly be hearing of affairs like the recent Shubqudr one."

THE MILITARY BOARD is likely to be abolished, and its functions exercised by superintending officers stationed at Calcutta, Agra, and Lahore.—Hurkaru, April 22.

IN COMMERCIAL MATTERS the export and import markets have undergone but little alteration, the latter especially continuing in an unsatisfactory condition. Money is plentifully obtainable at reasonable rates, by the European mercantile community. Government stock still rules high. Exchange has unexpectedly risen, and is now quoted at par.—Ibid.

JOHN CHINAMAN v. JACK TAR.—England must look out for the preservation of her naval supremacy! Brother Jonathan has beat her at her favourite amusement of yachting; he, however, is a smart young fellow of her own stock, and she is rather proud of the defeat than otherwise. But when her Jack Tar, with all his strength and all his skill, succumbs to John Chinaman in a rowing match, it is time for her to bestir herself. Some boat-races came off on Thursday and Saturday last. On the morning of the latter day, six Chinese belonging to the steamer Canton, we hear, pulled against as many English sailors, and beat them very completely. Jack, incredulous of his defeat by the pigtailed, thought it was the fault of his boat, and so challenged the victors to an exchange. This was readily assented to, and in the evening the race was run over again; but as Sally had beaten Emily in the morning, now Emily beat Sally, though somewhat less completely. Jack was on his mettle, and came in a very good second.—Ibid. April 13.

THE TROOP OF THE 7TH LIGHT CAVALRY.—Referring to the unfortunate business at Shubqudr, where a party of the 7th cavalry refused to charge the enemy when they held him at a disadvantage, our further information states that there has been considerable variety of evidence before the Court of Inquiry held for the elucidation of conduct so utterly disgraceful. One party says, Lieut. Tottenham never caused the "charge" to be sounded: the trumpeter declares "he was not ordered to sound it." The native officer affirms that the trumpet did sound: that they went on with their officer in consequence, and that the officer gave the order to "charge." Amidst this confusion, it is difficult to imagine the reality; perhaps we may approximate it in supposing the commander gave the word to advance: that the trumpeter sounded something like no tune at all, and got a fit of the horrors at going on unsupported, looking rather to fall himself into the rear than to inviting and exciting others to a forward movement; also, that the native officer, fully comprehending what was wanted, dashed on side by side with his European comrade, and in his ardour believed, what he wished, that the charge had sounded.—Hurkaru, April 23.

DISEASE AT AKYAB.—An Arracan letter confirms the report of the prevalence of cholera and fever at Akyab. Both are said to be raging to a fearful extent among the native population at Akyab. The people employed on the public works are described as suffering specially from cholera, which in almost every case proves fatal. The public works, therefore, which were progressing so rapidly under the superintendence of Lieut. Nuthall, will have to be suspended till a reinforcement of workmen can be sent from the presidency, which we suppose will be done by the first opportunity.—Hurkaru, April 23.

SHOOTING ON THE SALT-WATER LAKES.—"Last Good Friday night, a party of four, consisting of Bob Acres, King Harry III., 'the Editor,' and myself, set out in quest of wild boars. We arrived at the lakes at one, but did not make a fair start before half-past two or later, each of us in a separate dongah. Not long after, the boatmen espied a monstrous boar, and when we had ascertained from them its whereabouts, we set about planning how best to commence the operations. His grisly majesty was making glorious havoc in a paddy-field somewhat distant from us, between which and us there lay a large jheel and another field thick-set with trees. 'The Editor,' therefore, thinking it would be but child's play firing at the animal from such a distance, separated from us, and after a circuitous route came close upon the boar, who probably had got scent of our arrival, and was about crossing the further jheel, when a ball from 'the Editor's' rifle caused it to retrace its steps, and us to rejoice in him. Having agreed upon landing, upon the information of the boatmen that the animal had been mortally wounded, and lay stretched on the fields, apparently lifeless, we performed the usual preliminaries of stripping, &c., and went in search of the brute. We had just come up to his dreadful majesty, when up he rose, and, taking one hasty glance at us, made a charge towards us. King Harry immediately fell a-kneeling, to pray, as we thought, but, as he afterwards explained it, to fix his spear in the ground; 'The Editor's' rifle was unloaded, and he had only his spear along with him; so that Bob Acres and myself were the only two that could do anything in the firing way. The black monster then came on, and was received on the point of 'the Editor's' spear, which immediately snapped in two, and he as quickly moved out of the way of being ripped open. As 'the Editor' turned aside, Bob Acres and myself opened our battery of four barrels upon the grisly monster, and, to our consternation, this did not seem to distress it in the least, for presently we saw the old grunter with the Editor snugly ensconced on its back (riding on a live hog-skin—a startling fact this, and hardly credible you may think, but notwithstanding true, I can assure you), going in the direction of King Harry, who, poor fellow, was doomed to have no part in this business; for old grim fell down dead within a few yards of him, probably from the effects of the five balls it carried.”—Hurkaru.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

THE MEDICAL BOARD.

Fort William, April 10.—The Governor-General of India in Council is pleased to notify the following rules:—

Members of the medical board, having their allowances reduced during leave of absence in the ratio of the forfeiture incurred in a similar case by a general officer on the divisional staff, will henceforth be subject to the provisions of para. 1 of G. O. by the Governor-General, dated Feb. 20, 1852; and with reference to para. 2 of that order, any of them, when proceeding on leave, will forfeit from his consolidated salary of Rs. 2,409. 13 a month, the sum of Rs. 719. 8. 10; and from his allowance of Rs. 400 a month, as presidency surgeon, Rs. 119. 7.

The sum thus forfeited will be passed to the medical officer appointed to act in his room, who, if a superintending surgeon, attached to a circle in the Upper Provinces, will resign, in like proportion, from his aggregate personal receipts, for the superior allowances, as acting member, Rs. 601. 12. 5 a month, or, if belonging to a circle in the Lower Provinces, will relinquish Rs. 502. 3. 9 per mensem.

The Governments of Fort St. George and Bombay will be pleased to issue the necessary instructions for applying the principle of this order to the members of their medical boards, whose consolidated salaries differ from those prevailing in Bengal.

COURT-MARTIAL.

ASSISTANT-SURGEON D'ARCEY.

At a general court-martial assembled at Ferozepore, on the 23rd March, 1852, Assistant-surgeon O'Connor D'Arcey, M.D., of H.M.'s 87th royal Irish fusilier regiment of foot, was arraigned on the following charge:—

For conduct highly unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, in having, at Ferozepore, early on the morning of the 21st January, 1852, taken advantage of the absence at parade of Serjeant James Cartwright, of H.M.'s 87th royal Irish fusiliers, to enter Mrs. Cartwright's sleeping apartment while she was in bed, and then and there laid his hand upon her person, and addressed to her highly improper language, indicative of his desire to betray her into improper intercourse with him.

Finding.—The Court are of opinion that the prisoner is not guilty of the charge preferred against him, and hereby acquit him of the same.

Confirmed.

(Signed) W. M. GOMM, General,
Head-Quarters, Camp Sirhind, Commander-in-Chief, 12th April, 1852, East-Indies.

Remarks by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

1. I find myself unable to concur in the verdict of the Court in this instance, after careful examination of its proceedings laid before me.

2. It is to be regretted also that the prisoner should have been allowed by the Court to adduce so much matter extraneous to the charge before it in his defence, and again in his rejoinder to the reply of the prosecutor, necessarily elicited by the license which had been accorded to the prisoner.

3. And I must regard the conduct of the prisoner himself as highly reprehensible, in the unwarrantable use which he has permitted himself to make of the opportunity so left open to him for aspersing the character of his commanding officer, and for casting injurious imputations upon the motives by which his commanding officer has been actuated in entering upon this prosecution, motives which are clearly shown, upon the face of the documents before me, to have had their origin solely in a becoming sense of public duty, and an anxious desire to uphold the character of the gentleman free from taint among the officers of his corps.

4. The prisoner will be discharged from arrest, and ordered to return to his duty.

MADRAS.

THE NIZAM'S STATE.

Affairs in the Nizam's country seem now approaching a crisis, from which there may be no escape for his highness, except a cession of territory. The contingent is many months in arrears of pay, and without hope of adjustment; the Nizam's own forces console themselves for their destitutions by mutiny, plunder, and bloodshed; the treasury is inextricably embarrassed, ordinary sources of revenue being far below current requirements, and extraordinary ones having failed to make good the deficiency; the private hoards of the sovereign are almost exhausted, so far as regards cash; the minister is at the end of his chapter of expedients for staving off ruin—out of favour at the residency, and disliked by his master; the whole country languishes and decays, a prey to rapine, extortion, and disorder; and the Government of India have sternly reiterated their demand for the liquidation of their claims on the Deccan exchequer. 'Your money or your territory,' is the brief but pithy purport of their message to his highness! Under these circumstances, it appears impossible for the Nizam either to fulfil the pecuniary condition prescribed, or to avoid the alternative of surrender. Lord Dalhousie has peremptorily refused to be put off anew with vague promises, and Suraj-ool-Moolk has no power of performance. He is said to have suggested the middle course, of placing the government in the hands of British agents, but his master's authority for doing so appears more than doubtful. That measure, however, though very distasteful to his highness, would be the salvation of the state, and if the Governor-General really desires to deal generously with a falling ally, and to promote the welfare of his subjects at large, he will take the opportunity afforded by British claims on the Nizam to introduce that superintendence over the entire kingdom, instead of appropriating a portion in sovereignty, and leaving the remainder to aggravated evils. No-thing can be clearer than the fact, that if the Nizam's whole revenues cannot provide for the pay of the contingent, he will be less able to produce it out of diminished resources; the appropriation of any part of his territory is a direct step toward the confiscation of the whole, which must shortly and inevitably follow. If, however, the Supreme Government prevailed on the Nizam, as they doubtless might do, to admit British officers into the administration of his affairs, not only would future debt be avoided, but likewise that existing might be cleared off, and a general reform introduced into the Deccan, with equal advantage to sovereign and people. It is notorious to those cognizant of the real state of matters, that the involvement of the treasury, although beyond the reach of native help, is not utterly and abstractedly desperate. Competently and honestly audited, the debts of government would prove within its means of liquidation, and its revenue adequate to meet its outgoings. Fraud of every kind has been immemorially at work, and will continue operative until foreign checks put an end to it. If Lord Dalhousie were to propose to place British officers in charge of the revenue and police administration, at the same time instituting a rigid examination of the accounts of the state and its creditors, he would pursue a humane course toward the Nizam, and likewise best study the honour and interests of the company. There is no necessity for harsher measures; the means of restoration are not extinct in the Deccan. On the contrary, it might be made as flourishing as any part of India, if properly governed for the Nizam. The accession of British officials to the rule of it would involve the cutting down of sinecures, the arrest of speculation, the enforcing of regularity and good faith, the prevention of cruelty and oppression, the maintenance of order, the due payment of debts and taxes, and the administration of justice. Confidence and security would take the place of alarm and danger, and the renovation of the state could not but ensue. Its embarrassments are by no means insurmountable, nor its resources exhausted, supposing that able hands and upright hearts were entrusted with the management of affairs. The want of rectitude, talent, energy, and strength, long continued on the part of the Deccan government, has alone brought it into its present dilemma. A few years of British sway would work a marvellous transformation; and as British policy has done much to precipitate its impending ruin, it would be more just and magnanimous if the Company interfered to save the Nizam's dominions in their integrity, instead of aggravating his misfortunes by annexing them piece-meal. True, his pride would revolt at the subjection; but how much better that it should be outraged for his own good and that of his people, than that he should be gradually shorn of his dominions, under pretence of leaving him free sovereign of what is not swallowed up! The time has come for stringent measures, and it behoves the Company to take those most equitable and least open to objection, apart from the personal feelings of an ignorant, weak, and self-willed, though well-meaning, native prince. A few years of British administration would render his country prosperous, and it might then be delivered over again to him, under an arrangement that would guarantee the continuance of that better state of things. Surely this were preferable to seizing a portion for ourselves, and consigning the rest to worse disasters than have already befallen it!—Madras Spectator, April 21.

THE LONDON MAIL of March 24th arrived at Madras on April 25th, per Hindustan. The next mail of April 24th left Suez on May 7th, for Madras and Calcutta.

THE LORD BISHOP OF MADRAS had returned to that presidency from Vizagapatam, by the Hugh Lindsay steamer.

Sir R. ARMSTRONG had quitted Madras for Bangalore and the Neigherries.

THE CARNATIC STIPENDIARIES have already despatched one of their number, the ablest and best informed Mussulman, perhaps, in southern India, by the steamer Precursor. Hyder Jung Bahadoor will give the good folks at home a very fair idea of what an educated Mahomedan gentleman really is, and as he is armed with a very heavy grievance, and will be duly seconded, his mission is likely to prove of much consequence to his countrymen. A large crowd of friends assembled to see him embark, most of them wondering at his temerity; for the Indian Mussulman rarely ventures to brave the perils of the sea.—Athenæum, Mar. 27.

THE MOPLAHS.—Extract of a letter from Cannanore, dated 18th April:—"Moplah outbreaks and rumours of outbreaks have not come to an end yet. An express reached here on the morning of the 15th from the chief civil authority at Tellicherry, requesting the immediate despatch of a party of sepoy to reinforce the native detachment at that place, and the holding in readiness of a detachment of both Europeans and natives, which is to march down at a moment's notice, as a gang of Moplahs was reported to be nearing towards Tellicherry, with a view of attacking a Hindoo temple in the vicinity of that station. Accordingly, a detail of the 39th M.N.I., consisting of a subadar and 38 privates, left this on the same day, after which a provincial order was issued, warning the light company of H.M.'s 94th regt., under Capt. Sykes, and a party of 50 sepoy, under Capt. Hart of the 39th N.I., to prepare for Moplah service. No further instructions regarding their movements have, however, up to this day, been received from the civil authorities, and we are in an anxious state of suspense. We fervently hope that there will be no occasion for the services of the field detachment, and that the Moplahs have dispersed. A letter from Tellicherry mentions that the intention of these bloodthirsty villains was to come and attack the Hindoo temple suddenly, and after dealing out as much spoliation and destruction of human life as they possibly could, to take possession of the place, and then meet their own death at the hands of the Kaffirs; but having heard that the latter had taken measures to foil their designs, they have resolved to do nothing for the present, but to await the next favourable opportunity for the accomplishment of their object. The authorities here expect to receive letters from the magistrate of the disturbed district to-day, and should nothing turn out, the order directing the companies of the 94th foot and 39th regiment N.I. will be countermanded. The commissioner, Mr. Strange, is now at Malleapooram, where a detachment of Europeans and natives are located."

We are informed by a letter from Malabar, that the trial of the Moplah, Abdoolah, for being engaged in the last outbreak, is to come off at Tellicherry almost immediately. Under the impression that this trial may cause considerable excitement amongst the Mussulman portion of the community, the magistrate has taken the precaution to strengthen the sepoy detachment stationed at that place.—Bombay Telegraph, May 3.

THE RAJA OF COCHIN met with an accident. He was returning home from his morning ride, and suddenly the horse fell. His highness received a kick on his left side, and his head was severely injured by being knocked against the ground. He was conveyed to the palace, and Dr. Pringle, the residency surgeon, immediately sent for. His highness lay for some days senseless, and all hopes of his recovery were given up. He was, however, gradually becoming better, and it is expected that in a short time he will be perfectly restored.

SPIRIT OF THE NATIVE ARMY.—The sound of coming combat has aroused the military ardour in the bosoms of all real soldiers in all the presidencies, and the misconduct of the Bengal 38th N.I. at Calcutta, and the 5th troop of the 7th cavalry before the enemy at Peshawur, has made the war-dogs strain upon the slips, to take the places at once of those who seem disposed to be slack in the hour of necessity. The 7th Madras cavalry have, we are assured, been all alive to see if they could not obtain a place on the frontier, after six years of the dulness and inaction of garrison duty at Saugor, and a little mixed brigading might often be an eminently expedient thing for both armies. The Bengal sepoy has in too many cases been spoiled by flattery and indulgence—were he to see somewhat more frequently than he does ducks and mulls alongside of him, he might come to a considerably more correct appreciation of his true position than that which he presently entertains of it. The Madras 22nd from Nagode, and 32nd from Jubulpore, are burning for the fight in Burmah, and plead the proximity of geographical position as a special reason for the preference.—Bombay Times.

AN EMUKE.—A serious affray occurred in the fort of Trichinopoly on the night of the 2nd April. Not far from the Madura or southern gate is a Hindoo pagoda, in which, on the night in question, a feast was held, succeeded by the usual procession of the idol, accompanied with tom-toms, flambeaux, fireworks, &c. In passing up the street which leads eventually to the Rock gate, the procession had to pass a Mahomedan mosque, in which certain followers of the prophet were at the time engaged in their customary devotions. According to an understanding of many years between the Mahomedans and Hindoos, the latter discontinued the beat of the tom-tom and the blowing of their instruments as they approached the mosque; but the Mahomedans, contrary to the custom recognised and acted upon all previous occasions, made an attempt to prevent the procession from passing the mosque at all, which led at first to a stiff altercation, and afterwards to an open and violent quarrel. In the course of the affray, certain of the Mahomedans, approaching the platform on which the idol was carried, pulled it down, and, dashing it upon the ground, broke it to pieces. Enraged at this outrage, the Hindoos came up to the assistance of the fallen object of their worship, when, hard blows being dealt on both sides, 20 or 25 individuals of either creed are said to have been severely wounded:

the conflict was renewed the following day. The matter reaching the ears of the head assistant magistrate, Mr. Smith, he repaired immediately to the spot, and, putting an end to the fighting, sent the wounded to the civil hospital. He also placed a strong guard of sepoy near the chook, or general bazaar, as well as in two or three other streets in the fort, to prevent a recurrence of the outbreak. In revenge for the damage done to their idol, the Hindoos, it appears, have demolished a few of the smaller mosques in the fort; and a rumour was current that there was to be another severe trial of strength between the Mahomedans and Hindoos before the expiration of many days.—Athenaeum, April 13.

THREE DESERTERS from H.M. 51st regt. were marched into the fort under an escort on Tuesday morning. They were apprehended at Ongole, in the disguise of Mahomedans, and personate the character, we hear, most admirably. One has become a convert to the faith of Islam, and conceives himself bound to be critical in the matter of cookery.—Ibid., April 15.

THE 5TH NIZAM'S CAVALRY.—Our readers are now prepared to hear that the rissaldar of the 5th Nizam's Cavalry, Mirza Zoolficar Ali Beg, and all the other prisoners brought to trial by Captain Yates, have been fully and honourably acquitted of each and all charges brought against them. Those charges will be found, with the famous urzee on which they were founded, in the issue of the Athenaeum for the 11th March. Every decision of the punchayets has been reversed; eighteen of the perjured conspirators have been summarily dismissed the service; and Capt. Charles Yates has been considerably "exonerated," according to a Portuguese euphemism, from all military duty, pending the pleasure of the Governor-General, with permission to reside in any station of the Nizam's dominions until instructions have been received from Lord Dalhousie.—Ibid., April 17.

THE 5TH REGT. N.I., at Vizianagram, have received information that they are destined for Khyook Phyou. This is of course a heavy blow and great discouragement to the gallant 5th, who expected to be allowed to enter for a share of the laurels at Burmah.—Ibid.

BOMBAY.

THE LONDON MAIL of March the 24th arrived at Bombay on April the 20th, per Victoria.

RAPID TRANSIT of the overland mail of the 8th March.—At ½ past 4 on the afternoon of the 3rd of April, just as the passengers for England were going on board the Ajdaha, the lighthouse gave intimation that the Acba was entering the harbour with the English mail of the 8th March, which had only occupied 25 days 16 hours, taking longitude into account, in its transit. This is the first occasion that has ever occurred in which the outgoing and incoming steamers were actually at anchor together, and when, with just twelve hours of further abridgment of the transit, return of post would have been saved. The Acba left Suez on the 20th March, at 10.45 p.m., and Aden on the 27th, at 1.30 p.m., and has thus accomplished the entire run from the former port to Bombay in twelve days and a few hours.—Bom. Times.

TRADE OF BOMBAY.—The following is an abstract of the trade returns for Bombay, for 1850-51, which have just been published:—The total value of the imports from all ports, excepting those of Scinde, Goozerat, and the Concan, amount to Rs. 8,45,37,683. From the ports just named as excepted in the above, Rs. 6,02,16,206 are received; of this, Rs. 6,01,33,094 came under the general head of merchandize. The grand total of imports therefore amounts to Rs. 14,47,53,889. The exports only amount in value to Rs. 10,97,47,737, but this includes Rs. 8,13,70,075 of re-exports, that is, of merchandize that already paid import duty, and merely lands at Bombay in transit to some other port; so that the value of our commerce, apparently amounting to Rs. 25,45,01,626, in reality, when the re-exports are subtracted, amounts to Rs. 17,31,31,551. Subtracting the amount of the re-exports from the total imports, we have goods to the value of six millions and a half sent by land into the interior, or consumed at the presidency; and in like manner deducting this from the total exports, we have nearly three millions sterling worth of exports, the produce of the presidency or the interior. For the last five years, the value of the imports has on an average amounted to Rs. 10,63,95,523,—the imports of the past year having exceeded the average by Rs. 3,83,59,917. The value of the exports, again, over the same period, amounted to Rs. 9,41,42,347, the actual exports of 1850-51 exceeding this by Rs. 1,56,05,390.—Bombay Times, May 3.

THE "HIRSUTE HONORS," which some time since began to make their appearance on the upper lips of the officers of H. M.'s infantry in the Bombay presidency, have all at once disappeared; the contingency is understood to have come to pass somewhat in this wise. A demi-official letter from the adjutant-general of the army to the address of the Bombay commander-in-chief was received some time after Sir John Grey had left, stating that it was currently rumoured that the infantry officers in the royal service were wearing moustachios, and that, if the rumour was true, a general shaving had better take place directly. The head of the British army, zealous at all times for the maintenance of customs and usages, was at the present juncture more than ordinarily obdurate on these points, especially when the introduction of anything continental was in contemplation, and hinted that, unless the matter was attended to, an official communication, such as admitted of no gainsaying, was likely to be the result. "Off with their beards" was the order immediately, and faces just before decorated with a hairy upper lip became smooth in a twinkling.—Bombay Times.

HURRICHUND RAGOONATHJEE, a well-known Hindu gentleman of Bombay, died here lately, after only a few hours' illness, at the advanced age of eighty-six. His body was burned with sandal wood, and the fire was extinguished with milk.—Telegraph, May 3.

THE WAR IN BURMAH.—A letter has been received in this island from Calcutta, stating that, after the rains, a large force from Bombay will be required by the Supreme Government, to carry out their intentions in Burmah. The communication goes so far as to name the quantity and quality of the troops which this presidency will be called upon to furnish for service. One troop horse artillery, 300 European cavalry, two European infantry corps, with five native regiments, and a proportion of sappers and miners. The letter is from an authentic source, else we should greatly doubt the correctness of the information we have given above. What can be wanted with horse artillery and European cavalry in Burmah? Besides, if required, would troops of these arms reach the seat of war sooner from Bangalore, embarking of course at Madras, than coming down to Bombay from Poona, and there embarking for Burmah?—Telegraph, May 3.

APOSTASY.—A local contemporary announced some days ago that a European gentleman, who had formerly held a commission in the Hon. Company's Bombay army, was about to turn Mussulman: the report is, we are sorry to say, but too true. The individual alluded to is named Lawrie, and was until two years ago an ensign in the 5th Bombay N.L.I., which corps, we understand, he was obliged to leave, in consequence of having broken his arrest. This young man's father is still alive in England; he is an old Anglo-Indian. What could have induced the son to turn renegade to his faith and country, we know not, except that he has been in very bad circumstances since he left the army, and we suppose now hopes to better himself amongst the followers of the Prophet. On the 16th ult., we understand, there was a triumphant procession of Mussulmans to and from the Jumma Musjeed, in which the new convert played a conspicuous part. It must have been truly lamentable to see an Englishman so degrade himself. Mr. Lawrie has, to do him justice, made strenuous exertions to obtain employment ever since he left the army, but has not succeeded, although we understand there is no fault to be found with his moral character. We may mention—to show the young man was not particular what employment he obtained so that he would be able to earn bread—that Mr. Lawrie offered himself some few months ago to a member of the civil service here, who keeps a large racing stud, to act as groom, or riding boy, under the orders of the gentleman's English trainer, on a very small salary. His services were declined, we believe, because the owner of the racing stable had more English boys than he wanted. It can hardly be believed that this youth has embraced his new creed from conviction, and therefore people naturally say he has done it from interested motives. It is a sad story altogether.—Ibid.

RAILWAY MATTERS (our correspondent at Tanna writes) are progressing rapidly; the specifications and schedule of quantities for contract No. 3—that part of the line from about four miles beyond Tanna to Cullian—are now lying on view at the railway office, and tenders will soon be made for it. "The course of the line at a glance presents no difficulties, but if the ground is examined a little closer—and that is what I would recommend those persons to do who contract—it will be discovered to be an almost continuous bed of rock, requiring an enormous amount of money and labour in excavating; and before any hasty conclusion is come to, it would be advisable to take this particularly into consideration. Neither the cuttings nor embankments are very formidable; but, in the first, the difficulty will be found from the nature of the rock; and in the latter, the scarcity of materials for their formation. I do not envy the contractor—from my knowledge of the locality—if he superintends the works himself, as it appears is done by the contractors on the other parts of the line. He will require an iron constitution. I recently heard from a friend, who visits several parts along the course, and from his description, I could not have imagined a place more hot or unhealthy in the presidency, 'As to heat,' he says, 'while taking my breakfast this morning, it struck me I would look at the thermometer: this was at eight o'clock, and I found it 103 deg. How much must it be at noon?' The railway company here are advertising for tenders for another section of their line, extending from the end of Mr. Jackson's contract beyond Perseek Point, to a point in the neighbourhood of Cullian. This, we believe, will complete the "experimental line," properly so termed; and the next contracts will be for the extension towards the Ghauts, the capital for which has yet to be raised.—Telegraph, May 3.

THE BOMBAY STREAM NAVIGATION COMPANY have obtained from Government an extension for five years of the contract to convey the mails from Bombay to Kurrachee tri-monthly. Under the able management of the present direction and Captain Litchfield this company is thriving.—Ibid.

BARODA.—By a native letter from Baroda, we learn that, a short time ago, Bhawoo Tambekur, minister of the Guicowar, gave a splendid entertainment to his master, on which occasion he (the bhawoo) presented to the maharaja presents, consisting of jewels, valuable shawls, &c. worth Rs. 40,000. We are also told that arrangements are being entered into by his Highness for making over to the bhawoo, by assignment, certain villages in Enam, and additional allowances, amounting altogether to Rs. 60,000 a-year. The above will be added to the bhawoo's former salary of Rs. 6,000 per annum, with 2,000 for palankeen allowance. The bhawoo is, moreover, shortly to have a dress of honour conferred upon him at the public durbar, and a durbar elephant, with durbar attendants, are in future to be at his disposal. The same letter states that, through the influence of the bhawoo, one of the Guicowar's youngest daughters has been offered in marriage to the adopted son of the late ex-rajah of Sattara, now residing at Benares. Bhawoo Tambekur has given out that, if the young man's family will agree to the alliance taking place, he (the bhawoo) has sufficient influence with the British Government to induce them to restore the throne of Sattara to the bridegroom elect, as adopted son of the late ex-rajah. This last the minister declares openly he will effect by the same means that he effected the removal of Col. Outram—"by money," which can do everything now-a-days with the English Government." Letters have been received in Bombay from the family of the ex-rajah of Sattara, now residing at Benares, asking whether it is true that Bhawoo Tambekur has really such influence with the Bombay Government as he pretends. The bhawoo himself continues to boast that, through the influence of money judiciously expended, he turned Col. Outram out of the Baroda residency.—Telegraph, May 3.

KUTPUT.—A few years ago the wife of a member of council in this presidency wished to purchase a few pearls, and desired her butler to bring a pearl merchant to the house. The man came, and pearls to the amount of a hundred, or a hundred and fifty rupees were purchased. After the pearl merchant had left the drawing-room some little time, the butler came up alone, and showed his mistress and some other ladies present, a magnificent set of pearls, which were worth at least Rs. 80,000. The ladies being under the impression that the pearl merchant had sent up these pearls to be looked at, examined and admired them, returning them into the butler's hands to take back to the merchant. Nothing more was thought of the matter until some months afterwards, when the books of a certain native banking-house, which had large connections at Baroda, were seized by Government authority. In those books one item was found of a pearl necklace, given (as a bribe) on such a day to the wife of Mr. —, and valued at Rs. 70,000. The gentleman was told of this, and he questioned his wife, who remembered perfectly having on the date mentioned purchased pearls of a comparatively small value. After various inquiries, it turned out that the butler of the gentleman had certainly received the valuable pearls from a party connected with the Baroda banking-house, and had promised to give them to his master's wife. The rascal had kept them by him for some time, and then had taken advantage of the opportunity afforded by a pearl merchant being in the house to show them to his mistress. The pearls could never be traced beyond the butler's possession; and as he declared he had given them back to the soucar, whilst the latter's books showed them as debited to the Baroda government for Kutput, the natural conclusion which every one came to was, that the pearls were turned into hard cash by the butler, who is now one of the richest men of his class on the island.—Telegraph.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL deserves success in his expedition against Burmah, and goes the right way to command it, by attending to everything himself. Having discovered that there are several officers at the presidency with intentions of either proceeding on furlough, or retiring from the service, his lordship in council has written to the Commander-in-Chief, stating that, taking into consideration the possibility of extended operations against the Burmese, no furlough on private affairs shall be granted to any military officer at Bengal, Madras, or Bombay, and that no application to retire from the service shall be entertained, save on such grounds as the Government may deem to be sufficient, until the operations now commenced are concluded, or until further notice is given. In accordance with this, a circular has been promulgated from the head-quarters of this presidency (and doubtless the same step has been adopted at the other two presidencies), directing that "no furloughs on private affairs, beyond the presidency limits, and no retirements from the service, are to be sanctioned to officers of the army, except on very special grounds, to be judged of in each case by the Government, until further orders." Judging from this measure, it would appear that the Governor-General does not contemplate a speedy termination of the war, or that the capture of Rangoon and Martaban (which, although not effected at the date of his order, were yet certain) would be sufficient to terrify the enemy into submission.—Telegraph, May 3.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

COTTON DUTY.

Bombay Castle, March 24.—The duty of nine annas per Indian maund, leviable under Schedule A. of Act I. 1852, on the importation of cotton from foreign ports in India, was foregone by Government pending the result of a reference to the Government of India; and, with the concurrence of that authority, it is now formally remitted, under Section XXII. of that Act.

DUTY ON FOREIGN COTTON, THREAD, TWIST, AND YARN.

Bombay Castle, April 28.—Under the authority vested in him by Section XXI. of Act I. of 1852, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council has been pleased to remit 3 per cent. of the duty prescribed by Schedule A attached to the aforesaid Act, for foreign cotton, thread, twist, and yarn, and to determine that, in future, 7 per cent. only shall be levied on these articles instead of 10 per cent.

FREE PASSAGE ON GOVERNMENT STEAMERS.

Bombay Castle, April 2, 1852.—Pursuant to instructions from the Government of India, directing that the rules under which free passage upon Government steamers plying on the river Indus may be granted, should be in exact conformity with the usage existing in Bengal, in regard to passage on board the Ganges steamers. The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to cancel such parts of the G. G. O. No. 490 of 1850, as may not be in accordance therewith, and to direct, that the rules laid down in the "Notification" from the Government of India, dated 16th October last, republished in the Bombay Government Gazette of 1851, pages 1450-1451, be considered applicable to both military and medical officers, proceeding in the Government steamers on the Indus, with the following exemptions, viz.:—

- 1st. Officers ordered to proceed by water with troops, or escorting public military stores or treasure.
- 2nd. Cadets or young officers proceeding for the first time to join their regiments.
- 3rd. Warrant officers of departments, and subordinates, medical officers, including hospital apprentices, proceeding in charge of troops or stores, or in attendance on troops.
2. Half the messing charges for officers so proceeding on duty are for the present to be borne by the Government, the remainder being paid by the officers themselves; the charge being a "per diem" allowance, is not considered to include the cost of wines, beer, or liquors, which form a separate charge, to be defrayed by the officers themselves.
3. Cadets, or young officers, proceeding in the first instance to join their regiments, are allowed a free passage, but forfeit their tentage while on board, and further, pay for their messing, no part of the charge being borne by Government.
4. Warrant officers, and subordinate medical officers, including hospital apprentices, proceeding on duty in charge of troops or stores, or in attendance on troops, are allowed a free passage, in a small cabin, if available, otherwise a screened berth erected in any convenient place; they do not of course mess at the captain's table. Of the messing charge, Rs. 2 per diem for these ranks, three-fourths will for the present be borne by Government, and one-fourth by the individual.

5. Officers, whether going on, or returning from leave of absence or furlough, whether on medical certificate or on private affairs, officers transferred from one corps, department, appointment, or command, to another, officers joining an appointment or command, or generally officers in receipt of tentage (except those mentioned in the 2nd para. hereof), are looked upon precisely as ordinary passengers, and enjoy no advantages over the public generally, in respect of passage.

FACILITIES TO THE NEWSPAPER PRESS.

Commodore's Office, Bombay, April 8, 1852.—It having been represented to the Com.-in-Chief that much inconvenience arises to the public as well as to the different offices for the publication of newspapers, owing to the reporters being kept on board the Hon. Company's men-of-war for a longer time than is necessary upon the arrival of the ships in this port, it is hereby ordered—

That upon the approach of any men-of-war of the Hon. Company's service to this anchorage, a correct account of all news of any description that can be collected during the voyage be clearly written out, and upon the arrival of the ship off the "Apollo Bunder," a boat with an officer be instantly despatched with the document to the master attendant's office, at whatever hour of the day or night it may happen, and every facility will be given to the public and to the reporters of the different journals to make what use of it they please.

The Com.-in-Chief makes this arrangement, hoping it may be attended with benefit to all parties, as well as to prevent the captain of the ship having his attention called off, when he ought to be attending to his duty in bringing her to the anchorage.

TRANSIT ACCOMMODATION.

Commodore's Office, Bombay, April 8, 1852.—Whenever any ships of war of the Hon. the E.I.C. are at Suez or Aden, and are under orders to return to Bombay, either with or without the mail, and from any untoward event the steam-vessel of the Peninsular and Oriental Company should have met with any accident to prevent her proceeding on her voyage, it is ordered, that the officer commanding at either of the above ports is to offer to receive any parcels, papers, or publications, for conveyance to this place, and to recollect by so doing he is not only performing his duty, but conferring a favour on the public at large, who are frequently kept for weeks without them.

RATE OF EXCHANGE FOR H.M.'S NAVAL SERVICE AND FOR CHINA.

Bombay Castle, April 13, 1852.—The Hon. the Court of Directors have announced in a despatch addressed to the Govt. of India in the Financial Dep., that the rate of exchange for bills to be drawn in the official year 1852-53 for H.M.'s naval service, and for public service in China, as also in respect of officers' family remittances and effects, has been fixed at 2s. the Company's rupee.

CEYLON.

GENERAL SMELT.—The general and Mrs. Smelt embarked on the Waterloo on Saturday at 5h. p.m. The whole of the troops in garrison lined the way from the post-office to the wharf. The general on arriving was received by a salute, and the bands playing appropriate airs. After having addressed a few words to the soldiers, and taken leave of those assembled to say farewell, the master-attendant's boat received the party, and in half an hour they were all on board the ship. The Waterloo got under weigh at eleven at night, but the fatal accident to one of her men delayed her until ten o'clock on Sunday, when she was enabled to proceed on her voyage.—Times, April 13.

A NEW ARTICLE OF COMMERCE.—An advertisement announces a rather novel object of export in the shape of dried coffee-leaves. Speculation is at fault as to what use they can be put to.—Ibid.

THE KANDY DISTRICT COURT.—We notice the death of the secretary of this court on the 6th instant. Mr. Pereira was one of the few Singalese who have visited Britain, and had in consequence obtained the somewhat quaint soubriquet of "London Pereira." He was we believe one of those intimately connected with the inquiry which so harassed the late district judge. The secretary has soon followed his chief to that "bourne from which no traveller returns."—Ibid.

SINGAPORE.

THE PIRATES.—The H.C. steamer Pluto returned to Singapore yesterday; by this opportunity we have received some particulars of the operations against the Suleo pirates, settled on the east coast of Borneo, to avenge the late murder of Mr. Burns and his companions, on board the Dolphin. The nests of pirates—genuine buccaners, about whose character and habits there can be no doubt, and from whom hard knocks might be expected—in this part of the Archipelago, have hitherto escaped all punishment, and their haunts have remained unvisited by our ships of war. An expedition was recently sent thither under the direction of Capt. Massie, comprising the following vessels, H.M.S.

Cleopatra, and the H.C. steamers Semiramis and Phoe. This strong force proceeded to the mouth of the Kinaabatangan river, and despatched fifteen boats up the river to Tunkup, the headquarters of the Suleo pirates. After much exposure to the sun, and by dint of great perseverance and personal exertions, the flotilla reached the place, when a sharp fire was opened upon them from the stockades. The utmost activity prevailed in the flotilla, but although the stockades were carefully approached and surrounded, the pirates managed to escape unscathed, making repeated stealthy attacks as opportunity offered. Of our expedition we hear that three men were killed—one belonging to each ship—and an equal number wounded; whilst on the part of the pirates there was not the slightest indication of a man being even wounded. The expedition found large stores of grain, &c., which they destroyed; they also burned the villages, and left not a hut standing. The pirates were determined upon showing no quarter,—they actually fired into the boat with a flag of truce.—Straits Times, Mar. 8.

CHINA.

THE REBELLION.—The following communications are from our Chinese correspondents:—

"We understand that the whole of Lo-kin-hú, under their chief, Lin-sap-pat, took possession of the city of Lo-ting-chow at the beginning of last month; driving away the Tartar officers, both civil and military, and discharging all the prisoners from the gaols, but ordering the inhabitants of the city to carry on their business as before, and not permitting any one to disturb or plunder them. By such regulations the people are as comfortable as ever."

"We have received the following from a timber merchant of Low-chow, lately arrived in Canton. On a dark night, in the middle of last month, the rebel chief Wa-chun, secretly, with more than 16,000 men, made an attack on the cities Hun-yuen, foo and Ho-ches-chow (to the westward of Low-chow-foo), which they succeeded in taking. They carried away the official seals of the chief magistrates, and ransacked the government treasures and store-rooms, but did not offer the slightest violence to the inhabitants. It is said that the loss of their seals has induced the magistrates to commit suicide by hanging themselves, whilst, on the other hand, the people are as comfortable as before. In consequence of the inhabitants of the province of Kwang-se everywhere receiving similar kind treatment from the rebels, they have ceased to offer any resistance to them, but permit them to go about from place to place as they please."—Friend of China, Mar. 30.

PIRATES.—H.M.S. Lily had a brush with some pirates about three weeks ago, the particulars of which have only recently come to hand. Capt. Sanderson, it appears, being at Amoy, with the sloop under his command, was informed that some piratical vessels were at anchor in Le-loo Bay, a short distance from Quemoy, and proceeded thither about the 10th of February. When at the entrance of the anchorage, he lowered and manned his boats, with intention of boarding three large junks; but, without waiting for the visit, the three junks, at a given signal, opened fire on the Lily, with such effective aim that six shots were lodged in the foremast, besides other small damage about the bows; two men also being severely wounded. Signals were immediately thrown out recalling the boats, and not a shot was returned until their crews were on board, when the guns being trained for effective broadsides, the Lily sank one—two—in equal turns, every soul of their crews going to eternity instantly. The third junk ran in shore, and was subsequently destroyed. So ended this "gallant" encounter.—Ibid., Mar. 6.

We leave Capt. Sanderson and his Lilies to the discreet consideration of the Anti-Massacre Committee. If that Committee find a true bill against Sir James Brooke and his helpmates, then must they turn the focus of their inspection to no less cruel deeds on the coast of China. One—two—a dreadful yell, and all was over. Who knows whether innocent men, prisoners, might not have been, also, on board, and so participated in the fearful result? The thought is painful; and if Capt. Sanderson can show himself guiltless of wanton bloodshed, so much the happier shall we be. We will now say no more.—Ibid., Mar. 10.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The latest advices from Cape Town are to the 18th of April. It would seem by the last accounts from the seat of war, that the enemy was as active as ever; for we learn that Col. Eyre had a desperate action with a strong body of the enemy, in which Capt. Gore, of the 46th, and Dr. Davidson were killed, and several men wounded. Major Tottenham, of the 12th Lancers, had also had a smart brush with the enemy, in which he also lost some of his men, and was very hard pressed by the Caffres.

The following general order gives a detail of operations:—

"Head-quarters, King William's Town, April 6.

"The exertions of the troops in following up the enemy after his expulsion from the Waterkloof and Blinkwater fastnesses, through the Amatolas, across the Kei, have been marked with much success, and are of such a character that the Commander-in-Chief congratulated the army on the prospect of a speedy termination of the war, which must result from them, and give permanent peace to the country.

"Among the most remarkable achievements of the forces employed in these operations since the general order of the 16th of March, are Lieut.-Col. Perceval's affair near the Cab Indoda, on the 31st of March; Lieut.-Col. Michel's operations in the Amatola, Wolf River, and Semya valleys, extending from the 26th of March to the 3rd of April; Lieut.-Col. Eyre's clearing the Perie bush on the 31st of March; Major-Gen. Somers's movement upon, and capture of 1,500 head of Gaika cattle on the Thomas River, on the 30th of March; and Lieut.-Col. Eyre's pursuits of the enemy with his herds across the Kei, capturing 1,386 head of Gaika cattle and 15 horses, on the 3rd inst., by one of the most enterprising and successful forays of the campaign, in which Major Armstrong, Cape Mounted Rifles, Captains Cureton and Oakes, 12th Lancers, greatly distinguished themselves.

"During these several operations many of the enemy were killed; he is dispersed and flying in scattered parties, and offered such feeble resistance that no casualty has occurred among the troops. The troops occupy every stronghold in the Amatolas, and it is impossible the enemy can retain even a footing—so is he pursued in every direction.

"The Commander-in-Chief is very sensible of the service of the burghers who have turned out and aided in these operations, especially those under Commandants Gilfillan, Bowker, Delpoit, Bouwer, and Plessie."

The severest brush appears to have been Major Armstrong's, whose report is subjoined:—

"Camp, Right Bank of the Kei, April 3, 1852.

"SIR,—I have the honour to acquaint you that having separated from your column on the morning of the 1st inst. with a force of cavalry as per margin,* I proceeded to cross the Kei, according to your instructions. About 300 Caffres rushed down to dispute the ford. I forced my way through under a spirited fire from the enemy. Having gained the high ground on the left bank of the Kei, I halted for two hours. During this time the enemy collected in considerable numbers from all sides. Upon my moving off they followed in rear on both flanks to the number of upwards of 100 mounted men, and about 400 on foot. After moving some distance I found that they were pressing on my rear-guard, and having now got them into tolerably favourable ground for cavalry, I turned round and charged them with my whole force, and completely routed them. A party of the 12th Royal Lancers charged, under my orders, to the right rear, turned the enemy's flank, exposing their position in some dry gullies, from which they were driven. The enemy must have suffered severely, and many were seen going away wounded. From the nature of the ground it was impossible to find out the exact number killed. Ten bodies were counted, but I think they must have lost considerably more. They did not again molest my line of march.

"I halted again for some hours on the high ground above the difficult pass between the Kei and the Somo rivers. At 1 p.m. I proceeded through the pass, and met you at an early hour on the morning of the 2nd inst.

"I proceeded to support Major Pinckney, according to your orders; and having been informed by that officer that a lot of cattle had passed in the direction of the Thomas River, I followed them up, and captured about 100 head, three miles beyond that river.

"I have to bring to your notice the services of the officers commanding the different detachments under my orders, viz.—Captain Digby, 12th Royal Lancers; Lieutenant Smith, Cape Mounted Rifles; Lieutenant Brink, Armstrong's Horse; also Mr. Conway, the guide, for his zeal and activity.

"My casualties are—one private of the Cape Mounted Rifles, slightly wounded; one troop horse of the Cape Mounted Rifles, and one ditto of Armstrong's Horse, killed by rolling over the krantz coming through the pass.

"I have, &c.,

"J. ARMSTRONG, Brigade-Major,

Cape Mounted Rifles, Commanding Detachment.

"Lieutenant-colonel, 73rd Regiment, Commanding Division."

* 12th Royal Lancers—1 captain, 47 rank and file; Cape Mounted Rifles—1 subaltern, 37 rank and file; Armstrong's Horse—3 subalterns 33 rank and file; Total—1 captain 3 subalterns, 97 rank and file.

The reception given to Sir Harry Smith by the colonists on his return to Cape Town must have been most gratifying, as all the papers are filled with addresses lamenting the departure of the ex-governor, extolling his deeds, his administration of the affairs of the colony, and expressing respect for his person and character.

Major-General Cathcart, the new governor, had arrived at British Caffraria, and commenced operations where his predecessor had left off. But nothing can be known as to his success in the field for another mail or two. His Excellency arrived at King William's Town on Good Friday, where he had a long interview with Sir Harry Smith, who left on the following morning for the place of embarkation. On his starting, although dark, the whole of the troops in garrison voluntarily turned out to greet him, together with a large number of inhabitants.

NETHERLANDS INDIA.

An affair has recently occurred at Batavia which will, in all probability, lead to the most serious results. The Dutch authorities have seized the American yacht Färt, and placed her owner and crew on their trial for high treason. They declare that they found the mate of the yacht in the interior of Sumatra, with a letter in his pocket addressed to the sultan of Jamby, exciting him to revolt. Her owner, Mr. Gibson, on the contrary, affirms that his note was merely a request to the sultan to show any courtesy in his power to his mate, who was travelling in the interior, and that any treasonable expressions in it, if such there be, were inserted by his native writer. He himself is utterly ignorant of the native language, and considers himself the victim of a deliberate conspiracy. The American commodore has been applied to, and a man-of-war will, it is believed, shortly call at Batavia to inquire into circumstances. Mr. Gibson is a New Yorker, and a contractor for the American navy.—Bombay Telegraph, May 3.

LOOCHOO ISLANDS.

We have been favoured with the following brief account of the visit of the Sphinx to Loochoo.

H.M.'s ship Sphinx arrived at Loochoo on the 6th February. The principal object of her mission to that place was to deliver to the authorities a letter from Lord Palmerston, H.M.'s principal secretary for foreign affairs, in answer to a communication which those functionaries had previously addressed to his lordship; also, to inquire generally into the position of the missionary Dr. Bettelheim. Capt. Shadwell was desirous of delivering his communication within the walls of the royal city of Shooe. The authorities at first demurred to this, and wished to receive it at Napa, the seaport. After some negotiation, however, the latter gave way, and it was ultimately arranged that it should be received at Shooe, as proposed.

On the 11th, Capt. Shadwell, accompanied by his officers and a guard of seamen and marines, landed in state and proceeded to Shooe, a salute of seven guns being fired and the national colours displayed at the mast-head, as Lord Palmerston's letter left the ship. The distance from the landing-place at Napa to Shooe is about three miles, the places being connected by a good paved road. On arrival at the gates of the citadel, the guard, after presenting arms, remained outside, the officers only proceeding inside the walls. On passing within the second wall, they were received by the regent, the ministers, and a large retinue, and conducted by them to the hall of audience, where Lord Palmerston's letter was formally presented and respectfully received. A conference then ensued, having reference chiefly to the affairs of Dr. Bettelheim, in the course of which the Loochoo authorities repeatedly expressed most friendly intentions towards him. At the termination of the interview, the officers were invited to an entertainment by the regent, which was given at his residence outside the walls of the citadel. Refreshments were also at the same time supplied to the seamen and marines, after which the party returned to the ship.

The Sphinx remained at Loochoo until the 17th. During their stay the officers were allowed to roam about the island wherever they pleased, and always met with the greatest civility from the inhabitants.

Dr. Bettelheim reports, that, since the visit of H. M. S. Reynard in October, 1850, his position has been much improved, and that his medical labours were eminently successful during the prevalence of the small-pox.—China Mail, March 14.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

The first Arab who, as far as our knowledge goes, preached the unity of God at the fair of 'Okâz, was Qoss of the Iyâdites. This tribe was closely related to the Qorayshites, and lived in Arabia Deserta, where the Christian religion had made great progress among the Bedouins. Qoss was an eloquent orator, a distinguished poet, an equitable arbitrator, and he acquired by his wisdom the title of "the philosopher of the Bedouins." His sayings, of which we possess, unfortunately, very few and unsatisfactory specimens, were intelligible only to the initiated. He expressed, however, distinctly that there was a better religion than that of the Haram. Mohammad in his youth saw Qoss; but he was dead when he assumed his prophetic mission.

Probably, in connection with Qoss was Omayyah of Tayif. He was a contemporary, but somewhat older than Mohammad, and his life and tenets, which are authenticated by his own verses, shed much light on the origin of the Islâm. Abu al-Calt, the father of Omayyah, had been a distinguished poet; but was surpassed by his talented son, who was superior to most of his contemporaries in poetical genius. Omayyah made several mercantile journeys to Arabia Petrea and Syria, and studied the Scriptures and the tenets of Christians and Jews; he renounced his belief in idols, and was one of those who used to speak of Abraham and Ishmael and the orthodox faith. The latter is the name by which Mohammad subsequently distinguished his own tenets from those of the Qorayshites. He also abstained from things which are forbidden according to the notions of the Mussalmans, as wine, unclean food, &c. He dressed in sackcloth to do penance for his sins, and taught the Qorayshites to put at the head of their writings, "In thy name, O Lord!" instead of the form of, "In the name of the merciful and compassionate God," which has been preserved by Mohammad. The most frequent subjects of Omayyah's poems were our future state, the resurrection of the dead, and the day of judgment. Mohammad allowed that his doctrine much resembled that of Omayyah. It is said that, observing that his countrymen were ripe for a better faith, he expected to be chosen by Providence as their prophet; and to his disappointed ambition is ascribed the bitter enmity which he conceived against Mohammad, when the latter assumed the prophetic office. Omayyah composed elegies on those who had fallen at Badr fighting against the new faith; but the prophet forbade his followers to learn them by heart.

It has not escaped the attention of Arabic historians, that the great revolution of the establishment of a new religion was foreshadowed. In the introduction to the most ancient biography of Mohammad, we find a chapter inscribed, "An account of four men, who without revelation (before Mohammad) saw the fallacy of Paganism;" which I translate here:—"One day the Qorayshites celebrated an annual feast, and assembled before one of their idols. They expressed their adoration for it, slew sacrifices, surrounded it, and went round it. Four men, however, kept secretly aloof, and said, 'Let us be friends, and open our hearts to each other;' and they agreed. These four men were, Waraqah, a cousin of the first wife of Mohammad; 'Obayd Allah b. Jahshd, equally a cousin of Mohammad, for his mother, Omaymah, was a sister of the prophet's father; 'Othman b. al-Howayrith; and Zayd, of the 'Adyy family. One said to the others, 'By God, you see our tribe does not know the true religion. They have corrupted the religion of Abraham, and are worshipping a stone, and walking round it, though it does neither hear nor see, and can neither do good nor harm. Friends, seek for yourselves, for you are not in the right path.' They consequently dispersed over the country, and went in search of the orthodox faith of Abraham. Their result was as follows:—

"Waraqah embraced Christianity; he obtained the Scriptures from those who believed in them, and acquired a considerable share of knowledge from the followers of the Bible.

"'Obayd Allah remained a sceptic until he embraced the religion of Mohammad. He emigrated to Abyssinia with his wife, Omm Habybah, who was a daughter of Abû Sofyân, and who had also embraced the Islâm; and on his arrival in Abyssinia he turned a Christian, and died as such. When he passed the followers of Mohammad, after he had embraced Christianity, he used to say, 'We see, and you attempt to see.' Mohammad married his widow, Omm Habybah. He sent 'Amr b. Omayyah Dhamry to the Negush to woo her. The Negush gave her a dowry of 400 dinars, and Khalid b. Sa'yd b. al-Ac placed Mohammad in possession of his bride.

"'Othman b. al-Howayrith went to the emperor of the Byzantines, and professed the Christian religion. The emperor received him with great kindness.

"Zayd remained as he was. He turned neither Jew nor Christian. He renounced the religion of his tribe, would not worship idols, and abstained from eating what had died of itself, blood, and what had been sacrificed to idols; and he disapproved of burying girls alive. He used to say, 'I worship the God of Abraham;' and he exposed the errors of his tribe. Asma, the mother of 'Orwah, related that she had seen Zayd, when he was a very old man, leaning his back against the Ka'bah, and saying, 'O Qorayshites, by Him in whose hands the soul of Zayd is, none of you follow the religion of Abraham except myself.' Then he continued, 'O Lord, if I knew which form of worshipping Thee is most acceptable to Thee, I should adopt it; but I do not know it.' Then he prayed, resting his forehead on the palm of his hands. Ibn Isbaq says, 'I heard that Sa'yd, the son of Zayd, and 'Omar b. al-Khattab, his second cousin, requested the prophet to intercede for the soul of Zayd. The prophet said, Yes. Zayd said the following verses on leaving the religion of his tribe:—"Shall I believe that there is one lord, or one thousand? Is the government of this world divided? I have given up al-Lat and al-'Ozza; for I am strong-minded. I neither believe in al-'Ozza, nor in her two daughters; nor do I visit the idol of the banu 'Amr (a branch of the banu Asad); nor do I believe in Ghanam. He was my Lord when my intellect was yet weak; but now I worship the Merciful as my Lord, in order that he, the Lord of forgiveness, may pardon my sins. Observe piety to God, your Lord! As long as you fear God, you will not be lost. Do you observe the good? Their abodes are the gardens of paradise, whilst the wicked will be condemned to fire: they do not prosper in life; and when they die, they will have a fate, which will contract their hearts.'"—Sprenger's Life of Mohammad.

Mohammad was of middling size, had broad shoulders, a wide chest, and large bones; and he was fleshy, but not stout. The immoderate size of his head was partly disguised by the long locks of hair, which in slight curls came nearly down to the lobe of his ears. His oval face, though tawny, was rather fair for an Arab; but neither pale nor high coloured. The forehead was broad, and his fine and long but narrow eyebrows were separated by a vein, which you could see throbbing, if he was angry. Under long eyelashes sparkled bloodshot black eyes, through wide-slit eyelids. His nose was large, prominent, and slightly hooked, and the tip of it seemed to be turned up, but was not so in reality. The mouth was wide; he had a good set of teeth, and the fore-teeth were asunder. His beard rose from the cheek-bones, and came down to the collar-bone; he clipped his mustachios, but did not shave them. He stooped, and was slightly hump-backed. His gait was careless, and he walked fast but heavily, as if he were ascending a hill; and, if he looked back, he turned round his whole body. The mildness of his countenance gained him the confidence of every one; but he could not look straight into a man's face: he turned his eyes usually outwards. On his back he had a round fleshy tumor, of the size of a pigeon's egg; its furrowed surface was covered with hair, and its base was surrounded by black moles. This was considered as the seal of his prophetic mission, at least during the latter part of his career, by his followers, who were so devout, that they found a cure for their ailments in drinking the water in which he had bathed,—and it must have been very refreshing, for he perspired profusely, and his skin exhaled a strong smell.

He bestowed considerable care on his person, and more particularly on his teeth, which he rubbed so frequently with a piece of wood, that a Shiah author was induced to consider it as one of the signs of his prophetic mission. He bathed frequently, washed several times a day, and oiled his head profusely after washing it. At times he dyed his hair and beard red, with henna, in imitation of his grandfather, who imported this habit from Yaman. Though he did not comb himself regularly, he did it now and then. At first he wore his hair like the Jews and Christians; for he said, "In all instances, in which God has not given me an order to the contrary, I like to follow their example;" but subsequently he divided it, like most of his countrymen. Every evening he applied antimony to his eyes; and, though he had not many grey hairs even when he died, he concealed them by dyeing or oiling them, in order to please his wives, many of whom were young, and inclined to be giddy; and whose numbers he increased in proportion as he became more decrepid.—Ibid.

At a meeting of the Bombay Branch Royal Asiatic Society, on the 8th April, several impressions of long inscriptions taken from the rock-cut caves in the island of Salae, by Lieut. Brett, were laid on the table. The manner in which these have been obtained is most satisfactory. Mr. Brett uses gutta percha for this purpose. It is heated in water until sufficiently softened to admit of being spread over the rock, and pressed into the cavities of the letters. After this, the gutta percha is removed, and the letters now in relief are carefully smoothened down to a common level with a hot iron; printers' ink is then passed over them, and they are impressed on cloth or paper. As soon as a sufficient number of copies have been taken, the gutta percha is again boiled down and applied over the next portion of the inscription, and so on until the whole is obtained.

Ibn Huokul, in his account of Scinde (lately translated by Major Anderson), gives the following account of Moultan and of an idol there:—

"This town bears the name of the City of Gladness and Capital of Gold. A celebrated idol is contained within the place, which is worshipped by all India; pilgrimages are undertaken to its shrine from all parts, and much wealth is presented year by year to the temple and the sacred devotees. The name of the place, Moltan, is derived from a title of this idol. The temple is a structure in the midst of buildings situated in the streets of Moltan, near the bazar of the ivory-workers, on the side of the copper-smiths. In the centre of this structure stands a dome, in which is placed this idol. Round the building are houses for the various servants of the temple, and of those devoted to religious austerities. This idol is alone worshipped in Moltan, whether by people of India or of Scind; nobody lives in the building with the idol. This image is in the similitude of a human being, seated upon an elevated platform, built of brick and mortar. Sometimes the entire body is covered up; the outward skin is very red in colour, like mujeet. Nothing is left to be seen but the two eyes. Some people think the body of the idol is made of wood; but some consider it of other substance. They will not permit it to be exposed. Its eyes are composed of two jewels, and on its head is placed a crown of gold. Seated on the platform, its arms are extended to its knees, with the fingers closed up, as if counting four in number. The Umeer of Moltan takes all the wealth presented to the idol and expends it on the priests. When the sacred war-banners of Islam were first carried into India, this idol was thrown down, exposed, broken, and burnt; after which the warriors returned, having destroyed the city."

The mata, or large biting red ants, of the Rajmahal hills, which are the dread of travellers in the jungles on account of their pugnaciousness and painful bite, build their nests amongst the leaves of the mango trees, which they agglutinate with a species of web into round hollow balls; the ants are of a pale orange colour, half an inch in length, with black eyes, and are exceedingly numerous, carnivorous, and troublesome. In a house where I once resided on the banks of the Ganges, I was much troubled with an extensive nest of hornets that had taken up their abode in the thatch immediately over the entrance door: I was recommended by the natives to try the effects of the mata; a nest was accordingly brought and put into the thatch near the nest; as each hornet arrived and settled, he was immediately seized by the ants, several to each leg, others mounted on his back, and in a few seconds, and after a violent struggling, he fell dead to the ground; but whether stung or bitten to death I could not observe; in a couple of hours the ground was strewn with hundreds of hornets, and before the evening the nest was destroyed. I have seen a full-grown chameleon killed in a few minutes by these ferocious insects; the poor creature had been, together with his cage, put in the sun at the foot of a tree, from which the ants descended, attacked the animal, and killed him. These ferocious animals are eaten by the Sonthals of the vallies. — Capt. Sherwill.

A native paper of Bengal publishes an account, for which the editor pledges his veracity, of a child suckled by a she-wolf in the jungles of Moradabad. The animal was seen and killed by some native hunters, who on entering her den found a young child, which had apparently been nourished by the animal for some years. It was forwarded to the collector of Moradabad, who sent it to the Delhi Hospital, to see if it was possible to reclaim it, as it is nearly as wild as its foster-mother, creeping upon all fours, and incapable of uttering articulate sounds. It will eat nothing except vegetables and raw flesh, and turns away with disgust from cooked meat, or bread.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, June 1, 1852.

THE intelligence brought by the present mail from the scene of operations in the Burmese empire, announcing the capture of Martaban and Rangoon, and the destruction of the strong works at Kemendine, is of great importance, affording some reason to hope that this prompt and decisive proceeding may put a speedy stop to the war. The extent of the enemy's preparations, the formidable nature of the defences, especially at Kemendine,—where, in the former war, the British force experienced a repulse,—the unavailing though desperate resistance of the Burmese troops, and the comparatively small loss by which this success has been purchased, are all calculated to inspire the British army with confidence, and the Burmese authorities with apprehension.

The Indian editors are already reckoning upon this as a speedy result, and, as usual, speculate upon the annexation of another large portion of the Burmese dominions to those of British India. The most moderate appear to be content with wresting from the king of Ava one of his conquests, namely Pegu, once an independent kingdom, the people of which country, it is said, sigh to be delivered from their oppressors. They have offered, it is added, to drive the Burmese out of Pegu, if the British will pledge themselves to stand by them, and not, as in the last war, after stimulating them to revolt, abandon them to the cruelty of their tyrants.

But this does not content other writers, whose insatiable appetites would take in the whole empire of Burmah. "At present," observes one of the Calcutta journals,

"We have a narrow strip of territory, bordering for several degrees of latitude upon that hostile nation; and our whole frontier adjoining the Burmese dominions, extends from lat. 16 deg. to lat. 28 deg., which, allowing for the sweep made to the eastward in Assam, is not less than a thousand statute miles. The greater part of this extensive line is accessible to an enemy at all seasons, and a very large portion of it is very difficult to defend without long preparation, by reason of its distance from our military resources, and the nature of the country which our troops must traverse. Supposing that the whole Burmese empire were to be annexed, our extreme eastern frontier would be actually shortened, and, instead of bordering upon a semi-barbarous and impracticable government, we should come into immediate contact with the Chinese on the northern, and the Siamese on the southern part of the new boundary. With the former we are already in close proximity in another quarter, and certainly we have no other reason to complain of them as neighbours, than that they are unwilling to permit any intercourse. The Siamese have also been our neighbours in the Malay peninsula for some years, and no difficulty has been found in maintaining a good understanding with them, though some commercial disputes have arisen at Bangkok, the capital. So far from being endangered by this extension, it would rather relieve the Indian Government of troublesome neighbours."

This is consolatory information, in the event of our being compelled to "absorb" Burmah, as we have done the Punjab, which presents a most appalling prospect. Where is it proposed that we are to stop? This writer tells us that we are already in close proximity with China on one quarter, and may touch the celestial territory on another, without quarrelling with the Chinese emperor. We doubt it very much. The probability is, that a contact with China in the north would ipso facto lead to war, and its inevitable consequence, annexation. With Siam, again, it is said, we have been upon very neighbourly terms, and there is no reason why we should cease to be friends as we more closely approximate. The Siamese principal king, it is true, is a sensible and well-informed man; and, during his reign, we should perhaps have no differences. We might have occasion to ask but little, and he might be disposed to yield all we asked. But his successor might not be so compliant; he may resemble some of his predecessors; and if he should prove restive, nothing will remain but war, and more annexation!

We trust that Lord Dalhousie will, in the event of his golden-footed majesty suing for peace, discover some means of satisfying our wounded honour, and punishing the offender,—of obtaining indemnity for the past and security for the future,—without so desperate an expedient as that of seizing all Burmah. If it be true that the Marquess has sent his majesty a “little bill” of 250,000*l.* for expenses already incurred, with an intimation that he shall charge him a lac of rupees a day as long as the war lasts, we think he has adopted a wiser alternative than that of annexation. At the same time, if the Peguans really wish to become our subjects, we see no good reason why the transfer of their country should not be one of the conditions of peace,—to be in abatement of the bill.

We observe that Mr. Wilson, in his narrative of the war of 1824-26, discusses the policy of then retaining Pegu. He says:—

“The establishment of the independence of Pegu would have been a serious infliction upon the Burman state, and was well deserved by its procrustinating the war. The measure might have been carried into effect with extreme facility, as the bulk of the inhabitants of the lower provinces were of Pegu, or, Talien origin, and were well enough disposed to shake off the heavy yoke of their Burman conquerors. At the same time, there were obvious objections to the arrangement. The people were very much mixed with the Burman race, and their characters indicated neither personal intrepidity nor national spirit, which could have been relied upon as available in undertaking their defence; neither did it appear that any individual of rank or influence existed, round whom the population would have rallied, as the common object of their reverence or attachment. Subsequent events did not invalidate these conclusions, as, in the short-lived insurrection which immediately followed the war, the Talians displayed neither steadiness nor valour; and the person who came forward as their leader was an individual who had actively opposed the British, and who derived his importance from his connection with the royal family of Ava, not Pegu, his sister having been one of the wives of the present king. The only persons of any importance in Pegu were the head men of the villages, who had been all appointed under the Burman rule; and the Ron-na-Ron, a general in a foreign service, boasted no higher an origin than that of the head man of Martaban, which situation had been held by his father under the Burman government. The burthen of maintaining Pegu in its independence must, therefore, have fallen entirely upon the British power; and in the difficulty of nominating a ruler, it would, probably, have been compelled to assume the sovereignty, involving an extension of dominion compatible neither with its policy nor advantage. These considerations induced the commissioners to abstain from urging any stipulation to this effect, and to reserve it as an extremity, to which the obstinate perseverance of the court of Ava in a course of hostility might compel them to resort.”

THE approaching general election is naturally regarded by all parties in the nation with mixed feelings of curiosity and anxiety. Its result will be the turning point of important political questions. Besides the great problem which it is to solve and set at rest for ever—namely, whether the principle of Free Trade or that of Protection shall govern our system of commercial legislation—there is scarcely any part of our domestic policy which may not be mediately or directly affected by it. Parliamentary reform, finance (including the income-tax), education, are all reserved until the next session of parliament; to say nothing of the government of India, and the Maynooth grant, which is gathering a vast amount of interest in the country, and will, perhaps, decide not a few contests. The elections must determine the fate of the present ministry, and their displacement will inevitably let into power men whose views have a greater leaning towards organic changes than those which the late ministers ventured at least to avow. Momentous consequences are, therefore, suspended upon the issue of the appeal about to be made to the country.

These considerations suggest reflections of deep importance, which are apt to be overlooked in the excitement immediately preceding and attending a general election. The appeal made nominally to the country is really addressed to the constituency, numbering scarcely a million of voters,* who execute a trust reposed in them for the welfare of the whole nation, exceeding twenty-seven millions of souls. A comparatively small portion of the community has thus, virtually, the power of declaring what, for a limited period, shall be the exact policy of the Government, and who shall be the persons to administer that policy. In short, at a general election, the legislative functions of this great empire, and, in some measure, its executive functions, are resigned into the hands of one twenty-seventh part of the people, who can reconvey them to whomsoever they please, and can annex whatever conditions they think proper to the exercise of this trust, in which the welfare of all is concerned.

Looking at this enormous power in the abstract, or considering the expediency of, for the first time, lodging it in such hands (for the two other branches of the Legislature exert but an imperfect control over the House of Commons in respect to the nomination of the ministry), we should desire the amplest security to be taken which the case admitted for its right use. It would appear that the electors were called to discharge a solemn duty, requiring calm deliberation and a conscientious decision in a matter involving not their own welfare only, but that of millions besides. That tumult, the ebullition of angry passions, and, above all, drunkenness and corruption, should prevail at elections which were to expound the wishes of the nation as to the manner in which it was to be governed for seven years, would seem to be hardly consistent with the safety of the constitution or of the commonwealth. That the choice of the men who are to represent the country in its great council should be governed, in many instances, not by an honest judgment of their fitness for the charge, but by intrigue and cajolery, would appear to run so counter to the interests of the electors themselves, as well as so derogatory to their credit, that to provide checks against such an evil must be superfluous. But it is remarked by political writers, that men are seldom so honest and well-conducted in their public as in their private capacities; that, where considerable numbers act together, those moral considerations which restrain them as individuals lose much of their force, each man being countenanced and approved by his own party in whatever he does to promote their common interest.

To this million of men, however, whatever be the impulses by which they are led, is committed the grave office of selecting the persons who are to pronounce a sentence upon the present ministry,—to say whether they shall continue to hold the reins of power, or resign them to others. In the event of the latter verdict being passed, who are to be their successors? This is a serious question, and would be so considered by every elector who desired to fulfil his trust under a just sense of its responsibilities.

We may now regard the old distinctions of Whig and Tory as extinct. The modern denominations of "Conservative" and "Liberal" are fast losing their primitive significations; even the term "Protectionist" is, apparently, about to merge in some other, better calculated to express the opinions of a party which has renounced all intention to reverse the commercial legislation of the last six years, and seeks only to repair the ills it is supposed to have engendered, and to arrest its further mischiefs. The two great parties of the present day consist of those who, equally progressive in their policy, differ as to the rate of progress. Between the opinions of the Earl of Derby, the head of the present Cabinet, and Lord John Russell, the leader of the party opposed to him, upon all the great points of foreign and domestic administration, save that of protection, there is but little difference in the abstract, and that single point is to be submitted to the judgment of the country, by which Lord Derby has consented to abide. There is, nevertheless, a material difference between them as to the manner in which their views, so much in unison, shall be worked out; the one desiring to reach the object by slow and cautious steps; the other by rapid marches.

Hume, arguing upon the assumption that every government must come to a period, discusses the question whether it be more desirable for the British Constitution to terminate in a republic or in absolute monarchy; and, after comparing the good and evil of each, he gives the preference to the latter. Without meaning to insinuate that the Russell party are hankering after a republic, any more than the Derbyites are endeavouring to pave the way to absolutism, supposing Hume's theory to be a true one, these would probably be the directions in which their several principles would run, if pushed into excess.

A few weeks may be expected to enlighten us upon the important and interesting questions touched upon in this article; meanwhile, we should rejoice if it were possible for us to impress upon every elector the duty of so employing the power with which he is clothed as, not to forward his private ends, but to promote what he sincerely believes to be the good of his country.

A work called Tuqiyati-din-i-Mazdiasna, translated into Gozrathee from the Persian version of the original Arabic by Sorabjee Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, Esq., and published at the expense of Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, is announced at Bombay. This work purports to be "a mehzur, or certificate, given by Mahomet, on behalf of Mehdi-Furrookh bin-Shukhsan (brother of Sulman-i-Farsi, otherwise called Dinyar Dustoor), and another mehzur given by Alli to a Parsee named Behramshah-bin-Kheradroos, and to the whole Parsee nation."

There is a curious custom in the upper provinces of India, which may perhaps give a hint as to the origin of the deceptions of the 1st of April. The dyers (rungraz), when they have any suspicion that their indigo dye is likely to be spoilt, lie for luck. Half the falsehoods which permeate the bazaar are fabricated by the dyers in the hopes of saving their neel.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—In your paper of the 18th inst., under the heading "Porto Novo Iron Works," are some extracts from an article of the Madras Athenæum of the 22nd March last, referring to certain letters that have lately appeared in that journal on this subject. In those letters truth and falsehood have been very artfully combined, yet the writer's malevolence of purpose, too common in the case of discarded servants, is so apparent that the editor of a respectable journal should have been more cautious, we think, in giving them any sanction. But on that point this is not the place to enter.

What we wish to bring to your notice is, that, in condensing the article in question for your paper, you have, by the omission of intervening passages, inadvertently made certain observations to attach to the Porto Novo Iron Works, which in the original were used in reference to the chrome mines of Salem, 150 miles off. The picture drawn of abandonment and desolation is as applicable probably to those mines, which have not been worked for some years past, as it is certainly inapplicable to the iron works, which are in full activity, sending large supplies of their charcoal pig to this country, and executing orders for the Madras Government, the East-India Railway Company, and other parties in India.

As the statement, as it now stands, is not only calculated to do us injury, but is at variance with that which it professes to repeat (as a comparison of the two will at once show you), we have no doubt you will gladly take the first opportunity to set yourself right with your readers, and with your obedient servants,

THE INDIAN IRON COMPANY.

VIEWS OF THE UNITED STATES IN ASIA.

"I hinted in my last that I should communicate some information of importance in regard to the political changes which are awaiting the Sandwich Islands. I am now enabled, on data I confide in, to state that an extensive and well-arranged organization has been nearly completed, whose object is to revolutionize those islands, overthrow the monarchy, and establish a republic. It is not certain that the scheme originated with men in the United States, but there is no doubt it had its origin from Americans who have long resided in those islands, and propagated most industriously republican sentiments. It is probable that even before now one or more of the islands have declared their independence, and that others will soon follow; and I should not be at all astonished if, before twelve months have passed, they should all be united in a confederation, and lay their petition before the American Congress for annexation. Nothing surprises me more than that England should have made so little effort to extend her influence among the islands of the Pacific. The first knowledge which the Americans had of these portions of the earth they received from English navigators, and yet the zeal of American missionaries and the adventurous character of American merchants seem to have given a supremacy to American influence and American ideas in the Sandwich Islands almost as decisive as that which Great Britain holds over the East Indies. Several American vessels destined for the Sandwich Islands are now being fitted out in New York; and what renders the success of this movement quite probable is that there is nothing of the buccanier expedition about it. Most of its members are the sons of merchants, who take with them ventures of goods, or farmers or mechanics, who carry with them the latest and most important instruments for agricultural and mechanical arts—books, printing presses, founts of type, constitutions, laws, and Bibles. I presume that they also carry a few 6-pounders and a good supply of rifles and revolvers; but it is pretty well ascertained that the Sandwich Islanders have long since come to the conclusion that the reign of the Yankees, after the conquest is effected, becomes a reign of peace and prosperity. Wherever they go, the arts spring into life, and activity, prosperity, and abundance follow their track.

"It now also amounts to a certainty that our Government have fixed their eye upon Honolulu, or some other island of that group, as a depot for naval stores, and a convenient, if not indispensable half-way house from San Francisco to Canton.

"This movement in reference to the Sandwich Islands is but a single phase in the general current towards the shores of Asia. It certainly will not be long before the most intimate relations will be established between our Pacific states and the islands and coasts of Asia. The completion of a ship canal through the American isthmus would make the chain complete from New York to Canton; but even without it, nearly the same results would be realized by the present route of Nicaragua and the railroad of Panama, which is nearly complete. It will be but a short time before the termination of this railroad will be celebrated, and other facilities for the passage of the isthmus and the annihilation of time and distance in getting our men and our commerce to the Pacific are already in progress. No Anglo-Saxon can contemplate the advancement of his race towards the West in this matter without pride and satisfaction; and, above all, a desire to see the two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon family, England and America, cordially uniting to diffuse the light of their civil and religious institutions over the darkened shores of Asia.

"There has been unexpected delay in the sailing of the Japan expedition; but you may rest assured that every hour of detention will be fully atoned for by the completeness of the equipment and the final execution of the expedition."—Times' New York Correspondent.

The instructions given by Mr. Secretary Webster to Commodore Aulick, dated Washington, June 10, 1851, contain the following paragraphs:—

"The moment is near when the last link in the chain of oceanic steam navigation is to be formed. From China and the East Indies to Egypt, thence through the Mediterranean and the Atlantic ocean to England, thence again to our happy shores and other parts of this great continent; from our own ports to the southernmost part of the isthmus that connects the two western continents, and from its Pacific coast north and southwards as far as civilization has spread, the steamers of other nations and of our own carry intelligence, the wealth of the world, and thousands of travellers.

"It is the President's opinion that steps should be taken at once to enable our enterprising merchants to supply the last link in that great chain which unites all nations of the world, by the early establishment of a line of steamers from California to China. In order to facilitate this enterprise, it is desirable that we should obtain from the Emperor of Japan permission to purchase from his subjects the necessary supplies of coal, which our steamers in their out and inward voyages may require. The well-known jealousy with which the Japanese empire has for the last two centuries rejected all overtures from other nations to open its ports to their vessels, embarrasses all new attempts to change the exclusive policy of that country.

"The interests of commerce, and even those of humanity, demand, however, that we should make another appeal to the sovereign of that country, in asking him to sell to our steamers—not the manufactures of his artisans, or the results of the toil of his husbandmen—but a gift of Providence, deposited by the Creator of all things in the depths of the Japanese islands for the benefit of the human family.

"By the President's direction I now transmit to you a letter to the Emperor of Japan (with an open copy), which you are to carry to Jeddo, his capital, in your flag-ship, accompanied by as many of the vessels of the squadron under your command as may conveniently be employed in this service. A Chinese translation of this letter will be furnished to you by the United States' Legation at Canton, and sent to your anchorage at Hong-Kong or Macao.

"The President, although fully aware of the great reluctance hitherto shown by the Japanese government to enter into treaty stipulations with any foreign nation—a feeling which it is sincerely wished that you may be able to overcome—has thought it proper, in anticipation of this latter favourable contingency, to invest you with full power to negotiate and sign a treaty of amity and commerce between the United States and the empire of Japan.

"I transmit, herewith, the act of the President, clothing you with that power, as also copies of the treaty between the United States and China with Siam and Muscat, which may to a certain extent be of use to you as precedents. It is important that you should secure to our vessels the right to enter one or more of the ports of Japan, and there to dispose of their cargoes either by sale or by barter, without being subjected to extravagant port charges; and even more important is it that the government of Japan should bind itself to protect American sailors and property which may be on their shores. The second article of our treaty with Muscat and the fifth article of the treaty with Siam embrace these objects."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS, MAY 18.

General Godwin.—The Earl of Ellenborough inquired whether the papers connected with the origin of the war in Ava had reached this country, and whether the Earl of Derby was prepared to state whether he would lay them upon the table. He had also another question to put to the noble earl connected with that war. Reflections had already been cast on the conduct of General Godwin, the chief officer in command of the expedition. It had been stated that, owing to his having been appointed to that command, its sailing had been delayed. He (the earl) knew that that statement was destitute of foundation. He knew that General Godwin had received by express at Umballah, on the 18th of February, orders to proceed to Calcutta forthwith, and he arrived at Meerut on the 23rd; he then travelled for ten successive days, night and day, a distance of a thousand miles, and arrived on the 2nd of March at Calcutta. It was not until the 14th of March that the wing of a regiment, which was required to form part of that expedition, reached Calcutta, and it was not till a subsequent period that the 42nd regiment reached the same place; nor was it till the 25th that the other troops were ready to sail. It was therefore impossible to state with truth that the appointment of General Godwin had in any respect retarded the sailing of the expedition. As far as he could ascertain, the appointment of General Godwin to command that expedition was a very proper appointment. He was acquainted, practically and personally, with the country; he had already obtained distinction there; and it was very hard on any officer, who was serving his country to the best of his ability, and who was selected to take the command of the army about to engage in a very arduous service, that, at the very commencement of that service, his character should be maligned, and that he should be represented as a man entirely unqualified for high command. He should be glad to receive an assurance from the noble earl that no delay in the sailing of the expedition had arisen from the appointment of General Godwin.

The Earl of Derby was quite certain that the noble earl knew more of the details of this matter than any member of the Government not connected with the administration of India. He believed that despatches relating to the war with Ava had been received at the East-India House yesterday. He had not seen those despatches, but he had ascertained that the Governor-General of India imputed no delay to General Godwin in the despatch of that expedition, and that he did not cast upon that officer any blame; on the contrary, his despatches were all in honour of that officer. The papers would be laid on the table of the House within a few days.

LAW.

VICE-CHANCELLOR PARKER'S COURT, MAY 20.

In the Matter of the Will of the Late Begum Sombre.—Mr. Bacon and Mr. H. Stevens appeared in support of a petition by the Baron and Baroness Solaroli for the appointment of new trustees of a sum of Rs. 80,000, bequeathed by the late Begum Sombre to two trustees, of whom the late Colonel Dyce Sombre was the survivor, upon trust for the Baroness Solaroli and her husband and children. The application became necessary in consequence of the late Mr. Dyce Sombre having, after he had been found lunatic by the inquisition in this country, made a will at Paris, which is now under litigation in the ecclesiastical court, on the ground of his insanity.

Mr. James appeared for the Attorney-General, and Mr. Pigott for the children of the Baron and Baroness Solaroli.

His Honour made an order for the appointment of two new trustees, with the right to call for the transfer of the fund from the government agent in India, and also with liberty for the trustees to pay the costs of all parties out of the corpus of the fund when it came to hand.

ARRIVAL OF SIR HARRY SMITH. — Her Majesty's steam-frigate Gladiator arrived at Spithead from the Cape of Good Hope on the 30th May, bringing the ex-governor, Lieut.-General Sir Harry Smith, and staff, Lady Smith, and mails and Government despatches. Sir Harry's staff consists of Lieut.-Colonel Garvoek and Major Holdich, aide-de-camp.

AUSTRALIAN COPPER.—A parcel of 150 tons of copper regulus and ore, from the Kapunda mines, in South Australia, was sold at Swansea at an average of 46*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* per ton.

PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

—The half-yearly meeting of this company took place on the 29th May, when the report was unanimously adopted. The dividend declared was at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, free of income-tax, but no accounts were presented, these being furnished only at the annual meetings. The points principally alluded to were the contracts made with the Government under the new arrangement, including the communication once every two months between Singapore and Australia, taking the western route via King George's Sound, Adelaide, and Melbourne, and a proposal for providing a fund for the benefit of seamen, their widows and orphans. The new vessels which are being constructed to increase the fleet of the company are, it is stated, progressing favourably, and the Bengal is expected to be ready before the close of the present year. The purchase of the new screw vessel Formosa, intended for the Australian line, and the contracts made for two paddle-wheel vessels to be put on the Marseilles and Malta service, are also mentioned. Although the period fixed for the conveyance of the Australian mails will not arrive until January next, the directors think it advisable to make early arrangements. It is therefore proposed that the Chusan and Formosa shall perform a few experimental trips between Singapore and Sydney, to allow opportunity for the necessary organization on a route as yet wholly new to steam navigation. The differences of Abbas Pasha with the Porte having been concluded, the railway will, it is believed, be actively proceeded with, as well as further improvements in the transit through Egypt. — Times.

THE ORIENTAL BANK.—The first annual meeting of the Oriental Bank corporation was held on the 29th May, and the report and accounts were immediately adopted. The dividend, including bonus, declared, and which has already been paid to the shareholders, is at the rate of 12 per cent., and the business of the establishment is represented to have considerably increased under the privileges conferred by a charter. Power has been obtained from the treasury to augment the capital by 400,000*l.*, but at present the directors only avail themselves of the license to the amount of 200,000*l.*, making in all a capital of 800,000*l.* This additional sum will be raised in 8,000 shares of 25*l.* each, which are to be issued proportionately to the shareholders, at a premium of 20 per cent., or 5*l.* per share, and the profit carried to the reserve fund. The resolution for effecting this issue was passed unanimously, after one or two explanations from the chairman.

THE RAJAH OF COORG, accompanied by his daughter and an attendant, was presented to the Queen at an audience, on the 17th May, at Buckingham Palace, by the Right Hon. J. C. Herries, President of the Board of Control for the Affairs of India.

ANOTHER STEAMER (the Formosa), intended for the service between Singapore and Sydney, on the bi-monthly Australian route of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, is to be despatched from Southampton on the 7th of August, calling at the Cape of Good Hope and Port Phillip.

BOOKS.

Specimens of Old Indian Poetry; translated from the Original Sanskrit into English Verse. By RALPH T. H. GARNER,
 M.A., Boden Sanscrit Scholar in the University of Oxford.
 London. Hall, Virtue, & Co.

This is a well-executed attempt to recommend Hindu poetry to English readers by translations in which its noble imagery, its simplicity and tenderness, suffer as little as could be expected from so violent a change. The Sanskrit muse, to be duly appreciated, must be seen in her native dress. Mr. Griffith has, however, set off her charms with all the effect which a European costume will admit. His versification is easy, flowing, and elegant.

The selections, which are judiciously made, comprehend almost all the varieties of Sanskrit poetry,—the Vedas, or earliest religious hymns; the Hindu Leviticus, the code of Manu; epic, or mytho-heroic poetry, the Rāmāyana and the Mahābhārata; that exquisite fancy piece, the Megha Dūta, or Cloud Messenger; dramatic, descriptive, and pastoral poetry. Mere verbal fidelity,
 Mr. Griffith says, he has not aimed at, "although occasionally, in the old epics, the English will be found to run freely step for step by the side of its ancient and long-separated cousin, the Sanskrit."

We subjoin, as a specimen of the manner in which Mr. Griffith has performed his difficult task, the opening verses of the Megha Dūta, a poem by Kālidāsa, also rendered into English verse by Mr. Wilson. The subject is this: a yaksha, or divinity of an inferior order, having been banished in a forest, anxious to convey intelligence and consolation to his wife, addresses a passing cloud, to which he intrusts a message to her:

"Speed on, swift herald! thou wilt see my home
 North of my lord Kuvera's stately dome;
 Far flashes forth the jewell'd archway's glow
 With hues of glory like the Heavenly Bow;
 Thou'lt see the pleasant garden of my fair,
 And tall Mandāra gently bending there
 To touch its Lady's hand—no child might be More kindly nurtured than that favourite tree.
 There girt with emerald steps a bright pool gleams,
 And golden Lotus buds adorn its streams;
 Its Swans shall hail thy coming with delight,
 And love its cool waves better for the sight—
 Then linger gladly, nor remember more
 The mountain lake that seem'd so dear before.

Deck'd with smooth sapphires, rising from the fount,
 Sacred to rest and pleasure, stands a mount;
 A grove of plantains belts it round with gold,
 Dear spot! beloved by my bride of old!
 Fresh o'er my memory comes that glorious scene,
 As now, dark Cloud! I view thy lightnings' sheen.
 Sweet clustering trailers, and each fairest flower,
 Give scent, give beauty to my Lady's bower;
 The bright Asoka and the Kesara vie
 For her caresses as my love walks by:
 That asks the pressure of her foot, and this,
 Like me, aspiring, seeks her cheek to kiss.
 There on a pedestal of crystal placed,
 With richest gems, like budding cane-shoots, graced,
 A golden column stands; and gleaming there
 The blue-neck'd Peacock drinks the evening air,
 Looks on my love, and dances to the tone
 Of the sweet chimings of her tinkling zone."

Electoral Facts, from 1832 to 1852, impartially stated. By CHARLES R. DOD, Esq. London. Whittaker.

"This work," the author tells us, "was undertaken to satisfy such inquiries as naturally arise on the eve of a general election, by presenting a compact portraiture of the constituencies." It includes the local position, nature of the constituency, prevailing influence, registered electors, annual value of real property, population, trades, noted members and elections, newspaper politics, with the polls for the last twenty years, at every place returning a member to Parliament.

It must be obvious that a work of this kind, executed with the accuracy of the Parliamentary Companion and the other publications of Mr. Dod, and moreover extremely cheap, must be highly acceptable at this period.

The St. Helena Advocate contains the following paragraph on the supposed existence of the unicorn:—"Mr. Galton, the African traveller, states, that from what he has heard from the natives in those parts of Africa where he has been travelling, he has good reason to believe such an animal as the unicorn does really exist. The natives describe a creature something like a horse, with a horn of considerable length, running from the centre of the forehead, and that it has a spoor not unlike the horse."

The following extract from a private letter describes one of the effects of the gold discoveries in Australia:—"He (the Judge) has no servants, his horses are turned out to grass, and, being an invalid, he is pushed to court in a bath-chair by his sons."

A Manila newspaper, called the Diario de Manila, asserts that there is a Spanish lady, Senhora Andrea Lena Espinoza, living about seven miles from the town, who was born in 1706, and is consequently 146 years old.

NEWSPAPER for AUSTRALIA, VAN DIEMEN'S LAND, and NEW ZEALAND.

The "HOME NEWS," many years established for transmission to India, with the latest news up to the departure of each Mail, will in future issue a special Edition for transmission by the new Mail steamers (the first of which leaves England on the 3rd of June) to Australia, Van Diemen's Land, and New Zealand. It will contain full and accurate reports of the Political and Domestic News of Europe and America, collected up to the hour of the departure of each Mail, embracing, in addition to the usual details of a comprehensive Newspaper, every item of intelligence directly affecting the material and social interests of the Colonies in their relations with the mother country; together with the latest Market Reports of London and Liverpool, Wool, Shares, Gold Mining Companies, Shipping Lists, &c.

The "HOME NEWS" is published in London, on the day of the despatch of each Mail, and Copies will be regularly forwarded upon application, by letter or otherwise, to the Publisher. It is unnecessary to point out the advantages of the "HOME NEWS" as a medium of Advertisements for all Vessels, Employments, Productions, Manufactures, and Agencies of every description, having reference to these distant markets.

SOLICITOR.—William Henry Cotterill, Esq.

PHYSICIAN.—George Burrows, M.D., F.R.S., 18, Cavendish Square.

ACTUARY.—David Jones, Esq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 15th of May, 1852, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premium be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
30		£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30	On or before	1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40		1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
50	12th of May,	1,000	42 15 0	23 10 3
60	1847.	1,000	66 11 8	36 12 8

. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

STEAM TO INDIA, CHINA, &c.—Particulars of the regular Monthly Mail Steam Conveyance and of the additional lines of communication, now established by the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company with the East, &c. The Company book passengers, and receive goods and parcels as heretofore for CEYLON, MADRAS, CALCUTTA, PENANG, SINGAPORE, and HONG-KONG, by their steamers, starting from SOUTHAMPTON on the 20th of every month, and from SUEZ on or about the 8th of the month.

The next extra Steamer will be despatched from Southampton for Alexandria on the 3rd October next, in combination with an extra steamer, to leave Calcutta on or about the 20th September. Passengers may be booked, and goods and parcels forwarded by these extra steamers to or from SOUTHAMPTON, ALEXANDRIA, ADEN, CEYLON, MADRAS, and CALCUTTA.

BOMBAY.—The Company will book passengers throughout from SOUTHAMPTON to BOMBAY by their Steamers leaving England on the 20th July, and of alternate months thereafter, such passengers being conveyed from ADEN to BOMBAY by their steamers appointed to leave BOMBAY on the 14th July, and of alternate months thereafter, and affording, in connection with the Steamers leaving CALCUTTA on the 3rd July, and of alternate months thereafter, direct conveyance for passengers, parcels, and goods, from BOMBAY and WESTERN INDIA.

Passengers for Bombay can also proceed by this Company's steamers of the 29th of the month to Malta, thence to Alexandria by her Majesty's steamers, and from Suez by the Honourable East-India Company's steamers.

MEDITERRANEAN.—MALTA.—On the 20th and 29th of every month. Constantinople.—On the 29th of the month. Alexandria.—On the 20th of the month. (The rates of passage-money on these lines have been materially reduced.)

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.—Vigo, Oporto, Lisbon, Cadiz, and Gibraltar, on the 7th, 17th, and 27th of the month.

N.B. The Steam-ships of the Company now ply direct between Calcutta, Penang, Singapore, and Hong-Kong, and between Hong-Kong and Shanghai.

For further information and tariffs of the Company's recently revised and reduced rates of passage money and freight, and for plans of the vessels, and to secure passages, &c., apply at the Company's offices, 132, Leadenhall-street, London, and Oriental-place, Southampton.

SUMMER.—The recurrence of the summer solstice invites the full display of female beauty—adorning the fashionable promenade, the ride, and drive; in all cases, fervid heat, and its concomitant, dust, materially injure the skin, producing sunburn, tan, freckles, and discolourations, of an almost indelible character. To obviate and eradicate these baneful results, recourse may with confidence be had to ROWLANDS' KALYDOR, a preparation of vital importance to the sustenance of female beauty. It imparts a refreshing coolness to the skin, allays heat and irritability, purifies it from all eruptions, and realises a clear and fair complexion. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its selection by royalty, and the several courts throughout Europe, together with the élite of the aristocracy.—Price 4s. 6d. and 1s. 6d. per bottle.

The new and beautiful Perfume, ROWLANDS' AQUA D'ORO, is an essence of the subtlest and most durable pungency, the aroma and bouquet of which are the most refreshing known, and have caused it to be patronised by the élite of the aristocracy, whose judgment and good taste are never at fault. Its odorousness, its revivifying effect, its refreshing properties, and its choice perfume applied to the delicate mouchoir of the belle of fashion render it an essential accompaniment to places of public amusement and crowded assemblies. In all cases of over-excitement or fatigue it will prove gratefully refreshing, if taken as a cooling beverage, diluted with water.—Price 3s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, for the growth, and for preserving, improving, and beautifying the Human Hair.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for preserving and beautifying the Teeth, strengthening the Gums, and for rendering the Breath sweet and pure.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

Beware of SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS," preceding that of the article, on the wrapper or label. Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London; and by chemists and perfumers.

A VALUABLE MEDICINE FOR HOT CLIMATES.

PERSPIRATION of the FEET, and TENDER FEET.
All persons suffering from the above, are strongly recommended to use the late Dr. JAMES JOHNSTON'S ORTHOPEDIC MEDICATED FLUID, which hardens the Feet, removing all unpleasant smell after four or five applications. It does not check natural perspiration, can be easily applied, and acts with perfect comfort. The Medicated Fluid is a fine refrigerator, and imparts an agreeable firmness and texture to the hands; it is therefore suitable for rowers, yachtsmen, &c.

Sold by the Proprietors and Manufacturers, WRIGHT and LAURENCE, 47, Hatton Garden, Holborn, and wholesale by all the principal houses; also retail by the following Chemists:—Mr. BROOKS, 108, Fleet Street; Mr. G. WATTS, 17, Strand, near Charing Cross; Mr. W. DELATOUCHES, 167, Oxford Street; Mr. G. BILTON, Sun Fire and Life Offices, 68, Three Colt Street, Limehouse; Mr. J. GRIFFITHS, Pleasant Place, King's Cross; Mr. T. BLAKEMAN, 114, High Holborn; and by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors in the United Kingdom.—In Bottles at 1s. 1d. and 2s. 9d. each.

Certificate from C. THOMSON, Esq., Surgeon, &c.—

"May 10th, 1852.

"Having been made acquainted with the component parts of Messrs. Wright and Laurence's Lotion for Perspiration of the Feet, &c., I can with confidence certify as to its usefulness, and safety, as regards the application, so far that a child may drink it.—C. THOMSON, Surgeon and Apothecary, 2, Bayne's Row, Cold Bath Square, London."

Numerous Testimonials may be seen at the Depot, Hatton Garden.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, &c. &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKING, KNEE-CAPS, ANKLETS, &c., which have been tested in the hottest climates, and proved invaluable in all cases where support is necessary. They are drawn on with ease, as an ordinary stocking, and perfectly porous. They produce a pressure equal and permanent in every part, and not a muscle of the limb is impeded in its free and healthy action. They are now recommended by every London practitioner of eminence, and may be ordered through Messrs. JOHN WOODS and Co., Bombay (of whom prospectuses may be obtained); Messrs. GARDNER and Co.; and 8, Vere Street, London.

OVERLAND AGENCY.—HICKIE, BORMAN, & Co., East-India and General Agents, forward packages for Overland Route to India, China, &c., to the 18th of every month, at reduced rates. They also ship goods, parcels, and baggage, and engage passages by steamers and sailing-vessels to all parts of the world; effect insurances, execute orders for supplies and outfit, and transact every description of agency business with economy and despatch. Having offices at Southampton, every attention is paid to the requirements of passengers arriving or proceeding by the Overland Route.—Offices, 127, Leadenhall Street, London, and 4, Oriental Place, Southampton.

OVERLAND PARCELS and PACKAGES at very reduced rates to INDIA, Ceylon, and China, 17th of every month. Periodicals from 1s., and parcels from 2s., upwards; also goods and parcels by steam and sailing vessels to all parts of the globe with economy, punctuality, and despatch. Passages engaged, baggage shipped, insurances effected, and fullest information given. Circulars of the routes via Southampton, Malacca, and Trieste, gratis.—GEO. W. WHEATLEY and Co. (late Welch and Co.), Oriental and General Agents, 136, Leadenhall Street, and Universal Office, Regent Circus.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of CROSSE and BLACKWELL, Furveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

GREAT EXHIBITION, Class 3, No. 22.—a Case of INDIAN CONDIMENTS, CURRIES, CHUTNEE, SAUCES, SEEDS, &c., by PAYNE and SUN, 324 and 226, Regent Street, London, which obtained "THE HONOURABLE MENTION" of the Royal Commissioners.

THE BEST INDIAN CURRY POWDER, in 1 lb. bottles, 2s. 6d.; ½ lb., 2s. 3d.; and ¼ lb., 1s. 6d.; or 7 lb. bottles for 21s.

INDIAN CURRY and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE, in bottles 2s. 3d. and 3s. 6d. each.

THE DELHI CHUTNEE, 1s. 6d. per bottle.

THE INDIAN CURRY SAUCE, of superior quality, in antique bottles.—This novel and piquant Sauce is peculiarly adapted for Steaks, Chops, Game, Fish, Cold Meats, Soups, &c. The addition of a little of this Sauce, in cases where a curry cannot be procured, will prove a valuable accompaniment to connoisseurs.

All Indian Condiments, Mangoes, Sauces, &c., from Calcutta direct.

PAYNE and Co., Importers and Manufacturers, 324 and 326, Regent Street, London.—May be had of Messrs. DUNCAN MACLEAN and SONS, Princes Street, Edinburgh; BAXTER and SONS, Buchanan Street, Glasgow; or through any Italian Warehouse in the kingdom.

116, Jermyn Street, St. James's, London.

MESSRS. MANTON and Co., of Calcutta, GUN MAKERS, having purchased the Good-will, stock of Guns, Pistols, &c., belonging to that celebrated maker, Mr. SAMUEL NOCK, of the Regent Circus, Piccadilly, and the license to use that name, they respectfully inform their patrons that they have taken premises at 116, Jermyn Street, St. James's, a few doors from Regent Street, Waterloo Place, where the business will be carried on under the same superintendence and workmen as were employed by the late Mr. Nock. They invite the attention of sportsmen and gentlemen proceeding to India to their superior assortment of Double Guns, Rifles, and Pistols, which are of first-rate workmanship, and they pledge themselves that every article manufactured by them shall be in that superior style of excellence for which Mr. Nock was so justly celebrated.

The above business will be carried on in connection with the house in Calcutta; and, to meet the exigencies of the times, the prices of all their goods will be such as not to deter any young gentlemen from suiting themselves with every article in the sporting line requisite for their equipment to India.

MANTON and Co.'s superior H.E.I. Company's Cavalry, Infantry, and Navy Swords, continue to be manufactured, and can be had always at the London establishment.

DECAYED TEETH and TOOTH-ACHE.—Price 2s. 6d.

—Patronized by Her Majesty and H.R.H. Prince Albert. Mr. HOWARD'S WHITE SUCCEDANEUM for stopping decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and immediately HARDENS INTO A WHITE ENAMEL; it will remain in the tooth many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, and arresting the further progress of decay, and is far superior to anything ever before used, as it will NEVER BECOME DISCOLOURED in the tooth. All persons use it themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Prepared only by Mr. Howard, Surgeon-Dentist, 17, George Street, Hanover Square, who will send it into the country free by post. Sold by Savory, 220, Regent Street; Sanger, 150, and Hannay, 63, Oxford Street; Butler, 4, Cheapside; Johnston, 63, Cornhill; and all medicine vendors in the kingdom. Price 2s. 6d. Mr. Howard continues to supply the loss of teeth on his NEW SYSTEM of SELF-ADHESION, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. 17, George Street, Hanover Square. At home from 10 till 4.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS A MOST EFFECTUAL CURE FOR DROPSY.—Extract of a letter from Edward Rowley, Esq., of the Indian Walk Estate, Tobago, dated April 8, 1852:—"To Professor Holloway. Sir,—I deem it a duty I owe to you and the public at large to inform you of a most miraculous recovery from that dreadful disease, dropsy, and which, under God, was effected by the use of your Pills. I was tapped five times in the course of eight months, and skillfully treated by two medical practitioners. Notwithstanding which, I got worse, and my strength failed so much as to leave no hopes of recovery. I then tried your Pills, which in six months perfectly cured me."

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 94A, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

BESIDES an abortive attempt to surprise the garrison of Martaban, no further hostilities had taken place between our troops and the Burmese up to the 23rd April, the latest date of advices from the scene of war. The attempt referred to was made in the night of the 14th April. The enemy, 3,000 strong, very daring and determined, contrived to get within our pickets, but, after three hours' firing, were driven back with fearful loss.

The despatches, which we republish from the London Gazette, and to which we have added other official documents received by the present mail, will place before our readers a complete and authentic view of the military operations; whilst the digest, contained in a subsequent leading article of the papers recently laid before Parliament, will enable them to trace the history of this unfortunate quarrel from its origin.

It appears that, since the capture of Rangoon, the troops had remained nearly inactive, merely employed in destroying some stockades up the river.

The governor, or viceroy as he is now termed, is said to have manifested great alarm when the shells began to fall in the town, and took refuge in a great pagoda. He had subsequently fled from the neighbourhood, and no news could be obtained of his whereabouts. Some reports put him at the head of 25,000 men, breathing threats of vengeance; others represent him as abandoned by all his troops, except about 200. There seems no reason to doubt that some communication had been made by him to the Commander of the forces; but the reports in different private letters vary as to the nature of the communication, and the manner in which it was received. According to some, it was an impertinent missive, telling the British general that his success was the result of accident, and that, though he was prepared to fight, he was ready to treat. Other writers say that it was a "petition," which was interpreted by Captain Latter, to the effect that he is willing to make peace and come to terms with the British Government. General Godwin, according to one account, tore up the proposal, and threw the fragments in the face of the messenger, telling him that he should not listen to any overtures except from a properly accredited envoy from Ava. By another, the General is said to have returned the letter, with a message that he had nothing to do with the Governor of Rangoon; that should the King of Ava wish personally to treat with him, the General would receive him, but if the Governor of Rangoon should dare to come into his presence, he would hang him for firing upon his flag of truce on the 1st of April.

It is melancholy for us to be obliged to add that deadly sickness, chiefly cholera, had broken out among the troops, and that this appears to have been the consequence of want of due precautions, in spite of past experience. For three successive days, from the morning of the 12th to the evening of the 15th, we are told, "the men were exposed without tents or camp-equipage of any kind to the heat of a burning tropical sun, buttoned up in red woollen coats, with heavy black shakoes on their heads, swamps under their feet, amidst the damps of which, after the terrific blaze of the day, they had to repose during the night. Besides all this, enough to destroy the strongest constitution, scarcely any water was to be had, the rations were scanty and irregularly served out, the dirty brackish water to be found in the fields was eagerly drunk, whilst the atmosphere was laden with the miasma of the marsh and the jungle, and the stench of the unburied dead." The native troops suffer little; the sickness is almost confined to the European troops. Moreover, it is stated that the provisions were not only scanty, but of bad quality, principally consisting of ill-cured pork. General Godwin's arrangements in causing this unnecessary and severe exposure, by landing the troops so long before the guns, which it was known from the first would be requisite for the reduction of the Great Pagoda stockade, as well as in allowing himself to be forced into a battle on the 11th, when it had been determined not to fight till the 16th, have been strongly condemned. It is, however, necessary to wait further information before we join in this condemnation.

The latest intelligence is more cheering. Although Captain Blundell had died of his wounds, the remainder of the wounded were doing well. Cholera was abating; the place was getting into some order and cleanliness: Burmese labourers were flocking in in search of employment, and glad to work at two annas per day; several cargo-boats were in the river, and every day furnished new symptoms of a restoration of tranquillity and resuscitation of trade.

A Rangoon letter states that the Government had offered rewards for the heads of the British troops, namely, Rs. 50 for the head of a white man, and Rs. 30 for the head of a black man. The offer has proved a strong inducement to the Burmese.

As to the further movements of the forces, the most probable opinion current seems to be that no further advance would be made before the rains, unless some extraordinary event should render it imperatively necessary; and that, immediately after the rains, operations will be renewed with energy and increased means.

A rumour was afloat of a revolution at Ava, at the head of which is the king's foster brother, Moua Thwah; and another rumour, but at variance with the preceding, would persuade us that it is rather the King of Burmah than his people with whom we are really at war. "His Majesty has no heir," says a letter from Arracan, "and, hating us very cordially, is willing to risk the ruin of his country, so long as he may indulge his hostile feeling towards the British." We perceive by the official papers laid before Parliament, that the king, whose name, it appears, is Meng Taraghyee Phoeayah, and who styles himself "the all-powerful Lord of the Universe, Master of the Tshat-tang Elephant and of all White Elephants, and Lord of Life," has occasional fits of insanity.

With regard to the resistance offered by the Burmese, different opinions are expressed; some holding with the Friend of India, that the fighting of the Burmese was more resolute than we had any reason to expect, and that they have made no little progress in the art of war since our last conflict with them. The general, we observe, in his despatch, seems to confirm this opinion when he says, "they are now not only good shots, but bold in their operations, and clever in selecting their ground, and covering themselves." On the other hand, a comparison of results will not warrant this conclusion. At present, the sum total of our loss amounts only to 17 killed and 132 wounded. In the former war, at Kemmending alone we lost 25 killed and 118 wounded; at Donobew the killed amounted to 40, and at Wattygoon to 54.

In our last Summary we noticed a report at Calcutta that the Burmese had the aid of an European officer, who, it was suggested, might be Captain Impey. We have learned from a source not likely to be misinformed, that, long before the war broke out, that unfortunate officer had succeeded in passing into the Siamese territory and was heard of at Bankok.

From Peshawur we learn that the Momunds having retired from the neighbourhood of Shubqudr, Sir Colin Campbell and his force returned to Peshawur on the 18th April. On the 26th a force, consisting of H.M.'s 32nd, the 28th N.I., some heavy guns, and a couple of troops of irregular cavalry, were ordered to proceed to the Swat River, and there encamp and wait further instructions. It is believed that this time the Swattees are to be chastised in earnest, and that an effectual blow will be struck at the hill people.

The Delhi Gazette understands that there is some desire evinced on the part of the Momunds of Muchnee to come to terms; those at Lalpoor having sent one of their own people to Rahmut Khan Oruckzaie, who is in our service, with a request that he will intercede for an amicable arrangement. The terms they demand are said to be as follows. The fort at Muchnee is to be made over to them, or, if this is refused, a certain allowance is to be guaranteed to them for protecting the road, they conducting themselves as British subjects. It is said that the authorities have sent a positive refusal to agree to these terms.

The intelligence from Afghanistan is to the effect that the Sheenwarree people, near Jellalabad, were fighting amongst themselves; that the Candahar troops had marched from Subzwar, in the Herat country, and besieged Jaween, but the ruler of Herat having despatched a large body of his own troops to oppose the Candaharees, a pitched battle took place, and, after two days' severe fighting, the Candaharees were defeated, and the siege was raised. A couple of skirmishes had taken place betwixt the King of Oude's troops and some rebel landholders.

The Hyderabad correspondent of the Englishman writes :—

"The following will supply whatever may be wanting to give a complete picture of the misery and disorder prevailing in the Nizam's dominions, and of the wide range of those disorders. The contingent is established in eight cantonments, in positions to facilitate the protection of the whole country. Detachments from seven of these cantonments, in some instances with guns, are now out against marauders, who are laying waste not only villages but whole provinces. To enable you to trace the extent of country suffering from bands of depredators, I give you the names of the cantonments from which troops have been detached. They are as follows: Ellichpore, Aurungabad, Mominebad, Hingalee, Seasegor, Bolaram, and Warangole. From Goolburga alone no troops have been detached."

The rest of India and the Punjab were tranquil. The Governor-General was at Barrackpore. The heads of all our armies were at the hill stations of their respective presidencies. Sir W. Gornu reached Simla on the 1st May.

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

H.M.'s TROOPS.—Capt. Hunt, 80th, of cholera, at Rangoon.

BENGAL.—Maj. J. Drummond, 19th N.I. at Simla, April 26; Ena. A. G. Macpherson, 18th N.I. at Ferozepoor, April 29.

MADRAS.—Lieut. Charles G. Boulcott, 16th N.I. at Cannanore, April 27; Lieut. R. Gundy, 36th N.I. at Rangoon, April 18; Capt. R. P. Podmore, 44th N.I. at Lingsoogni, May 2; Lieut. G. C. Pybus, 22nd N.I. at Nagode, April 22; Lieut. E. C. Ravenshaw, 1st L.C. at Bellary, April 10; Capt. J. H. A. Vosper, 31st L.I. at Bangalore, April 24.

BENGAL.

BURMAH.

The Armenians and Mahomedans, who remained behind when the English residents embarked on the 14th of January, were fleeced of all their property by the Burmese, and reduced to such a state of destitution and distress, that their surviving it appears almost miraculous. They obtained their release when Rangoon was taken, and reported that when the shells began to fall thick and fast on the 12th of April, the Viceroy fled to the upper part of the city, and took refuge in a hall on the north side of a great pagoda, so terrified that he could scarcely speak. He remained there till the evening of the 13th, when he fled with a large guard, and was soon followed by the Deputy Governor and many other officers, and some of the troops. Only about 10,000 Burmese remained in and near the great pagoda under military chiefs, on the morning of the 14th.

The troops were all under arms by five A.M. on that day, in the finest temper for dealing with the enemy. The old town of Rangoon had ceased to exist; 30,000 men had been employed for several months by the Governor in breaking it up, and erecting a new town a mile and a half farther in. Not a vestige of Rangoon, as it stood on the 1st of January, was now to be seen, except the houses of some of the priests, and heaps of bricks. The old road to the pagoda from the river led up to its southern gate, through the new town, and the enemy expecting that our troops must necessarily pursue this route, had made every preparation to receive them, having armed the defences with nearly 100 pieces of cannon. To have attempted to storm the place from this point, would have cost half the force. The general therefore turned the enemy's position, passed the new and stockaded town, and planted his force opposite the eastern side of the great pagoda. There, Major Turton placed his heavy guns in battery, but a heavy fire of guns and wall pieces was kept up from the great pagoda and the town, from which the troops suffered severely; the enemy's skirmishers also began to close in on the crowded mass of our troops, and it required 500 men to keep down their fire. At eleven o'clock, Capt. Latter stated to the general, that from what he could perceive of the east entrance of the pagoda on which our men were playing, the approach was clear, and that he was prepared to lead the way. As our troops were dropping fast where they stood, from the incessant fire of the enemy, the general determined on an immediate assault. The storming party was formed of the wing of H.M.'s 80th under Major Lockhart, two companies of the royal Irish under Lieut. Hewett, and two companies of the 40th N.I. under Lieut. White, the whole commanded by Lieut. col. Coote, of the 18th Royal Irish, under Capt. Latter's leading. By a strange oversight, the conduct of this officer, which saved so many lives, and shortened the conflict by a whole hour, has not received the proper meed of praise in the general's despatches. The distance to the east entrance of the pagoda was about 800 yards, which the troops crossed in the most steady manner, under a heavy fire from the walls, which were crowded with the enemy. When the troops reached the gate, which was soon pushed open, the scaling ladders were in the rear,—the sappers and miners being altogether exhausted by the heat—but a long flight of steps was discovered, and a tremendous rush was made to the upper terrace, from which a fearful shower of jingle balls and bullets was poured down on the advancing party. Here the brave Lieut. Doran, the adjutant of the 18th Royal Irish, was shot in seven places. Col. Coote was also wounded, but soon after, "a deafening cheer told that the pagoda no longer belonged to the Burmese." The troops of the enemy rushed out, some at the west gate towards Kemmendinge, some towards the river, and only twelve of them are said to have been killed in the capture.

The Burmese fought far more resolutely and valiantly than we had any reason to expect. The experience of the last war led us to despise them. But they have made no little progress in the art of war during the twenty-five years of peace, and have far more confidence in their own valour. In the campaigns of 1824—1826, they seldom ventured out of their stockades, and often fled as soon as our flag was planted on them. In the present campaign, they have met us boldly in the field, and have annoyed us in no small degree with their skirmishers; their fortifications are more strongly constructed, and their movements more scientifically arranged. We have evidently a more formidable enemy to deal with than we had calculated on. Our first encounter with them seems to annihilate the expectations which were entertained, that the overwhelming force we had sent against Rangoon, and the fearful execution it might do, would dispose their minds at once to submission and peace. They are by no means subdued, and are not likely to give up the conflict. At the time when the great pagoda was stormed an additional body of 5,000 troops was within a day's march of it. The Burmese have, therefore, an army of 25,000 men still in the field, and it is not likely that they will give up the contest, without a more protracted struggle. They have amply redeemed their boast of being as fully prepared for war as we were. It is said in one of the papers, that our Government intends to re-open negotiations; it is too early in the conflict for such overtures, and we shall only give objectors at home a handle for saying that we were determined to render a march on Ava indispensable by an exhibition of pusillanimity at the outset. —Friend of India, April 29.

A Rangoon letter, which appears in the Bengal Hurkaru, states that "the Governor of Rangoon has invited tenders for the heads of the British forces according to prices as per tariff, namely fifty rupees for the head of a white man, and thirty rupees for the head of a black man. The offer has proved a strong inducement to the Burmese, who go to work desperately to earn the reward. No sooner a soldier or sepoy is down than several Burmese rush upon him with hatchets and choppers eager to effect a decapitation and secure the head. In most cases, however, they are compelled to beat as hasty a retreat with something about their own heads from the comrades of those fallen; though in a few instances they have been successful in carrying off the heads of our poor fellows."

The Maulmain Times gives the following account of an unsuccessful attack made by the Burmese on Martaban on the 14th April :—

"On Wednesday morning last, another insidious attack was made upon our troops at Martaban by a party of the enemy, supposed to be about 3,000 strong. They evaded the vigilance of the picquets on the heights, and came down to about the distance, as we are credibly informed, of not more than 300 yards from the camp, and kept up a smart fire on our troops. The picquets then retreated to the camp, where the guns were kept in readiness to open a fire upon the enemy as soon as they entered the gate. The firing commenced, according to the accounts, at midnight, and did not cease till four o'clock. So daring and determined were the enemy, that, but for the fact that our troops would have inevitably been all killed. Fortunately, we have only two European artillerymen slightly wounded."

well as a driver, and Lieut. Baird, grazed by a bullet on the left knee. We cannot even guess the casualties on the enemy's side, for the dead and wounded among them seem to have been removed from our sight. That there had been dreadful execution, we believe no one doubts: the fire from our troops was murderous; shot, shell, grape, canister, rockets, and carcasses, were sent among them with great rapidity: the discharge of musketry was raking; and as the enemy was strong and thickly banded together, we doubt not but that their loss was considerable."

The following is an extract of a letter from Rangoon, 20th April:—"The troops have greatly got over the fatigues of their first few days' hard work, and every man is looking the better for the last day or two's rest. The Madras artillery occupy the N. side of the fort, the 40th Bengal N.I. the east face, H.M.'s 51st L.I. are in the lower stockade, at the S.E. angle of the fort, the 18th R.I. have the greater part of the S. side, and the 80th on the west. Where the two Madras infantry corps are, I have not yet found out. The troops could never remain where they now are in the rains; large quantities of roofs, and walls of houses, are said to be coming from Moulemein; the sooner they are erected the better, as the lowering appearance of the clouds indicates (with a shower every now and then) that the rains are not far off. Cholera seems to be on the decrease, though four men of the 18th royal Irish were buried yesterday. The chaplain of the For died a day or two ago of it. Poor Capt. Blundell, of the 51st, who was wounded in the stomach the first day, died the day before yesterday; an officer of the 35th M.N.I. was buried on Sunday evening, a victim to cholera.

"There are numerous rumours afloat as to the whereabouts of the Governor of Rangoon; it is supposed that it is not far from here, and that he has got a band of 100 or 200 men to stick by him, and no more, the rest having deserted. He dare not go near Ava for fear of his head. Now that we have seen the great strength of this place, it seems wonderful how with the garrison that was said to be inside, they ever let us get in with so little resistance. We certainly attacked it on its weakest side, but had the enemy only closed, and secured the various gates even against us, we should have found great difficulty in getting inside, the inner walls being solid masonry, and almost too high for our scaling ladders. The reason simply is, the Burmese have an invincible dread of the European soldiers, and when they saw the rush made from our guns of the column, their hearts failed them, and with the exception of a few, who remained to give us a last volley, as the head of the column was near the foot of the steps, they ran, to a man. Of our native troops, I do not think they have so much dread. As long as a Burman can keep a respectful distance, and fire at one from behind a tree or rock, or stockade, he will do so, but a charge or rush he cannot stand, and takes to his heels. In musketry they can command us, when they are not within reach of our musketry. Their musket cartridges are generally about 3½ or 4 inches long, with a small bullet at the end; all their fire-arms they greatly overload and overcharge; in one of their large guns, an 18-pounder I think, were found three balls and four or five links of a chain; they fired several chains at us; the balls are not chained together, they merely use a few links of a chain tied together in a heap, as we should say.

"Kemmendine (the stockade of it) has been entirely destroyed; it took three days to burn it; it was a very extensive place. The Phlegethon was chiefly employed in the work. In a day or two, the brig Serpent, the Pluto, and Phlegethon, are going up to Promé, and back by some roundabout way, just to see what the Burmese are about up there. Hundreds of poor hungry Burmese are flocking into Rangoon to carry away their rice; they had been scared into the jungles, and milk is already brought into the fort, though not in large quantities yet. Soon we shall have all that the poor people about can give us. They are coming in fast. Every mess here is very hard up for fresh provisions, meat in particular.

"The native troops are not suffering as the Europeans are. Among them there is comparatively little sickness. Prize agents have been appointed. On Saturday morning all the ponies are to be sold; those possessing any have been ordered to send them to the prize agents. I have heard of no plunder of any value having fallen to the lot of any one; spears, daos, and umbrellas, some gilt-topped ones, were the chief things found. By letters from Moulemein, we hear that the Burmese attacked Martaban a few nights ago; they were, however, driven off after four hours' firing; the officer commanding there has written for reinforcement,—it is said the 80th wing is to go. Rangoon can never be left with a force of less than 4,000 men, and chiefly Europeans, so we shall require a considerable reinforcement from Bengal before we go up to Promé.

"P.S., 21st April.—An individual bearing a white umbrella (a mark of rank) went to the general yesterday, with a letter from the governor of Rangoon, warning him, that though the British had won Rangoon, they had better proceed no further, as there were two Burmese armies at hand in readiness to destroy them. On learning the contents of this impertinent epistle, the general threw the letter in the face of the bearer of the white umbrella, and told him to be off about his business."—Englishman.

THE LONDON MAILS of Jan. 24th and Feb. 24th arrived at Calcutta April 28th, per Hindustan.

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH FOR ALL INDIA.—We are happy to learn that Lord Dalhousie has taken the most prompt and effective measures for ensuring the establishment of electric telegraphs throughout India at the earliest period. He has resolved to depute Dr. O'Shaughnessy to England to submit to the Court of Directors, in person, the result of the experiment which has been made to lay down telegraphs in this country, and to facilitate and expedite the requisite arrangements for a comprehensive series of lines which shall embrace the whole continent of India. Dr. O'Shaughnessy, therefore, proceeds to England, on deputation, in the Poltinger steamer.—Friend of India, April 29.

THE RAILWAY.—We hear with the highest satisfaction that all the operations of the rail at this presidency are proceeding with a degree of ease and rapidity, which fills the minds of all those who are engaged in the enterprise with a glow of pure and unmingled complacency. The line from Calcutta to the collieries may, possibly, be opened for traffic in three years from the time when the first sod was turned up, and if this be accomplished, we may hereafter despair of nothing; but, by the time this first section of the rail is complete, the electric telegraph will, we hope, be working daily between Lahore and Calcutta.—Ibid.

The Englishman publishes an account of an affair which has created a great sensation on the line of railway. A paddle boat belonging to one of the contractors, anchored near a ghaut, where the females of a baboo's family were bathing. The baboo ordered the men to move on, and on their refusal, the villagers went on board the boat, and beat the men severely. The latter complained to the head assistant, stating that the boat had been broken to pieces, and ten of the boatmen imprisoned. The assistant went with a number of Europeans and a body of coolies, to the baboo's house, which was broken open, and a search made for the prisoners. Of course, they were not discovered, and the coolies who accompanied the Europeans did a great deal of mischief to the furniture. The latter have been committed to the Supreme Court for trial.

SIGN OF THE TIMES.—The Hurkaru mentions that a granddaughter of the late Dwarkanath Tagore has been married to a nephew of Baboo Obheensh Gangooly of Calcutta. The event is remarkable as a proof that the bitter hostility between old and young Bengal is beginning to abate. Obheensh Gangooly is a Koolin Bramin, and one of the leaders of the Brumha Sobha, and the marriage of his relative with a Tagore is said to have created a profound sensation in native society, and is considered by many a death-blow to the "orthodox creed."

SUTTEE PREVENTED.—A correspondent at Boolundshuhur (in the north west provinces) mentions that there had been an attempt to get up a suttee in that district, but it was reported to the magistrate, who sent out his assistant, with some sowars and burkandazes, to put a stop to it. Several of the relations, with the gooroo and the widow herself, were taken into custody, and brought into the station, under a strong guard. "The woman is very handsome, and about seventeen years of age. When the authorities arrived at the place where the pile was erected, they found about 1,000 people collected, and wood enough on the pyre to roast half a dozen oxen. The crowd dispersed the moment they found the more active relatives in custody, and the woman herself put into a bylee. The case is now pending before the magistrate."

THE 37TH BENGAL N.I., at Berhampore, to a man, volunteered to go to Burmah.

LIEUT. PACKENHAM, of the Governor-General's body guard, whilst out hog-hunting on the 28th April, was thrown on his head, and brought into Calcutta in a state of insensibility. Another of the party dislocated his collar-bone.

FURLONGS.—The Mofussilite confirms the report, that the Governor-General in Council had recommended to the Commander-in-Chief the propriety of refusing all applications for furlough or to retire, by officers in the army, until the Burmah war shall have been brought to a conclusion.

RESTRICTIONS UPON FRONTIER EXCURSIONS.—The Governor-General Gazette contains a notification, that several cases having occurred in which officers have lost their lives by neglect of common precautions, and by venturing needlessly into places known to be dangerous, the Governor-General found it necessary to prescribe certain limits on the various frontiers in the Punjab which must not be passed; he, therefore, orders that officers and others are not to proceed in the Derajat beyond the line of frontier posts; No European is to proceed through any of the passes in Bunnoo, Kohat, and Peshawur or Huzara, except with the concurrence of the chief civil officer on the spot; all sporting parties in Huzara, Kohat, Peshawur, and Bunnoo are forbidden, unless under sanction; officers and others are prohibited travelling on the Indus above the plain of Chuch, and those who may receive the permission of Government to visit Cashmere, are directed to avoid the Mozufferabad road, taking either the Poonch or Bimber routes from Rawulpindee and Peshawur respectively; officers visiting Cashmere are strictly forbidden to take russud, or supplies, when on their travels, without payment for the same; and each officer applying for permission to visit Cashmere must state in his application that he has engaged, or will engage, a sufficient number of ponies or mules for the carriage of his own baggage.

PUNJAB THUGS.—Upwards of one hundred Thugs have been captured by the detective police, and of these, a considerable number having disburdened their consciences, we have a large body of evidence, from which to compile the following brief narrative. Thuggee is a criminal product imported, and not indigenous to the Punjab. The importer was a Muzubee Sikh, of the lowest caste, who, about seventy years ago, dwelt near the ancient city of Kussoor, in the Manja. This worthy picked up the art from some Hindoostanee practitioners at the Hurdwar fair. This artist having perfected himself and obtained his diploma, brought up his children in the same profession. On his return home, he also initiated into the mysteries of the craft certain relatives named Goolab, Rutun, Sooja, and Dhool, who again handed down this heir-loom of crime to their offspring, a vile brood of infant Thugs. A free-masonry having been thus established, recruits were admitted as occasion might require; the numbers were also strengthened by an accession of deserters and refugees from the Grand Order of Thugs, at that time sorely pressed by the preventive measures adopted throughout India. The establishment of a Thuggee office at Lodeeana, also drove many expert members of the fraternity across the Sutlej; the corps was, moreover, joined by numbers of the disbanded Khalsa soldiery. These professional murderers are supposed, in their most flourishing days, to have reached the number of 700. They soon lost their corporate capacity, dispersed in small gangs of five or six, and spread themselves, chiefly towards Mooltan, in one direction, and Rawul Pindie in the other. We hope now, that the last links are broken.—Lahore Chron., April 28.

PROFICIENCY IN THE NATIVE LANGUAGES.—We notice that the Governor-General of India has granted to Ensign W. N. Lees of the 42nd regiment Native light infantry, a degree of honour in the Oordoo language, and to Capt. and Brevet-Major F. A. Miles, of the artillery, certificates of high proficiency in the Persian and Hindee languages.

INDORE.—We have received an interesting account of the successful efforts made by the British officers at the court of Indore to establish hospitals and dispensaries in that principality. These efforts appear to have originated in the example set by the late widow of Jeswunt Rao Holkar, the mother of the present young Maharajah, who in 1847 opened the Indore City Dispensary. This institution soon attained such usefulness that the resident persuaded the durbar to grant funds for the support of an hospital, which was accordingly opened in September, 1849, and placed under the charge of Dr. Impey, the residency surgeon. Since then dispensaries, subordinate to the Indore General Hospital, have been opened at Oojein, Rutlam Dhar, and Maunpore, and have been the means of most extended usefulness.—Delhi Gaz. April 17.

WALKING.—The "American Stag," who was, it appears, chief officer of an American vessel, has accomplished his task of walking a thousand miles in a thousand hours. He began his journey on the road between Calcutta and Barrackpore on the 8th March, and completed it on the 19th April; and although the weather at the commencement of his task was unusually favourable, yet for the last fifteen days he has had to endure a temperature frequently above ninety degrees. He does not, however, according to the Hurkaru, appear much exhausted by his exertions, though he has lost nearly one-sixth of his weight. The achievement has excited an unusual amount of interest among the native population, who were, utterly unable to account for the spectacle of a European, walking up and down for a month together in the same place. The most popular view of the case was, that the "Saleb" had turned Sunyasee, and bound himself by a vow to walk a stated distance up and down at certain intervals, till he died.

THE NORTH-WESTERN BANK OF INDIA had applied to the Supreme Court to be registered under Act 43, 1850. The application was granted.

THE BANK OF BENGAL has reduced its rates one per cent. Mr. G. F. SIDDONS is to act for Dr. O'Shaughnessy in his absence, in the management of the electric telegraph.

CABUL.—Our Cabul letters mention that Shere Allee Khan, son of Dost Mahomed, who was going to Thooristan, has been obliged to halt at Bameean in consequence of the road being completely closed up by snow. As soon as the road is again open, he will proceed on his march. No news had arrived from Mahomed Shurreef Khan, who had left for Huzara Shaik Allee.—Delhi Gazette, April 17.

CHOLERA is raging fearfully at Akyab. The public works there have been suspended on account of the loss of workmen from the scourge.

INCENDIARISM.—Nearly twelve months ago, the merchants and the insurance offices were in a state of consternation at the frequent recurrence of fires on board ships, under circumstances which caused strong suspicion that they were wilful. A special committee was appointed by Government to investigate and report. After several months a report was published, which we noticed at the time. Legislative measures were recommended, and other precautions, which it was supposed would check, if not put a stop to such offences. We then expressed our doubts as to the practicability of the measures recommended by the committee, and our opinion has been confirmed by the inaction both of the government and the insurance offices. No draft Act has been announced, and the insurance offices, we now hear, have even abandoned the few precautions which they thought necessary, when under alarm of the fires and smarting under their losses. This kind of incendiarism is a sort of epidemic, which recurs periodically, and usually gives occasion for the sitting of a committee, which deliberates and recommends, and there is an end of the matter for the time. Either the propensity exhausts itself, or the mere inquiry strikes terror, and no more fires are heard of. But it is singular that the under-writers, who are so deeply interested, and who urged the inquiry upon Government, should be satisfied with a report which leads to nothing. If precautions were necessary when the report was made, they are equally so now, for nothing has been done to remove the inducement to incendiarism, or to make it more dangerous to the perpetrators. One thing, however, ought to be done, for the sake of saving the time of the officers of Government, and of those called to serve on such committees. An accurate index should be kept of all such inquiries, that when the occasion recurs, the trouble of a fresh committee may be saved. We have been assured that on this last occasion, the report of the first committee, which sat thirty years ago, was found still sealed up, in the Bengal secretary's office, which, if it had been sooner referred to, might have saved the trouble of a fresh inquiry.—Englishman, April 28.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

THE WAR IN AVA.

Notification.—Fort William, 28th April, 1852.—The Governor General of India in Council having failed to obtain redress from the Court of Ava for injuries which had been inflicted on British subjects, in gross violation of existing treaties, was compelled to declare that reparation should be exacted by force of arms. To that end an expedition was immediately prepared and despatched to the coast, in the hope that a blow promptly struck against the Burmese Power, might possibly lead to a concession of the just and moderate demands advanced by the Government of India, and might thus avert the necessity for engaging in extended and costly war.

The Governor-General in Council has had the satisfaction of publishing for general information, despatches, which announce the success of the expedition, in the capture of Martaban, in the destruction of the formidable defences constructed along the river, and in the assault and occupation of the fortifications of Rangoon. The Governor-General in Council cannot employ terms too strong in expressing his unqualified approbation of the brilliant service which has thus been performed, and his gratitude to those by whose joint exertions it has been achieved. His admiration is due equally to the perfect cordiality and concert with which navy and army have acted together, to the gallantry which has been conspicuous in the field, and to the fortitude and patience with which all have endured, without a murmur, a fierceness of climate, whose deadly influence is unhappily too well attested by the number of those who have fallen victims to its effects.

The Governor-General in Council especially desires to offer to the Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's naval forces in these seas his warm acknowledgments of the ready co-operation, and of the very effective aid which his Excellency has afforded to the Government of India, by the powerful squadron under his command, whose operations he has so ably directed, in whose services he has borne so distinguished a part. To Lieut.-Gen. Godwin, commanding the forces in Ava, the Governor-General in Council begs leave to tender his most full and cordial thanks for the manner in which, by his intrepidity, his energy, and ability, he has brought the military operations of the force to their present successful issue; and to congratulate him upon having thus won fresh and higher honours upon the same scene on which he formerly gained so much distinction. The Governor-General in Council has great satisfaction in publicly tendering to Commodore Lambert, his sincere acknowledgments of the promptitude with which he gave his assistance to the Government of India, in his constant exertions on its behalf during a trying service, and especially of the prominent share he has now borne in the destruction of the river defences; thus materially facilitating the movements of the squadron and the ultimate success of the attack.

The best thanks of the Governor-General in Council are due to Brig. Elliot, commanding the Madras brigade, and to Lieut.-col. Reingolds, who, after having taken a part in every operation of the troops, has assumed the command of the Bengal brigade, from which illness, which the Governor-General in Council regrets, has removed Brig. Warren. The Governor-General in Council is happy to record his appreciation of the essential service rendered by Capt. Lynch, the senior officer of the Indian navy, to whose ability, judgment, and discretion, his Excellency the Rear-Admiral has borne his testimony on this occasion. And his Lordship in Council at the same time desires to mark his sense of the services of Commander Mellersh and of Commander Fishbourne, by whose aid the Government has largely profited, of Commander Tarleton, Commander Luard, Lieut. Rice, R.N., Capt. Niblett, of H. C. S. Phlegethon, and Surg. Minter, whose personal exertions have been severally commended by his Excellency. The Governor-General in Council has to add his marked acknowledgments of the valuable assistance afforded during the attack on the land defences of Rangoon by Lieut. Dorville, R.N., and the naval brigade under his orders.

The Governor-General in Council has further remarked with gratification the distinguished conduct of Capt. Brooking, of the H.C. Steamer Proserpine. His Lordship in Council wishes to express his warm approbation of conduct which has elicited the applause both of the admiral and of the general who witnessed it.

The conspicuous gallantry of Major Frazer, commanding the engineers, and his indefatigable exertions since the expedition was resolved upon, more especially in the field, command the highest praise and the best thanks of the supreme Government. To Lieutenant Col. Foord, commanding the artillery; to Major Turtan and Major Reid, of the Bengal artillery; to Major Montgomerie, of the Madras artillery; to Lieut. Col. Coote, of H.M.'s 18th, who has been severely wounded; to Lieut. Col. Thomson, of the 40th N.I.; to Lieutenant Col. Johnson, of the 26th Madras N.I.; and to Major Lockhart, of H.M.'s 80th regt.; to Capt. Mayhew, deputy adjutant general, whose value is specially remarked; to Capt. Allen, deputy quarter master general; to Capt. Call and Capt. Smith, brigade majors; to Lieut. Robertson, deputy commissary of ordnance; to Capt. Gillespie, who led the assault at Martaban, and Capt. Campbell, of H.M.'s 18th; to Capt. Rundall, commanding Madras Sappers and Miners; to Capt. Chads and Lieut. Lambert, aides-de-camp to the Lieut.-General; the services of all of whom have been noticed with approbation by Gen. Godwin, the Governor-General in Council begs to offer his earnest thanks.

The Governor-General in Council has to offer his thanks to Lieut.-Colonel Bogle, commissioner of the Tenasserim Provinces, for the valuable aid he rendered to Gen. Godwin, in connexion with the attack upon Martaban; and his Lordship in Council particularly desires to record his approbation of the energetic and successful exertions of the commissioner in giving effect to the preparations of the Government for ensuring as far as possible the health and comfort of the troops to be employed upon the expedition. Capt. Latter, who has discharged his functions hitherto to the entire satisfaction of the Government, has added to his claims by the duty which he well performed in the assault on the Pagoda at Rangoon.

Not only to the officers he has thus specially named, but to all the officers, to the non-commissioned officers, of whatever designation, and to the soldiers and sailors of the force, the Governor-General in Council desires to convey his true and hearty thanks for the alacrity, the endurance, the bravery, and good conduct they have displayed during the several operations in which they have been engaged.

The Governor-General in Council deeply laments to know that our success has not been achieved without the sacrifice of valued lives. He deplores the loss of Major Oakes and of Brevet-Major Griffiths, of the Madras Artillery; of Lieut. Armstrong, of H.M.'s 51st regiment; of Lieut. Donaldson, of the Bengal engineers; of Lieut. Doran, H.M.'s 18th, who nobly perished in the front of the assault; and of the Rev. Mr. Baker, chaplain of H.M.'s ship Fox, and other brave men who died in the performance of their several duties in the service of their country.

It shall be the first care of the Most Noble Governor-General in Council to bring the conduct and services of the naval and military forces on the coast of Burmah under the most favourable notice of Her Majesty's Government and of the Hon. East-India Company.

MADRAS.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE MADRAS MEDICAL COLLEGE.

THE Annual meeting for the distribution of prizes and diplomas to the students of the Madras Medical College, took place (April) in the college theatre. The Right Hon. the Governor and the Hon. J. F. Thomas were present; also the Presidency medical staff, and many of the leading members of the civil and military services. The proceedings were opened by Dr. Smith reading the college report for the session 1851-52. The total number of students of all classes under instruction during the academical year, was stated to be 152; out of which there had been 10 "lapses." With regard to the conduct of the students while under the eye of the professors, the report spoke in terms of warm approbation; but their behaviour out of the college walls had been, in many instances, of so unsatisfactory a kind as to lead the council to recommend to the authorities the adoption of a system of wholesome surveillance. Extracts from the separate reports of the professors of anatomy, physiology, botany, chemistry, surgery, medicine, midwifery, eye-disease, and medical jurisprudence, were then read, bearing on the whole very gratifying testimony to the zeal and progress of the students, the native lads coming in for the best portion of the censure, and senior student Georges carrying off the Benjamin's mess of eulogy. Dr. Davidson, the examiner nominated by Government to report on the attainments of the three stipendiary students, candidates for the grade of native apothecary, commended in terms of the warmest approval the accurate knowledge of their profession acquired by these young men, whom he had great pleasure in recommending for diplomas. Dr. Davidson's opinion was fully concurred in by Superintending Surgeon Key, who had assisted in the examination. The distribution of rewards and certificates followed.

Sir Henry Pottinger said but little; but that little was expressive of the high gratification His Excellency had felt in witnessing the proceedings; the gratitude of Government to the professors for the zeal which had produced results so satisfactory; and promises of assistance in carrying out the suggestions of the council for the improvement of the college.

The business of the afternoon terminated with an address from Professor Blacklock to the three stipendiary students, on their admission to an independent rank in the medical profession.

The meeting was altogether one of the most interesting Madras has been favoured with for some time.

Mr. MEAD, lately Editor of the Madras Athenæum, has proceeded to England, as the advocate of the Carnatic Stipendiaries. For this service he is to receive 12,000 rupees. We are inclined to imagine he and his employers have alike made a mistake, and that the absorbing interest of internal politics will prevent the House of Commons from giving even a fair hearing to their case. The undistinguishing and remorseless vituperation which Mr. Mead latterly began to pour upon every person in any way connected with Government, and every project started by the authorities, cannot have failed to weaken his influence in Madras, and to destroy in some measure the effect of his writing.—Friend of India.

THE TANJORE BOND AFFAIR.—The Spectator states that the Head Financial Accountant, the Head Book-keeper, and Mr. A. J. Home, Manager of the Bond Department, all of the Accountant-General's Office, have been suspended by order of Government, pending the result of the investigation in progress at the police office, in respect of the Tanjore Bond Affair.

COAL.—Dr. Hunter communicates the interesting fact of indications of the existence of coal in many places in the neighbourhood of Madras. Satisfactory boring experiments have been made near Streepermatoor; and Dr. Hunter adds, that very good indications of coal were discovered near Perambore, where some large masses of black bituminous wood were found at the depth of thirty feet in grey sand, under a black sulphurous clay, containing numerous fossil shells. This wood burns exactly like coal and has the same resinous fracture. We hear that it has been frequently met with in sinking wells near Madras. It is one of the best proofs that coal is not far off.—Athenæum May 4.

WRECK OF THE EARL GREY.—The Madras master attendant has published the following:—"The master attendant of Cochin has officially reported that the barque Earl Grey, of 571 tons, Capt. J. Urquhart, belonging to Messrs. Dunbar and Sons, from Bombay bound to England, grounded off the harbour of Cochin, about mid-channel between the two buoys, on the night of the 19th of April, about 11 p.m., and that she is still on shore. Every exertion is being made to get her off.

THE MOPLAHS.—We hear from Malabar that the authorities at Tellicherry are preparing against an expected Moplah rising at Chavacherry, the place whence the troops were withdrawn a month or so back. The detachment at Tellicherry has been strengthened by the addition of half a company of the 39th M.N.I. under a native officer; and a company of H.M.'s 94th, with one of the 39th M.N.I., have been ordered to be in readiness to act as pacificators if the Moplahs prove fractious.

The Special Commissioner was expected at Calicut about the 20th, whence he would proceed to Tellicherry and Chavacherry.

ARREST.—According to the Athenaeum, a European private has embraced Islamism. He had previously deserted, and was arrested in the disguise of an Arab Mussulman.

BOMBAY.

THE LONDON MAIL of April 8th arrived at Bombay on May 6th, per Ajdaka.

ADEN.—The Bombay Times, in announcing that a party of men from the wing of the Highlanders at Kolaba had proceeded to Aden, to make up the wing of the corps at that place to its full complement, says: "We have heard that nearly all the deaths in the wing since its arrival at Aden have occurred from amongst the men of one company occupying a certain barrack, and that the same was found to be the case with the wing they relieved. This is a matter worth being enquired into; the men are said to entertain the belief that whoever falls sick in that barrack are sure to die,—and unfortunately in nearly a dozen cases their prognostications have proved correct. A considerable amount of dread and superstition on the matter is said to be entertained by the men living in the 'fated room,' and it would be well were it demolished and another built in its stead in another locality,—for there must be something more than fancy in the case, or five-sixths of the entire number of deaths in the wing since it occupied the station would not occur from amongst its inmates."

TWO MISSIONARIES, connected with the Church Missionary Society, the Rev. Mr. Matchett and the Rev. Mr. Rogers, have been sent to preach the Gospel in Scinde.—Ibid.

DADABHAI AND MUNCHERJEE, have announced a dividend of 25 per cent to their creditors, and hope, shortly after the sale of the rest of their property, to make a similar dividend.

MUTINY IN A NATIVE CORPS.—The Bombay Times notices
 the trial of a number of havildars, of the 11th Bombay N. I., at Malligaum, for mutiny—a crime rarely heard of in this army, the havildars having refused to "break up" when ordered to do so on a public parade by their adjutant and commanding officer.
 Their refusal was deservedly punished with extreme severity, for mutiny can never be tolerated in the Bombay army; but still, men who had attained the rank of colour havildars must have had some real or fancied grievance which probably an explanation or a few words of kindly exhortation would have removed.
 We do not mean to say that the men were harshly treated, but we do think there was something requiring investigation and redress, or the mutinous havildars would never have committed themselves as they did: our reason for so thinking being the extreme rarity of the crime of mutiny even among the sepoys of the Bombay army.

EXPEDITION IN THE INDIAN NAVY DEPARTMENT. — The express announcing the fall of Rangoon, also brought orders that two more Bombay war steamers should be prepared for Burmah immediately, and it was reported that more troops were ordered up from Madras. The Queen and Victoria were ready for sea in twenty-four hours, but by next post they were countermanded, and three of the steam-frigates at present at Rangoon are to return to Bombay. Commodore Sir H. Leeke, in a general order, expressed his gratification at the way in which Commander Drought, and Lieut. Manners met his wishes by preparing those vessels for sea, in so short a space of time. "The Queen was undocked at eleven o'clock A.M., on the 3rd inst., and was fully equipped and ready to proceed on service, had she been required, at sunset the same evening."

DESERTIONS.—A correspondent at Poona informs us that "no less than six men of the Fusiliers deserted on the morning of the 4th of May. Two of the number had only been released from confinement a short time before, having been punished in this manner for former desertions."—Telegraph, May 12.

CUMSLABHAR, one of the widows of H. H. the late Raghoojee Angria, chief of Colaba, died a few days ago. By her death the Bombay Government save Rs. 12,000 a year.—Telegraph, May 12.

METEOROLOGY.—We have had a constant succession of cloudy skies, light showers, and threatenings. Our glacial season of March and April, when hailstorms most abound, has been singularly prolific in these meteors. Severe hailstorms, with thunder, lightning, rain, and wind, were experienced at Kandy in Ceylon on the 6th March, at Bangalore on the 18th, at Allahabad on the 17th and 18th, at Ootacamund on the 18th, at Narsingpore on the 19th and 20th—on the latter of these days the sky all overhead, from which the hail descended, was transparent and cloudless; at Pondicherry on the 24th, at Assam on the 25th; at Tirhoot on the 26th—some of the pieces were lens-shaped, four inches in diameter, and a vast number of cattle were killed by them; and Roorkee near Saharunpore, on the 27th, during the night; north of Lahore on the 29th, and again on the 31st; at Landour over the greater part of the night of the 31st, just after the earthquake; on the 2nd April at Sealkote in the Punjab; on the 5th at the mouth of the Indus near Kurrachee; and on the 16th at Mahabuleswar. We have had three instances this season of what seems to have been the fall of an aerolite during thunderstorms. On the 25th September a violent explosion occurred in the air at Bombay, followed by a wild rushing sound overhead, heard at various points over an area thirty miles in length and eight in breadth, followed by a severe concussion, as if a heavy body had fallen, just before the occurrence of which a large fire-ball was seen plunging into the sea. On the 18th March, during a violent thunderstorm near Dhutmah, in the N. W. provinces, a thunder bolt was seen to fall and strike the ground, giving out in the course of the concussion a clear ringing sound like the crack of a rifle—there was no echo or reverberation at all like thunder. It appeared about 150 yards from Choki, and resembled in its descent a huge ball of red hot iron, with a band of fire, estimated at about thirty feet in length. On the 30th April, about midnight, a violent explosion was heard during a storm of wind and rain at Kurrachee, resembling the discharge of a vast artillery battery, and about half a minute afterwards a meteor, partially obscured by the rain, but still distinct and visible, was seen descending into the sea. It is now well established that, in India, at all events, earthquakes are almost always accompanied by furious storms of thunder, lightning, wind, and rain: it is difficult to trace the cause of coincidences so remarkable in the commotions of the earth and air,—still more so to imagine any connection whatever betwixt the perturbations within the limits of our atmosphere and the movements of solid bodies entering it from regions beyond its boundaries: yet it is surely possible to suppose a thunderstorm propitious to the precipitation on the surface of the ground of bodies which might otherwise have passed on in their career.—Bombay Times, May 11.

GUNNERY OF THE INDIAN NAVY.—It is no disparagement to the rest of the force at Rangoon, that the Bombay portion of it should speak chiefly of their own achievements: and nothing could have exceeded the courage, coolness, and conduct, of the officers and men in the Indian Navy, or the beauty of the practice of their guns: the shells burst to a hair's breadth just where they ought, and did the precise amount of mischief intended by them. We take the opportunity of specially advertising the subject because, though we have always heard the merits of the gunnery instructor spoken of in the highest terms, we have at times expressed an opinion that more than enough of time and attention was devoted to the subject. The result shows that if it has been so, the time has been well spent, and that the instruction has been as good as could be given and thoroughly taken advantage of.—Bombay Times, May 8.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

EXAMINATIONS IN NATIVE LANGUAGES.

Head Quarters, Mahabuleswar, April 26, 1852.—With reference to the regulation marginally noted, the Commander of the Forces has been pleased to resolve, with the concurrence of Government, that in future, before officers are allowed to appear before the permanent Presidency Committee, for examination in the Native languages, they be required, in

Jameson's Code } all practicable cases, to pass before a Sect. L. Act. 213. } station or Garrison Committee (either at an out-station or at

CEYLON.

The Governor continues at Kandy, where he has had his whole Council in consultation. The only result of these deliberations as yet apparent is merely the republished draft of an ordinance intended to assimilate the laws regarding what are called "Service Parvery Lands" to those which affect lands held by ordinary titles.

The accounts of gold-finding in Australia have naturally excited much attention in Ceylon, and not a few of the class of superintendents have shown a natural anxiety to proceed to a land where at least they are sure of a climate not inimical to continued health,—of the society of Englishmen, and of a permanent home where labour can always secure the means of existence. A vessel has been placed for Australia, and the Belle Butcher, two Baddelys, Wilmot, Lindsay, Manson. The Marchioness of Dalhousie, whose health has suffered from her residence in continental India, has determined to spend six months in a climate which has been pronounced superior to that of Simla, and which is not the less healthy during the heavy rains which fall in June and July. At the end of the six months her ladyship's husband is expected to join her, after having completed his rule as Governor-General of India by the acquisition of Burmah.—Col. Observer, May 10.

CHINA.

THE LONDON MAILS of Jan. 24th and Feb. 24th arrived at Hong-Kong on April the 11th.

THE news from the disturbed provinces is still unsatisfactory; Imperialist and insurgent both appearing determined to weary out each other with tactic and stratagem. Of the two, however, the latter appear to be continually getting the best of it. It is said that the troops levied by Seu to repel the insurgents in Kwangsi, being unable to obtain arrears of pay, have deserted in large companies, and that a body, said to number 18,000, have taken possession of a walled town at no great distance from Canton, where, and in all the surrounding district, the utmost severities are practised on the unoffending residents. In this predicament, and hearing that, having possession of a number of salt and other boats, the mob threatened an attack on Canton itself, Yeh, the governor, is now meditating an application to the British Government for assistance. The defection of Imperial troops has caused great alarm in Canton.

Dr. Bowring had arrived at Hong-Kong, and assumed his office as Plenipotentiary and Superintendent of Trade during the absence of Sir S. G. Barham.

Hong-Kong had been visited with a peculiar phenomenon, in the shape of a whirlwind, causing serious loss of life, and heavy damage to buildings and vessels.

The H. E. I. Co.'s steam frigate Semiramis, brought on twelve men of the destroyed ship Herald's crew, and one of the Victory's passengers, who were all tried and condemned at a Criminal Session of the Supreme Court. Two of the former had been discharged by proclamation, the remaining ten were to be executed on the 3rd of May. The Victory's man was sentenced to transportation for fifteen years. The Englishman, Fenton, had also been tried for consorting with pirates—found guilty, and awarded three years' imprisonment with hard labour.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Col. Michel's brigade had a very smart brush with the enemy on the 17th of April, near Fort Cox. The enemy mustered very strong. One company of the 6th and one of the Rifles were on the left flank, well covered by rocks. While the main body were moving to take a fresh position to the right front, the two companies became severely engaged, and for some time no advantage was gained by either side, until a sub-division of the 6th light company, making a desperate charge, drove the enemy with heavy loss from their position. Eight were killed by the bayonet, and one man, named Kelly, captured a musket, ready capped and loaded, by dashing out a Caffre's brains with the butt of his piece. During this time the colonel ordered a company of Rifles into ambush, and to wait till he ordered them to rise. The column moved off, and when the Caffres thought all was clear, they came on for the purpose of having a few partial shots; but, upon their arrival within 100 yards of the company of Rifles, they received a volley, which drove them headlong down krantzes, &c., leaving some 20 killed.

Stock's councillor is to be hanged for trying to incite Pato to war. He is now under two constables for security.—G. T. Journal, April 27.

There has been an entire change in the field operations since the arrival of the new Governor, and, from what we are able to gather, decidedly for the better. It seems more his policy to protect the colony than to take cattle.

No sooner did the chief Sandilli hear of the arrival of General Cathcart, than he sent to Commissioner Brownlee to ask for peace, "as the land had been disturbed long enough." But the messenger was sent back to say that the Governor would take no notice of the Gaikas on this side of the Kei; when he and all his people were on the other side they might then negotiate, but not before. This is really a good beginning; everything appears to be going on so favourably, that, should the Governor only expel Umhala and all the T'Slambies, this may perhaps be the last Caffre war; if not, a few years will still make no great difference in their spirit of submission. No more general orders are to be published officially in any of the local papers.

Information has been received that Macomo has offered to surrender to Gen. Somerset, but to no one else.—Frontier Times, April 27.

The last dates from King William's Town are to the 27th of April. General Cathcart had recovered from the effects of a severe fall, and was to proceed on the 27th to Fort Beaufort, preparatory to an attack upon an extensive scale, on the 30th of April, upon the Waterkloof, where Macomo had again removed, with a large party of Caffres, from the Amatolas, and had been joined by a great many rebel Hottentots. It was understood that the General would direct this movement in person. His determination to hang the councillors of Seyolo and Stock, who have been captured while endeavouring to excite Pato and other friendly Caffres to join the enemy, has inspired great confidence, and the erection of the gallows at King William's Town for that purpose has struck much terror into the Caffres. The General's policy of destroying the enemy's cattle is most important, as is also his refusal to have personal communications with any of the chiefs among the Caffres. His energy and decision of character are much admired.

General Cathcart has issued the following address:—

"Chiefs, amapakati, and people who dwell between the rivers Kei and Keiskamma. Our great and good Queen Victoria has sent me, George Cathcart, to be your great chief and governor. I am come among you to do good to all those who are faithful and true to their word. Therefore, Pato, Siwani, Teise, Umkai, and all those chiefs and men of the T'Slambie tribes who have been faithful during this war, I am your good friend so long as you, your amapakati, and people, will allow me to be so. I will also be the friend of Umhala, provided that his future conduct be such as to acquire my good opinion. But as for Sandilli, and all the Gaika chiefs and people, also the T'Slambies Seyolo and Umfundisi, and their followers, they have rebelled against their Sovereign, Queen Victoria, and have suffered rebel Hottentots and others to join them in fighting against her soldiers. That is a great crime, and cannot be forgotten; therefore, though I wish for peace, and that all bloodshed should cease, Sandilli, and all those who have taken part in this wicked rebellion, must go beyond the Kei, and none of them will ever be suffered to return and live in peace in the country they occupied before the war.

"GEORGE CATHCART, Lieutenant-General, High Commissioner.

"Dated at King William's Town, this 12th of April."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, June 15, 1852.

THE "Papers relating to hostilities with Burmah," presented by her Majesty's command to both Houses of Parliament, put us in possession of all the official information necessary to explain their origin; and it is impossible to read these documents without being convinced that the war was absolutely unavoidable.

The commercial treaty with Ava (concluded in conformity with the treaty of Yandaboo), in 1826, stipulated that the merchants of the respective countries should be permitted to carry on trade reciprocally in both, the Governments "giving them the utmost protection and security."

In the course of last year, Mr. Sheppard, master and owner of a trading vessel of Madras, described by Colonel Bogle as "a most quiet, inoffensive, and well-behaved man, correct and honourable in his dealings," complained to the Indian Government that he had been seized, imprisoned, and ill-treated by the Governor of Rangoon, upon a false charge of throwing a man overboard; that his vessel had been detained and Rs. 1,005 extorted from him; adding that this was one of many acts of injustice, oppression, and tyranny suffered by British subjects in that port. Shortly after, another master of a British ship, named Lewis, made a similar complaint, alleging that he had been subjected to sundry extortions, as well as insult and indignity, by the Governor, on a false plea of murdering one of his crew. Had these charges been true, they would have been cognizable not by the Government of Burmah, but by a British court of law.

Upon the back of these representations, claiming redress under the treaty, came a memorial from the merchants of Rangoon to the Governor-General of India, in which they allege that they have, for a long time, suffered from the tyranny of the Burmese authorities; that trade is seriously obstructed, and almost suppressed, thereby; that the treaty of Yandaboo was violated by exactions from vessels, in shape of harbour-dues, &c.; that neither life nor property was safe, as the Governor had publicly stated to his dependants that he had no money to pay them, and had granted them his permission to get money as they could; that he has frequently demanded money without any pretext, and tortured the parties till his demands were complied with; that affairs had arrived at such a crisis that, unless protected, they should be obliged to leave the country; and that, being there under the provisions of the treaty of Yandaboo, they claimed protection.

The Governor-General came to the conclusion, upon the evidence laid before him, that the treaty had been violated, and the law of nations disregarded, in these cases; that not only had "security and protection" been withheld, but very gross injustice and oppression had been practised, by the Burmese authorities; and his Lordship felt that "it was incumbent upon the Government of India to accede to the appeal, and demand reparation from the Court of Ava, if its officer should refuse to make a proper submission."

Accordingly, Commodore Lambert, of her Majesty's ship Fas, accompanied by Captain Latter, as interpreter, was despatched in that frigate, with two steamers, to Rangoon, instructed to demand reparation for the infraction of the treaty, and compensation to Captains Sheppard and Lewis. He was likewise charged with a letter to the King of Ava from the Indian Government, stating that complaints had been received from time to time from British subjects at Rangoon of extortion and oppression exercised upon them by the governor of that port; setting forth the specific cases of the two captains, and suggesting that his Majesty would doubtless recognise the propriety of indemnifying the parties thus injured, and the wisdom of removing the Governor of Rangoon, whose conduct tended to sow dissension between the states. The Government, in conclusion, observed that, though confident that the Court of Ava would manifest a just sense of its own duty and interests, and abstaining, therefore, from every expression which would seem at variance with a spirit of friendliness, it looked for prompt proof of a reciprocal feeling on the part of the Court, to be manifested in its ready compliance with the requirements of the Government of India, and, should these expectations be disappointed, the Government would feel called upon to take immediate measures to enforce its rights under existing treaties, protect the interests of British subjects, and fully vindicate its own honour and power.

This letter was to be transmitted to the Court of Ava only in the event of the Governor of Rangoon refusing to comply with the demands of the Commodore, who, on his arrival at Rangoon, found, as he says, "such an addition of cruelties to the wrongs already named," that he forbore to send the limited demand he had been instructed to make upon the Governor, and, determining to forward at once to that functionary the letter to the King, despatched to the Indian Government a memorial from the merchants resident at Rangoon, inclosing "a list of grievances," which contains no fewer than thirty-eight distinct acts of extortion, imprisonment, flogging, torture, and murder.

The manner in which the mission was received at Rangoon seemed to betoken no pacific disposition on the part of the local authorities. The Commodore, in moving up the river, received a message, anything but friendly, from the Governor, who threatened to "cut off the heads and break the legs" of all the foreigners, British and others, who went down to the wharf to welcome the frigate. Information was also conveyed to the British officers that, if a deputation landed, they incurred the risk of being detained as hostages. Captain Tarleton, with Captain Latter and other officers, did land, however, and presented the letter for the King to the Governor, who received them in an informal dress, smoking a chassot.

The altered state of circumstances, communicated by Commodore Lambert, and the personal bearing of the Burmese functionary, induced the Indian Government to reconsider the whole case, and to conclude that, even in the event of a favourable reply from the King, the removal of the Governor of Rangoon would not be a sufficient guarantee against the conduct of his successors, and that a British agent must be placed at that port, with a guard of fifty men, as stipulated by the treaty of Yandaboo. On the other hand, if the King of Ava should reject our demands, it was felt that they could not tamely submit to injury and insult. "At the same time," the Government add, "while it is our imperative duty to maintain rights secured by solemn treaties, it is a duty not less imperative, that the Government should endeavour to obtain redress by the least violent means, and that it should not have recourse to the terrible extremity of war, except in the last resort, and after every other method has been tried without success. The only course we can pursue, which would not, on the one hand, involve a dangerous submission to injury, or, on the other hand, precipitate us prematurely into a war which moderate counsels may still enable us with honour to avert, will be to establish a blockade of the two rivers at Rangoon and Moulmein, by which the great mass of the traffic of the Burmese Empire is understood to pass."

The reply of the Court of Ava, addressed to the "Great English War chiefs," and purporting to come from "the great ministers of state, who transact all the affairs of the kingdom, bearing continually on their heads the two golden feet," &c., was of a conciliatory character, and inspired Commodore Lambert with hope that all would be acceded to. It complained that the purport and style of the letter from the Indian Government, and especially the intimation that it would "enforce its rights," were not customary, or in accordance with friendship; but it expressed a desire, nevertheless, to meet its wishes, and to establish peace and friendship. It stated that orders had been issued that, in accordance with the treaty, the merchants at Rangoon should be treated justly according to law; that the governor of that place had been recalled and another appointed, and that strict inquiry should be instituted into the cases of alleged ill-treatment.

A new governor, or special commissioner,—a man of rank, with a name as long as a pedigree,—was appointed; but his behaviour was a more faithful index than the letter, of the sentiments of the Burmese Court. No intimation of his arrival was given to Commodore Lambert, who, however, having previously consulted the great man's wishes, sent Commander Fishbourne, R.N., attended by some of his officers, and Captain Latter, to him, with a letter stating the nature of our claims. These officers proceeded, in uniform, to the governor's house, where they were told that he was asleep,—which was not true;—that so great a man could not be disturbed; and that they must wait in an open shed, where none but the lowest rabble ever resorted, and which would have been degrading. After remaining some little time, at the foot of the stairs, and representing, without avail, the impropriety of their treatment to a Burmese officer who had been on a deputation from the governor to the Commodore, and had experienced a very different reception, the party returned to the frigate.

Captain Latter, who is familiar with Burmese customs, in his Narrative of the whole transaction, declares that it was "as gross and studied an insult as could be devised;" and Commodore Lambert, considering this "a deep insult offered by a representative of the Burmese government to an officer of rank in the British Navy," suspended all communications with that functionary, and, having received on board the ships all persons at Rangoon claiming British protection, declared the rivers to be in a state of blockade. Further; treating the conduct of the governor "as nothing but a national insult offered to the British flag," he seized a ship belonging to the king of Ava, "by way of reprisal."

This last act, which is much dwelt upon in all the subsequent communications from the Burmese authorities, as wholly unjustifiable, though approved by the Indian Government, we think, should have been forborne.

The defence of his conduct offered by the governor of Rangoon, which affords at the same time a sample of his audacity, is contained in the following passage in a letter delivered by a deputation to the commodore :—

"Being actuated by the highest feelings of friendship to Commodore Lambert, whilst I was intending to send for him, the interpreter, Edwards, came and told me that he had come to acquaint me that Commodore Lambert wished to have an interview with me; and, as I was fearful that any of the others might behave discourteously, and not according to the rules of etiquette, I decreed that the interpreter, Edwards, might come with the letter or communication. But after some time, four inferior officers, an American clergyman, called Kincaid, and the interpreter Edwards, came in a state of intoxication, and, contrary to custom, entered the compound on horseback; and whilst I was asleep, and the deputy-governor was waking me, used violent and abusive language. They then went away, and conveyed an irritating message to the commodore; and that officer, listening to their improper and unbecoming representations, and with a manifest inclination to implicate the two nations in war, on the 6th of January, 1852, at night, with secrecy, took away the ship belonging to his Majesty the King of Ava."

The day following the delivery of this insolent epistle (the 10th day of January), a sharp cannonade was opened from a stockade on the river upon the For, which instantly returned it with shot and shell, soon silencing the battery. Large war canoes carrying the red (or war) flag, were also moving down the river. The commodore having proceeded to Calcutta, and communicated the state of affairs in person to the Indian Government, prompt preparations for hostilities were made, though the Governor-General "still entertained a hope that a peaceable adjustment would be obtained."

The Indian Government, in the hope of effecting such a desirable object, transmitted a letter to the Governor of Rangoon, expostulating with him for his treatment of the deputation, and for the calumnious charge brought against the officers composing it, and requiring, as the only means of averting hostilities, an apology in writing, for the insult offered to Commander Fishbourne; the immediate payment of Rs. 9,948, as compensation to Captains Sheppard and Lewis; and the reception, with due honour, of an accredited agent of the British Government. The reply to this letter reiterated the statements, that the Governor was asleep when the deputation came to him; and that the four officers, the American missionary, and the interpreter, "had been drinking;" and complained of the seizure of the "great ship Ye-thenah-ye-moon, belonging to his Majesty the all-powerful Lord of the Universe," and that Commodore Lambert and his officers had "violated the functions of a great embassy." All the demands made by the Indian Government were evaded.

The Governor-General now expressed his deliberate conviction that the Government of India had no alternative but to exact reparation by force of arms. In his minute of February 12, his lordship, recognising the deep responsibility which the commencement of a war involves, passes in review the events which had led to a result which, he says, he had sincerely desired and earnestly laboured to avoid, "in order to absolve the Government of India from the reproach of having lightly sought a quarrel, or insufficiently striven to avert it."

"If it be objected (he says) that the main cause of the present rupture appears to be but a question of form; that a great Government may well afford to treat such petty slights with indifference; and that it would be wise for the Government of India to pass by unnoticed as well the offence itself, as the present refusal of apology for it, rather than to be drawn by it into all the evils of a war with Burmah, I desire to record my fixed conviction, that the Government of India will commit an error, perilous to its own security, and at variance with real humanity, if, acting on this view, it shall yield to the pretensions of the Burmese, and shall now patch up a hollow and unsubstantial peace."

An attempt was made by the Court of Ava, with what view is not apparent, to open a communication with the Indian Government, through Colonel Bogle at Moulmein; but it led to no result.

In a minute of the Governor-General, dated 23rd March, concurred in by the members of the Board, he specifies the following as the conditions of peace to be offered to the Burmese Government, should hostilities commence on the arrival of the expedition :—the payment of 15 lacs of rupees, as reimbursement of expenses; an additional 3 lacs for every month after the 1st of May, until satisfaction of our demands is afforded; and until these payments are made, the British troops to remain in possession of such captured places as they may choose to retain.

General Sir Charles Napier has suffered a defeat,—a word that must be grating to the ears of a commander,—in a court of law. Having been overpaid a certain amount of prize-money, and refusing to refund the sum he had received through mistake, the Indian Government, as the simplest and most obvious course, stopped it out of his pay; whereupon he applied to the Court of Queen's Bench for a mandamus to enforce the payment of the sum so stopped. The Court,—forbearing to give any opinion (which they were not required to do) as to whether the East-India Company deserved to lose the money because their clerk had committed an oversight, or whether Sir Charles was justified in retaining what he was told he was not entitled to,—decided that they had no power to grant such a writ, or to order the arrears of pay to be paid, even if it had been retained without any cause assigned; that Sir Charles, in short, had "mistaken his course."

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

THE BURMESE WAR.

London Gazette Extraordinary, May 31, 1852.

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Secret Committee of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company.

Fort William, April 24, 1852.

We have the highest satisfaction in transmitting to you the enclosed copy of despatches just received from his Exc. Rear-Admiral Austen, C.B., and Lieut. gen. Godwin, commanding the naval and military forces employed in Burmah.

They report the assault and capture of Martaban on the 5th, and of Rangoon on the 14th April, and announce the complete success of the combined operations of the army and fleet.

The necessity for immediately despatching this intelligence now by the last express which can safely be relied upon, renders it impossible for us to convey to your Hon. Committee our sentiments on the gratifying results which are announced, as fully as we desire to do. This duty we shall have the satisfaction of discharging by the ensuing mail. But we beg leave to take this earliest opportunity of assuring you that we feel we cannot use language too strong in making known to you our unqualified approbation of the admirable spirit which has been displayed in these combined operations of the naval and military forces, or express too warmly our gratitude to the Rear-Admiral and to the Lieut.-General by whom the operations have been conducted, and to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of both services, who, as the several despatches will show you, have so nobly performed their duty in the field.

We have, &c.

Rattler, Rangoon River, April 2, 1852.

Sir,—Referring to the seventh paragraph of the instructions from the Indian Government to the Commander of the Forces, in which that functionary is desired before proceeding to Rangoon to ascertain by such means as may seem best, through a flag of truce, whether any letter from the court of Ava to the Government had been received, I have the honour, by the desire of the Rear-Admiral Commander-in-Chief, to state, for the information of the Governor-General, that the East-India Company's steamer Proserpine was sent up the river with Capt. Latter, Burmese interpreter, to the governor of Dalla, to ascertain whether any letter had been received.

The steamer, with a flag of truce, was permitted to pass two stockades on the right bank of the river unmolested; but a third upon the left bank opened fire upon her. In obedience to the instructions his Excellency had given her commander, she turned back; but as the flood tide was running very strong, this was a work of difficulty, and she had to remain for some time under fire, which she returned with shell and shot, and blew up the stockade. The other two stockades then opened fire; but she succeeded in returning to the anchorage without damage, having been struck by only one shot from a 12-pounder gun.

The Secretary to Rear-Admiral Austen to the Secretary to the Government of India.

Rattler, Rangoon River, April 9, 1852.

Sir,—I have the honour to request you will be pleased to inform the Governor-General that, agreeably with the intention expressed in my letter of the 25th ult., the Rear-Admiral Commander-in-Chief hoisted his flag on board her Majesty's steam sloop Rattler, and, accompanied by her Majesty's steam sloop Salamander, left Penang on the 28th of March.

On the 1st of April, his Excellency arrived off the mouth of the Rangoon River, where he found lying her Majesty's ships Fox and Serpent, the East-India Company's steamers Phlegethon and Proserpine, three transports, and the ship taken from the king of Ava. On the following morning the steamers and transports named in the margin* arrived from Calcutta with the Lieut.-General Commanding the Forces on board, and the Salamander came in shortly after. The Proserpine was sent to Moulmein the same day, to give notice of projected movements; and on the 3rd inst. the Rattler, bearing his Excellency's flag, the Hermes, with the Commander of the Forces on board, and the Salamander, sailed for Moulmein. Receiving troops on board there, to the number of 1,500, the squadron proceeded off Martaban, and assisted at the capture of that place on the 5th inst., the particulars of which the Commander of the Forces will have the honour of communicating to his lordship. The Hermes grounded too far off to be of much use. The Salamander, owing to her draught of water, could not come so near as was desirable; nevertheless, the shelling was most effective. The Rattler took up an admirable position, 214 yards from the stockades: her shot and shell did much execution. The Proserpine, admirably managed by her able commander (whom his Excellency would beg to bring under favourable notice), received the troops from the larger steamers and landed them, and at the same time kept up a constant fire upon the stockades. The only casualties that occurred in the squadron were on board the Rattler, where one seaman was wounded in the arm, and two of the Madras N.I.

On the 7th inst. 1,100 European troops, with camp-followers, baggage, &c., were embarked in the squadron, and the transport Jessie, and all sailed for the rendezvous, arriving on the 8th inst. The steamers and transports named in the margin† had arrived at the rendezvous, and arrangements are this day being made for an advance upon Rangoon.

The Rear-Admiral will have the honour of communicating future proceedings as opportunities occur.

Rattler, Rangoon River, April 9, 1852.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you, by desire of the Rear-Admiral Commander-in-Chief, that, in compliance with an arrangement entered into between the Lieut.-General Commanding the Forces and his Excellency, Commodore G. R. Lambert, in her Majesty's ship Fox, ascended the river, in force, on the 4th inst., for the purpose of destroying the stockades below Rangoon; thus clearing the way for the advance of the squadron.

I have the honour to enclose a copy of a letter from the Commodore, reporting the execution of this service in a manner which, in the opinion of the Rear-Admiral, must meet with approval.

I have, &c.

GEO. P. MARTIN.

Commodore G. R. Lambert to Rear-Admiral C. J. Austen, C.B.

Fox, in the Rangoon River, April 9, 1852.

Sir,—In pursuance of the instructions I had received from your Excellency, I proceeded up the Rangoon River on the afternoon of the 4th inst., taking under my orders H.M.'s sloop Serpent, and the Tenasserim and Phlegethon steamers, belonging to the East-India Company, with three companies of H.M.'s 18th regiment, under the command of Lieut. col. Coote. I anchored off the Bassein Creek the same evening.

At daylight on the morning of the 5th, I again weighed and went up the river, having previously given direction to Commander Luard, with the Serpent and Phlegethon, which I placed under his orders, with one company of the 18th regiment, to attack and destroy the De Silva Stockade; which service he most effectually performed.

I proceeded myself with the Fox and Tenasserim to the Dumnout, and a new stockade that had recently been erected, nearly opposite on the other side of the river; as we approached, the enemy opened an ill-regulated fire on us (two of their shot striking the Fox), which was soon silenced by her Majesty's ship and the steamer. The troops and the marines of the Fox were then landed, and by the evening both stockades were burnt, and the whole force re-embarked without any casualty.

I have great satisfaction in stating that the energy and good feeling displayed by both services in performing this duty was such as to meet my highest approval, and I have to express my thanks for the assistance I received from Lieut. col. Coote and Commanders Tarleton and Luard, as well as from the commanders of the East-India Company's steam vessels of war Tenasserim and Phlegethon.

Rattler, at Rangoon, April 16, 1852.

Sir,—In continuation of my letter of the 9th inst., reporting, for the information of the Governor-General of India, the proceedings of the naval squadron employed in these waters, I have the honour further to report, by desire of the Rear-Admiral Commander-in-Chief, that, on the 10th inst., the ships, steamers, and transports commenced an advance up the river, and anchored below the Hastings Shoal that evening.

* H.M.'s steam sloop Hermes. E.I.C. steamers, Fire Queen, Enterprise, Tenasserim. Transports, Tubal Cain, Julia, Monarch, Lahore.

† Steamers, Feroze, Sesostris, Moozuffer, Zenobia, Berenice, Medusa. Transports, Rockiff, Hempeske, Atalanta, St. Thee. Graham.

The Zenobia had been sent a part of the way up on the day previous, for the purpose of watering, but, grounding on the De Silva Shoal, was unfortunately unable to get out of her difficulties in time to take a part in the proceedings against Rangoon.

A copy of the Rear-Admiral's order to advance is annexed, by which it will be seen that it was intended on the following morning (Easter Sunday) to anchor above the shoal, but out of the range of fire from the enemy. I have the honour also to enclose a copy of the General Order for the proceedings of the squadron while off Rangoon. Some alteration had, however, to be made in the arrangements proposed. It was found that there would not be room for all the ships to anchor above the shoal, out of gunshot, without a risk of their grounding, and it was for some time debated whether the squadron should remain below the shoal until Monday, or advance on the Sunday morning to take up their positions off Rangoon, and risk the commencement of the action on that day. The tides and other causes decided the authorities on adopting the latter course, and accordingly the shoal was crossed on the morning of the 11th by each ship as the water served. When the first vessels had anchored above it, the Dagon Pagoda fired several guns, apparently with a view to call in the people. Upon the East-India Company's steamers Feroze, Moorzuffer, and Sesostris taking up their positions, fire was opened upon them from the stockades on either side, which was returned with shot and shell. In the course of an hour an explosion took place, the importance of which was only afterwards discovered. It was that of a stockade mounting nine 18-pounder guns, well planted, and would doubtless have done great mischief to our shipping, if not thus accidentally silenced so early. Upon the Fox advancing to take up her position, she poured effective broadsides into the stockades on both sides of the river. After consulting the Lieut.-General Commander of the Forces, the boats of the Fox landed with a party of seamen and marines and a company of the 18th Royal Irish, and, under cover of the ships' guns, stormed two stockades on the Dalla side. Although a rapid fire of musketry was kept up from many hundreds of the enemy in these defences, yet this service was happily effected with but one man wounded on our side. Her Majesty's sloop Serpent and the East-India Company's steamer Phlegethon then passed up the river, and anchored above Kemmendine, in order to capture the war-boats, and to prevent fire-rafts being sent down upon the squadron. The Rattler and Tenasserim next advanced along the line, and succeeded in silencing three more stockades. The party before alluded to in the boats of the Fox, and a few seamen, with thirty of the Royal Irish, from the Rattler, stormed another on the Dalla side, driving hundreds of the enemy out of it into the jungle. All the stockades that had been taken were then set fire to and burnt in succession. The ships returned to their respective positions, in readiness to land the troops, which commenced at four o'clock on the morning of the 12th, without opposition from the enemy. It was discovered that the Dagon Pagoda was not so far from the ships as was laid down in the charts, being at a good shelling distance; the ships accordingly commenced throwing shells into it. In the course of the evening a magazine blew up, and the outskirts of the pagoda were set on fire in several directions, creating great confusion among the enemy. Shells were occasionally thrown from the ships on the 13th inst., during the day and night, frequently setting fire to the stockades in various places. On the afternoon of that day, a large party of men, with two elephants and riders, were seen to leave the pagoda. It was afterwards understood that this was the governor of Rangoon, who had quitted the pagoda, in despair of being able to hold it.

It will be the pleasing duty of the Commander of the Forces to report the advance of the troops, and the gallant storming of the White Stockade, about half a mile from the landing-place, and ultimately the storming and capture of the Dagon Pagoda. The Rear-Admiral desires further to observe, that he leaves to the Lieut.-General to report upon the conduct of the small naval brigade, composed as per margin,* under the command of Senior Lieut. J. W. Dorville, of the flag-ship, employed with the forces upon this occasion, in the utmost confidence that ample justice will be done to them.

Enclosed is a list of the casualties that took place in the squadron while employed upon this service, and his Excellency desires to remark, that it is a subject not less of surprise and thankfulness that so few have taken place on the occasion.

I have, &c.

G. P. MARTIN.

(Then follow two "General Memoranda," addressed "To the captains and commanders of her Majesty's ships and vessels, and the East-India Company's steamers, in the Rangoon river," of arrangements for the advance up the Rangoon river, and the contemplated attack on Rangoon.)

List of Casualties on board her Majesty's ships and vessels, and the East-India Company's steamers, during the operations against Rangoon and Dalla, 11th—14th April, 1852.

Fox, 3 men wounded. Hermes, 6 men wounded. Salamander, 1 man wounded. Feroze, 1 man wounded. Moorzuffer, 7 men wounded. Sesostris, Ena. Armstrong, H.M.'s 51st regt., wounded, mortally (died three hours after). Tenasserim, 1 man wounded. Serpent, Mr. C. Sproull, assistant-surgeon, and 7 seamen, wounded. Rattler, 2 men wounded.

Rear-Admiral Austen to the Governor-General of India in Council.

Rattler, off Rangoon, April 16, 1852.

My Lord Marquis.—While congratulating your lordship on the success that has hitherto attended the expedition against Burmah, in the storming and capture of the strongholds of Mantabon and Rangoon, I trust your lordship will permit me to bring under notice the support that I have received from all the officers and men under my command, forming the naval part of the expedition. The embarking and disembarking the troops, baggage, and military stores, the arrangements for the transports and for victualling the combined forces, have furnished almost incessant night and day work for the officers and men under my orders. It has been done on all sides with the utmost cheerfulness, and this large force has been moved up a rapid river without any accident of moment having occurred; and I have, up to the present time, to thank every officer and man employed under my orders for the cheerful manner in which they have undergone so much toil in this distressing climate.

To the commodore I feel under especial obligation. His local knowledge proved valuable, as his judgment and discretion were most useful. It would be impossible to value the services of an officer, second in command, more highly than I do those of the commodore. Capt. Lynch, senior officer of the Indian Navy, has, by his ability, judgment, and discretion, rendered essential service. Commander Mellersh, of my flag-ship, and Commanders Fishbourne and Tarleton, have rendered every possible assistance in carrying out all necessary arrangements. I was an eye-witness to Commander Tarleton's bravely leading his men to storm a stockade, to his being the first to mount the walls, and enter it. Commander Luard, of her Majesty's sloop Serpent, has been employed many months in these waters. A more zealous and indefatigable officer is not to be met with, and, relying upon his ability, he has frequently been placed in charge of responsible duties. With the assistance of the East-India Company's steamer Phlegethon, commanded by G. T. Neblett, Esq., he destroyed the De Silva stockades. When the action on the 11th of April commenced, he passed along the line of fire in the sloop under his command, to above Kemmendine, for the purpose of preventing the removal of the war-boats; and while on this service he was attacked by a very important stockade, and an officer (Mr. C. Sproull, assistant-surgeon) and seven of his men were wounded, but which he ultimately succeeded in silencing. Before the commencement of the war, he took great pains in surveying the coast and river, and his information was afterwards of great use.

The commanders and officers of the Indian Navy and of the East-India Company's uncovenanted service have, without a single exception, performed their duties with all possible alacrity. Commander Brooking, of the Proserpine, had at Mantabon an opportunity of particularly distinguishing himself, of which he took good care to avail himself, and it is with great regret that I found myself under the necessity of leaving him at Mouhnein for the protection of British interests, and thus losing his valuable services here.

Lieut. George Rice, in temporary command of the Maha Nuddie, rendered essential service to the cause, admirably handling his little vessel; he landed men on the beach to storm stockades, covering their landing with his own guns, and at the storming of them he was to be seen among the foremost ranks. In landing men, stores, and baggage, and ascending the narrow creeks of this river, the Maha Nuddie has proved most useful. Senior Lieut. Dorville, of my flag-ship, commanded the naval brigade at the capture of Rangoon, and from the flattering man-war in which the Commander of the Forces has been pleased to speak of his services, I feel assured he must be honourably mentioned in the Lieut. General's despatches.

Among those that have fallen victims in the service of their country upon this occasion, it is my painful duty to record that of the Rev. Thomas T. Baker, chaplain of H.M.'s ship For. Incessantly employed in administering to the wounded and dying, and in burying the dead, he fell a victim to the prevailing epidemic, cholera, on the 16th inst., leaving, I am informed, a widow and young family, who were wholly dependent on him for support.

I was an eye-witness to the indefatigable exertions of Dr. Minter, surgeon of the For, at the hospital on shore and on board the Tubal Cain. Dr. Montgomery, superintending surgeon, expressed himself to me as being under the greatest obligations to him for his assistance. In addition to the duties performed by Dr. Minter at the hospital, he had those of his own ship to attend to, where the cholera had broken out with some violence. Mr. Secombe, assistant-surgeon of the Hermes, was also employed at the hospital on shore.

In conclusion, I beg to remark that the whole conduct of the officers and men under my orders, employed on the present expedition, has been such as reflects much credit on themselves and on the services to which they respectively belong.

I have, &c.

CHAS. JNO. AUSTEN, Rear-Admiral.

Lieut. General H. Godwin, C.B., commanding the Forces in Ava, Arracan, and Tenasserim, to C. Allen, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India.

Moulmein, April 6, 1852.

Sir,—I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of the Governor-General in Council, that the force under my command left the Sand Heads on the 26th of March, for the Rangoon River, the place of rendezvous for the combined force from Bengal and Madras, where it arrived on the 2nd of April.

In obedience to my instructions, a flag of truce was immediately sent up to Rangoon, to inquire if any communication had arrived from the Court of Ava, in reply to the terms sent up to the Burmese Government, for the adjustment of the violence committed on the subjects of her Majesty by the authorities at Rangoon: the flag was in charge of Capt. Latter, of the Bengal army, and conveyed in the East-India Company's steamer Proserpine, Commander Brooking. On reaching the stockades that guarded the river on both its banks, the flag was fired on, and it was only by the excellent arrangement and brave conduct of Commander Brooking that his ship extricated herself, inflicting on the enemy a severe chastisement, by blowing up a powder magazine and destroying many men.

I found, on my arrival at the rendezvous, that the Madras division had not made its appearance, nor were there tidings of it, so that I resolved to go to Moulmein and make arrangements for the capture of Martaban.

In the Rangoon river I found that Rear-Admiral Austen, C.B., the naval Commander-in-Chief, had just arrived from Penang, in her Majesty's steamer Rattler. His Excellency and Commodore Lambert immediately came on board the Hermes, Commander Lambourne, in which I had my head-quarters, when it was agreed, in conference, that the Admiral would accompany me to Moulmein with her Majesty's steamers Hermes, Rattler, and Salamander,—sending in advance to the mouth of the Martaban river the East-India Company's steamer Proserpine. We accordingly left the Rangoon river at day-break on the 3rd of April; reached Moulmein the next day at noon. Orders were immediately issued for the troops to be in readiness for embarkation by four p.m., and by nine that evening a wing of H.M.'s 18th Royal Irish, a wing of H.M.'s 80th regt., a wing of the 26th Madras N.I., with detachments of Bengal European Artillery, and Madras Sappers—in all about 1,400 men—were on board.

Martaban stands on a noble sheet of water, with a river line of defences of about 800 yards. Inland lies a large pagoda, a wall running along the whole front, with an ascent from the water's edge of about 500 feet, on the top of which small pagodas stand, the slope being partially covered with fine trees and close jungle.

Arrangements were made for the attack at daybreak of the 5th. The Rear-Admiral made every disposition possible, in waters full of shoals and violent currents, for bombarding the position with his five steamers, and to cover the landing of the troops. It was the admiration of every one to witness the noble manner the Rattler worked her way within 200 yards of the wall, and close to the pagoda, doing tremendous execution. I changed from the Rattler at six o'clock, to superintend the landing of the troops, and went on board the Proserpine, a smaller vessel, with my staff. Col. Reynolds commanded the attack. At half-past six the steamer opened fire, and at seven the troops were in the boats, and landed, by the indefatigable exertions of Commander Brooking, under a smart fire of musketry and guns. Soon was the storming party under the walls, and over them, with less loss than I thought possible. Lieut. Colonel Reynolds immediately ascended to the pagodas on the height, and took possession of them, after some skirmishing with the enemy. At eight a.m. Martaban was won; and, considering the enemy's position and numbers, which report gives at 5,000 men, we have got it very cheaply.

I have to ask his Lordship's and the Council of India's best consideration of the services of Lieut. Colonel Reynolds, of the 18th Royal Irish, to whom is due the credit of this day's embarkation of severe fatigue and privation under a burning sun. To Capt. Gillespie, in command of the Grenadiers of the 18th Royal Irish, whom I saw first on the wall, the soldier following him receiving three wounds; to Capt. Campbell, who commanded the wing of the 18th Royal Irish; to Major Lockhart, in command of the wing of the 80th Foot; to Lieut. Colonel Johnson, commanding the wing of the 26th regt. Madras N.I., and to Capt. Randall, commanding the detachment of Madras Sappers and Miners, my warm approbation is due. I beg also to recommend to the consideration of his Lordship in Council, the Assistant Adjutant-General of the Force, Capt. Mayhew, whose exertions during the disembarkation of the troops tended greatly to its success, as also my aides-de-camp, Lieut. Chads, of H.M.'s 64th regt., and Lieut. Lambert, of the 56th Bengal N.I., son of the Commodore, who were highly useful to me during the whole day.

Major Fraser, the commanding engineer of the force, and Major Turton, in command of the Bengal Artillery, were with me the whole day; but from the nature of the operations, their particular services were not called into play, though they had made every disposition for the efficiency of their respective departments.

It will be obvious from the foregoing how greatly the success of the operations I have detailed has depended on the co-operation of the sister branch of the service. His Excellency Rear-Admiral Austen, C.B., has throughout afforded me the most cordial assistance. Her Majesty's steamers Rattler, Hermes, and Salamander worked in concert with the troops throughout the day.

On my departure to-morrow, I intend to take with me to the Rangoon river the wings of the 18th and 80th regiments, and the Company of Bengal Artillery, and the detachment of Madras Sappers and Miners doing duty at Moulmein.

In conjunction with Lieut. Colonel Bogle, the commissioner of these provinces, I have put the 26th Madras N.I. and a company of European Madras Artillery, with a suitable battery of guns, as a garrison at Martaban, relievable from Moulmein, when it may be thought desirable. In addition to which, a war-steamer has been placed by the Naval Commander-in-Chief on the station. These arrangements are, I think, adequate to the protection of the place, and will, I trust, meet with the approbation of the Government of India.

In conclusion, I beg to remark that I am greatly indebted to Lieut. Colonel Bogle, who accompanied me during the whole of the operations of the 5th, and was from his local knowledge of much use to me.

I have, &c.

HENRY GODWIN.

Return of Killed and Wounded at the Attack and Capture of Martaban, on the 5th April, 1852.

H.M.'s 18th Royal Irish Regiment of Foot—7 rank and file, wounded.

26th Regiment Madras N.I.—1 havildar, wounded.

Head-Quarters, Rangoon, April 18, 1852.

Sir,—On my return from Martaban on the 8th of April, I had the satisfaction to find the Madras division had arrived on the previous day, so that no time had been lost by my going to Martaban.

It was arranged that, during my absence at Moulmein, Commodore Lambert should, on the 5th inst., aided by some troops, destroy the stockades on the Rangoon river, which had long been troublesome, and had fired on the flag of truce. This had been so effectually performed as to leave hardly a sign of where the stockade had stood.

I shall now have the satisfaction of acquainting you, for the information of the Governor-General in Council, of the proceedings of this force, inclusive of the capture of the Great Dagon Pagoda at Rangoon, and the consequent fall of all around it.

The 9th of April I devoted to making every disposition for the landing of the troops, and to becoming acquainted with the heads of the departments of the Madras division. I informed the Admiral on the evening of that day, that my preparations were complete, and his Excellency proceeded up the river next day, close off Rangoon. On the 11th, the Admiral moved opposite the old town, with the intention, the next morning, to bombard the whole line of stockades on both banks of the river; but some of the flotilla getting very near the shore were fired on, which brought on a return from our side, and ended in the general destruction of the whole line of defences, though the fire of the enemy proved fatal to many on board the shipping. The Admiral and Commodore took a most distinguished part in the operations, landing and setting fire to all around them. This powerful attack, from the steam-frigates of both her Majesty's and the East-India Company's navy, completely cleared the ground for nearly a mile for our landing. On the 12th, at day-break, the troops were ready, and by about seven I had landed H.M.'s 51st Light Infantry, the 18th Royal Irish, the 40th Bengal N.I., and part of my artillery. The Bengal guns, under Major Reid, were ordered to move in advance, covered by four companies of the 51st Light Infantry. They had not proceeded far, however, when on opening some rising ground to our right, guns opened on us, and shortly after skirmishers showed themselves in the jungle. This was a new mode of fighting with the Burmese; no instance having occurred last war of their attacking our flanks or leaving their stockades, that I remember ever to have taken place. I make this remark as they are now not only good shots, but bold in their operations, and clever in selecting their ground and covering themselves. Our casualties for the past three days will prove it—our dress exposing us, and their garb and colour concealing them.

On looking at the stockade whence the fire came, I perceived it was a strong work, which used to be called in the last war the White House Picquet, a very strong position, and just in the way of our advance. A battery of four guns was immediately opened on it by Majors Reid and Oakes, the whole being under the command of Lieut. Colonel Foord, commandant of that arm. The fire of these guns was every effective. A storming party was formed of four companies of the 51st Light Infantry, under Lieut. Colonel St. Maur, with the Madras Sappers, under Major H. Fraser, Commanding Engineer, and advanced under cover of a jungle, on getting through which the musketry was so steady and effective from the stockades and adjoining buildings, that a great many of our party were killed and wounded; amongst whom were several officers. I have to deplore the temporary loss of Lieut. Colonel Bogle, the commissioner of the Tenasserim Provinces, who was very bravely attending the army to witness its operation. Major Fraser took the ladders to the stockade most gallantly, and alone mounted the defences of the enemy, where his example soon brought around him the storming party, which carried the stockade; but at very severe loss on our part.

It was my intention to move on to the main object of our operations; but on looking around me at the complete exhaustion of the storming party, it now being eleven o'clock, under a sun that may be understood since Major Oakes, of the Madras Artillery, was struck down by it at his battery, and died. Brevet Major Griffith, Madras army, whilst conveying an order, died on the road. Lieut. Colonel Foord, commandant of artillery, was nearly a victim to the heat, and obliged to quit the field; Brigadier Warren and Lieut. Colonel St. Maur also suffered greatly; so that, under such destruction, I resolved to halt where I was, and to concentrate the force in as strong a position as the country admitted of. We were teased by parties of the enemy hovering around us till the night closed, when all was quiet under the protection of our guns, which had been brought up to the front.

On the 13th it was reported the heavy battery guns could not be landed and with me before the middle of that day, and also that rations for the troops could not be prepared in time to enable me to advance. I, therefore, held my position till the next morning.

His Lordship in Council knows well the spot where I proposed to force my way into the Great Pagoda; and the road I was about to move on entirely turned all the defences of this real stronghold. The present position of Rangoon is entirely altered since the last war; within a few years the old town, which stood on the river bank, has been utterly destroyed, its bricks now lying in heaps on its site. A new town has been formed about a mile and a quarter from the river; it is nearly a square, with a bund or mud wall, about 16 feet high and 8 broad; a ditch runs along each side of the square, and on the north side, where the Pagoda stands, it has been very cleverly worked into the defences, to which it forms a sort of citadel.

The distance from the Pagoda to the south entrance of the town is about three-quarters of a mile, and it is something more than that breadth from east to west. The old road from the river to the Pagoda comes up to the south gate, running through the new town, and it was by this road the Burmese had settled that we should attack it, and where they had made every preparation to receive us, having armed the defences with nearly a hundred pieces of cannon and other missiles, and with a garrison of at least 10,000 men. The attempt to assault on this side would, I am convinced, from the steady way the Burmese defend their works, have cost us half our force.

On the 14th, the troops were under arms at five A.M., all in as fine a temper as ever men were. Our march was to the north-west, through thick jungle; four light guns, 9-pounders, their flanks protected by two companies of H.M.'s 80th regt., the rest of the wing of that corps following, with two more guns, and the 18th Royal Irish and the 40th Bengal N.I. formed the advance. The 51st Light Infantry and the 35th Madras N.I. were in reserve; the 9th Madras N.I. keeping open the communication with the shipping. We proceeded in this order for about a mile, when we opened the Great Pagoda, and its fire was turned on us. An excellent position for two guns was taken by Major Turton to our left flank, these were left under the command of Major Montgomery, of the Madras Artillery, who served them well. The ground to the front getting very difficult, barely admitted of the 80th and Royal Irish occupying it in close order. We had now completely turned the enemy's position, having passed their stockaded town, and got opposite the east side of the Great Pagoda, our main object. Major Turton informed me, that he had a favourable position to place in battery his heavy guns; but it took some time to bring them up, a service in which the navy brigade, of about 120 men, under the command of Lieut. Dorville, of H.M.'s frigate Fox, assisted by the Artillery, rendered their invaluable aid, under a heavy fire of guns and wall-pieces from the Great Pagoda and town, from which they suffered severely. Whilst this was going on, the enemy's artillery had got the range of our crowded position, and their skirmishers had somewhat closed upon us, and it took 500 men to keep down their fire. The practice of the heavy battery under Major Back was very effective. My intention was to have stormed the Pagoda at noon, but at a little after eleven, Capt. Latter, of the Bengal army, my interpreter, assured me he felt confident, from what he could see of the east entrance of the Pagoda, on which our battery was playing, that the entrance was clear, and that he was prepared to show the way. As our people were dropping fast where we stood, I determined on an immediate assault. The storming party was formed of the wing of H.M.'s 80th regt., under Major Lockhart, two companies of the Royal Irish, under Lieut. Hewitt, and of two companies of the 40th Bengal N.I., under Lieut. White, the whole commanded by Lieut. Colonel Coote, of the 18th Royal Irish, Capt. Latter accompanying the party to show the road. The advance to the east entrance of the Pagoda was of about 800 yards, which the troops crossed in a most steady manner, under the fire of the walls crowded with the enemy, the remainder of the force following closely. When the storming party reached the steps, a tremendous rush was made to the upper terrace, and a deafening cheer told that the Pagoda no longer belonged to the Burmese. The enemy ran in confusion from the southern and western gates, where they were met by the fire of the steamers. All the country around has fallen with the Pagoda; and I understand the once strong post of Kemmendine has been abandoned and destroyed.

In this united service there has been not only a cordial co-operation between the army and navy, but so much good-heartedness, that their joint efforts have tended to secure the rapid success of this expedition. I cannot presume to say of Rear-Admiral Austen, C.B., commanding the navy, more than to express my admiration and respect for his qualities, and to thank him for his able and never-failing assistance. Commodore Lambert, whose spirit never is at rest whilst anything is to be done, and whose heart is ever ready to accomplish what he undertakes, has my cordial thanks and warmest gratitude. I particularly wish to draw the attention of his Lordship in Council to Commander Fishbourne, of H.M.'s steamer Hermes, who, from the first fitting out of the expedition in Calcutta, to the close of these operations, has been indefatigable in assisting in the embarkation of stores and troops, and in removing difficulties and finding resources, which alone enabled the expedition to sail at the time appointed; and nothing will give me such satisfaction as his aid, were a forward movement to be made hereafter.

My most difficult task now commences, that of recommending to the protection of the Governor-General in Council a number of brave men who have had opportunities of distinguishing themselves in a service where the utmost emulation and gallant devotion were shown by all.

I beg the Governor-General's consideration of the services of Brigadier Elliot, who was conspicuous in every place where he could be useful; of Lieut. Colonel Reignolds, who commands the Bengal Brigade, in consequence of Brigadier Warren's prostration by the sun, and who has borne a very large share in these operations, including Martaban; of Lieut. Colonel Coote, of the 18th Royal Irish, who commanded the storming party, when he was severely wounded; of Lieut. Colonel Thomson, commanding the 40th Bengal N.I. in the assault; of Major Lockhart, commanding the wing of H.M.'s 80th, on the same occasion; of Major Fraser, Commanding Engineer of the Force, who not only distinguished himself most gallantly at the White House Stockade, but whose indefatigable exertions have never for a moment ceased; of Major Turton, who commanded the Artillery after Lieut. Colonel Wood's retirement, from illness, and whose labours in his department have been the cause of his suffering, I regret to say, under severe indisposition at the present moment; of Majors Reid, of the Bengal, and Montgomery, of the Madras Artillery; of Capt. Rundall, commanding the Sappers and Miners; to all of whom I am deeply indebted.

The Assistant Adjutant-General of the Force, Capt. Mayhew, was everywhere present during these three days' operations, and the assistance he has rendered me on all occasions has been very valuable. Major Allen, the assistant quarter-master-general, was severely wounded at the White House Stockade; since when, Major Boulderson, my deputy judge advocate-general, has been performing his duties, and has rendered essential assistance since the operations commenced. I beg to bring all three to the notice of Government.

The officers commanding brigades have recommended to my notice the valuable aid they have received from their respective brigade-majors, Capt. Call, of the 18th Royal Irish, and Capt. Smith, of the 13th Madras N.I.; and Major Turton has brought to my attention the indefatigable exertions of Lieut. Robertson, the deputy commissary of ordnance, in landing his guns and stores.

I beg leave to bring to my Lordship's notice the assistance I have received from my aides-de-camp, Lieut. Chads, of H.M.'s 64th regt., who was wounded at the White House Stockade, but did not leave me during the operations, and Lieut. Lambert, of the 56th Bengal N.I., who, after great exertion, was one of the victims to the sun on that day, which obliges him to return to Calcutta, and who will convey these despatches.

In conclusion, I regret that the order of the landing of the troops did not afford me an opportunity of availing myself of the services of the 9th Madras N.I., and 35th Madras N.I., in the front; but they tended greatly to give freedom to my leading column, and will from their soldierly bearing doubtless do honour to the distinguished service to which they belong, when they are brought more closely under fire.

I have, &c.

Captain H. B. Lynch, commanding the squadron of the Indian Navy in the Bay of Bengal, to Commodore Sir Henry Leeke, Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Navy.

Sir,—In continuation of my last letter of the 10th inst., I have the honour to inform you, that Rear-Admiral Austen and the whole of the squadron having joined us below the Hastings Sand, on the evening of the 10th, the squadron under my command, each vessel having two transports in tow, on the morning of the 11th (with the exception of the Zenobia, which vessel unfortunately grounded on the De Silva Shoal, and was not in company), crossed the Hastings Sand, and anchored a little below the stockades, having cast off the transports when clear over the Hastings Shoal. Almost immediately on our anchoring at 9.30 a.m. the enemy opened fire, which was returned by the Ferooze, Sesostris, and Moozuffer, the Berenice and Medusa having anchored some distance below. At 9.40 a.m. the magazine of the principal stockade, at the King's Wharf, was blown up by a shell from the squadron; at 10 a.m. H.M.'s ship Fox passed up in tow and opened fire; the enemy's fire was soon silenced; at 10.15 a.m. ceased firing, and at 30 minutes past noon a party from the Fox landed, took and burnt the Dalla stockade on the right hand of the river. At 5 p.m. weighed and stood up the river, anchoring ahead of H.M.'s ship Fox, abreast of the King's Wharf, the Admiral having previously taken and burnt the stockades, on the right or Dalla bank of the river. At 5.15 p.m. two stockades, just above us, having opened fire, were quickly silenced by our fire, and the magazine of the stockade on the upper wharf blown up, when the enemy's fire ceased for the night. At 4 a.m. next morning (12th April), landed H.M.'s 51st regiment from the Ferooze and Sesostris, and the 9th and 35th M.N.I. from the Moozuffer and Zenobia; the Zenobia having joined during the night. Having landed the troops, and obtained the Admiral's permission, proceeded up the river and anchored abreast of the upper stockade, with the Sesostris, Moozuffer, and Zenobia, and landed parties from the vessels of the squadron under the command of Capt. Campbell, and burnt the stockades without opposition, the enemy having evacuated them previously to the landing of the party. Being now abreast of the Great Pagoda, and the line of the principal stockade at the upper end of an open plain, commenced shelling, and found we could do so with effect, the shells bursting over the pagoda. Ceased firing by signal from the Admiral.

Commodore Lambert came on board and desired me to proceed to Kemmendine, where H.M.'s brig Serpent and Phlegathon steamer had attacked the stockade; weighed and stood up, Moozuffer in company, and anchored at dark, ahead of the Serpent, about three-quarters of a mile below the Kemmendine stockade. The next morning (13th April), flood-tide having made (the river being too narrow to allow the ship to swing at anchor off the stockade), dropped up in company with the Serpent, Moozuffer, and Phlegathon, abreast the stockade, which not returning our fire, landed a party from the vessels, as previously arranged, under command of the 1st lieutenant of the Serpent, and burnt the stockade, the enemy having evacuated it on the approach of the steamers. I then returned, Moozuffer in company, and rejoined the Admiral off Rangoon, anchoring in the same position as yesterday, abreast the Great Pagoda, and the squadron shelled the Pagoda during the night, by order of the Admiral; at 2 a.m. ceased firing, to allow the troops then near the stockade to advance, and I am happy to inform you that Rangoon was taken by our troops this afternoon.

I send this off too hurriedly to be able to forward any other papers from the squadron, which I am happy to state is all in good order and health.

It is probable the Moozuffer will be detached for the protection of Martaban, the Zenobia and Berenice for troops to Vizagapatam, and Sesostri to Calcutta, with despatches.

I have, &c.,

H. B. LYNN.

The following appears in the Calcutta Gazette:—

Notification.—Fort William, May 1, 1852.—The most noble the Governor-General in Council directs that the following extract of a further despatch received from Lieut. gen. Godwin, c.s., commanding the forces in Ava, Arracan, and Tenasserim provinces, dated the 22nd ult., be published for general information:—

"I sincerely regret having omitted to bring to the notice of the most noble the Governor-General in Council, in my despatch of the 18th inst., how much I am indebted to Mr. Crisp, jun., for his able assistance in conducting the army through very difficult ground, on its progress to the Great Pagoda, which he performed under the fire of the enemy with great coolness and courage.

"I rejoice greatly to say the wounded are doing very well; the skill, the labour, the attention, and the humanity of Superintending-surg. Montgomerie, and of the medical department generally under him, call for the warmest approbation of the Government.

"Major Fraser, commanding engineer, has been indefatigable in his exertions in his own department, and indeed everywhere, to get this place into some order and cleanliness. He has requested me to bring to the notice of the Governor-General in Council the gallant conduct of 2nd-Lieut. W. S. Trevor, assistant field engineer, who was the first on the ladder, and there wounded, at the White House Stockade, on the 12th; as also of Lieuts. Craster, Bengal, and Mayne, Madras engineers, who were very forward on the same occasion.

"My greatest pleasure, however, is to bring before his Lordship in Council the admirable conduct and temper of this force,—its discipline and regularity of demeanour are unexceptionable."

The Governor-General in Council has great satisfaction in acknowledging the skill and attention exhibited by Superintending-surg. Montgomerie, and he rejoices to learn that by the exertions of the medical department the wounded men are doing well. The Governor-General in Council begs to offer his thanks to the officers now brought under his notice; to Lieut. Trevor and to Lieut. Craster, Bengal engineers; to Lieut. Mayne, Madras engineers, as well as to Mr. Crisp, jun., whose service has been noticed by the Lieutenant-General.

THE CAFFRE WAR.

London Gazette, June 1.

The Gazette contains despatches, with enclosures, from Lieut. gen. Sir H. Smith.

The first, dated April 7th, announces the reception of a report from Lieut. col. Perceval, that he had completely cleared the Fish River Bush of the enemy, taken 350 cattle, and several stand of arms, killing many men. It details the pursuit of the enemy by Major-gen. Somerset through the Kat river, and the march of Sir Harry himself, on the 18th March, for the Chumie valley, on the line of the enemy's retreat into the Amatolas, when joined by the columns of Cols. Michel and Eyre, who were ordered to penetrate the Inner Amatolas, while Col. Perceval was ordered to enter the mountains on the Fish River Bush side. The enemy's villages (especially those of the rebel Hottentots) were destroyed, and the flight of the enemy and his abandonment of the Amatolas are represented as complete.

The troops having been assembled at Fort Cox, Sir Harry returned to King William's Town, while Cols. Eyre and Perceval cleared the great forest of Perie, the Buffalo forts, and Murray's Krantz, all great resorts of the enemy. Many villages were burnt, and large fields of cultivation destroyed. Col. Perceval having taken post in the Keiskamma Hoek, Col. Eyre moved his column to the Kabousie Neck, whilst Capt. Robertson, of the Royal Engineers, with a patrol, completed the work of devastation throughout the Isele Berg, a thickly-wooded ridge between King William's Town and the Kabousie, which was found entirely abandoned. From the Kabousie Neck, Col. Eyre, on the 31st March, made a rapid night march on the Kei, taking the enemy by surprise, and capturing 1,220 head of Gaika cattle. Meanwhile, Major Armstrong, with 100 cavalry, charged with effect a strong body of the enemy. After a "most able foray," Col. Eyre returned to his position in the Amatolas.

On the north side of these mountains, the troops and burghers, under Gen. Somerset, had been pursuing in every direction the enemy, who were "all in full retreat towards the Kei; but the Caffres were so completely broken and divided, that it was impossible to get up with them, except in very straggling parties; all seeming anxious to get over the Kei, and escape from the forces as quickly as possible." The captures of cattle amounted to 1,500.

A postscript to this despatch announces the result of operations by Col. Perceval in the kloofs between the Gura river and the Doorn mountains, and of Col. Napier near the Thomas river; namely, the capture of 3,000 more cattle.

The second despatch, dated 17th April, reports the success of Col. Eyre in the capture of 600 cattle belonging to the chief Awa, "one of the most formidable and most hostile of the Gaika Caffres," in the Keiskamma Hoek; with the loss, however, of Capt. Gore, of the 43rd Light Infantry, and 2 men also killed.

The first despatch, which is addressed to Earl Grey, closes with a spirited exclamation of his conduct by Sir H. Smith:—

"I have now," he says, "reported to your lordship the progress of events up to the date on which I relinquish the government of the colony of the Cape and the command of the army. My position has been as arduous, and one of as great difficulty, as ever man was placed in. The origin of this war involves a most intricate and truly complicated question, requiring a general view to be taken of antecedent subjects. It is an incontrovertible fact, that the Caffre people were most contented with the rule established in British Caffraria; while, shortly previous to the outbreak, a restlessness on the part of some of the chiefs became apparent. At this period, the treachery of the sly and ungrateful Hottentot was at work. Many of them, possessing just sufficient education to make them mischievous and capable of observing what occurred at public meetings held within the colony to resist and oppose every measure of Government, which the colonists regarded as the exercise of constitutional rights, though, in point of fact, such proceedings approached the brink of anarchy and confusion, could not discriminate between national remonstrance and open resistance. Filled with the belief that they were an 'oppressed and ill-used race,' they proceeded covertly to concoct with the Caffres those hostile schemes, which were fast approaching maturity, when my presence on the frontier, and the measures I took, most fortunately precipitated the war ere the conspiring parties were prepared and their means collected. Had it been otherwise, the outbreak would have been far more formidable even than it has been. I tried every expedient to avoid war, short of that concession which would have lowered the dignity of her Majesty's authority; yet a most peculiar feature of this outbreak was, that no specific reason was ever assigned, nor any redress sought, by the Caffre chiefs, though frequently called upon to state their cause of restlessness, if such actually existed; while the Gaika people professed attachment to the existing order of things, and were apparently most contented with a rule which protected them from tyranny. All mission stations were flourishing, and more than usually attended. During this time, the Hottentots were passive—some doubted their loyalty; this roused them, and from several places, even from the Kat river, I received public assurances of their fidelity and devotion. When the war broke out, it was regarded by me and every other functionary as a most unpopular revolt of the Gaikas to support Sandilli in error; the other chiefs openly expressing themselves to that effect. The torch of tumult, however, was soon blazing; and my means were for months most inadequate, amounting to only 1,700 British troops, the greater part of whom occupied 12 unavoidable garrisons, leaving 800 available to control 4,000 Hottentot auxiliaries of doubtful loyalty, and to meet these hordes of well-armed, athletic, and intrepid barbarians in the field. Operations had to be carried on over an extent of country larger than Great Britain and Ireland, of the greatest natural difficulty, intersected as it is by mountains and rivers, and filled with woods and rocky fastnesses. My scanty force enabled me alone to maintain, with unflinching determination, every position. I relied, most fallaciously, on the inhabitants rallying round her Majesty's troops, and they have themselves to blame for many of the horrors and miseries they have suffered at the hands of the enemy; all which I predicted, in my proclamation of the 3rd of February, 1851, must inevitably happen, unless they should turn out en masse to resist the torrent. I encountered a revolt—as I have already shown most unexpected—of nearly the whole of the eastern Hottentot population, formerly so useful against the Caffres; as also an extensive defection in a corps of that class, previously most loyal, and of the highest utility in Caffre warfare. The Hottentots had been taught or had imbibed the marked impression to which I have before alluded, that they were an 'oppressed and ill-used race;' and that Holy Writ, which they are very fond of quoting, taught them they were justified in fighting to regain the country of which they regarded themselves as deprived. Surrounded as I and Major-gen. Somerset were by these people, drawn from the eastern and western districts, one false step, or untimely exercise of power and martial law, would have plunged the whole into a chaos of revolution; her Majesty's troops must have abandoned their advanced positions, and fallen back on Graham's Town; and the T'Slambie tribes would have risen, as well as every curly-headed black, from Cape Town to Natal.

"During the prosecution of this war, 6,000 warriors, according to the Caffres' own statement, have fallen, including 80 chief men, all of whom of some distinction; 80,975 head of cattle, and innumerable goats, have been taken from the Gaikas, Tambookies, and from Kseili, the latter having suffered an additional loss by the removal of 7,000 of the enslaved Fingoe race, bringing with them 15,000 head of cattle; many arms, and nearly 900 horses, have been captured; the enemy has been driven, with great loss, from the strongholds which he so determinedly held; and, throughout the whole of their locations, the crops of the Gaikas have been utterly destroyed.

"Thus have these most formidable barbarians been visited with the punishment their murders and robberies merit, the result of that horrid war which they so wantonly commenced, fraternizing with the ungrateful Hottentot race; and which the military measures now in effectual course of operation for their expulsion from the fastnesses of the Amatolas will complete. The effect must be, as far as human foresight can predict, to establish permanently that peace and tranquillity which the colonists hope for, and to relieve the Imperial Treasury from a recurrence of an expenditure which has been indeed enormous, notwithstanding my utmost exertions, by every practicable and energetic restriction, to control it.

"I am accused in your lordship's despatch of having 'failed in showing that foresight, energy, and judgment, which my very difficult position required;' and censured for not having sooner brought this war to a termination; although in your lordship's despatch of the 8th March, 1851, the following remark appears: 'It is a great satisfaction to me, in the anxiety in which I am placed by the intelligence which has reached me, to know that I may rely with the utmost confidence, not only upon your vigour and judgment in your military operations, but also upon your enlightened humanity.' This has, however, been a war unavoidably of gradual progression, to insure the result I anticipated and have attained, and one which could not have been conducted differently. I speak with some experience in war on a large scale as well as of a desultory character. When regular armies are opposed to each other, a signal victory may decide the fate of a nation. In a war with barbarians, who fight only when it so pleases them, avoiding concentration, but who are still determined to resist, the contest is necessarily of long duration. I may, therefore, proudly derive satisfaction from the reflection which has led me to record these facts, that this war will have been brought to the required conclusion with that expedition which all the peculiar circumstances permit, while during its progress neither soldier nor troop horse has ever wanted his daily ration.

"I transfer the civil government without a single particle of business in arrears, and with a treasury without a debt; while all the civil officers have worked under me with energy and zeal. The war impending over the Orange River territory, with all its evils and horrors, has been averted; while, had its prosecution become imperative, I had collected an ample depot of commissariat supplies at Bloem Fontein. Amicable relationship has been established with the Trans-Vaal emigrant boers—the refractory native chiefs are restoring their plunder, and submitting to the conditions imposed on them—the turbulent boers within the sovereignty, when convicted of overt acts of disloyalty, have had heavy pecuniary fines indicted on them, many of which, to the amount of 1,075*l.*, have already been promptly paid, which I have caused to be placed in the Imperial chest, and to its credit—property rises considerably in value—and the revenue of the sovereignty exceeds its expenditure.

"I relinquish the command of the troops, as expressed in the general order annexed, at a period when, according to the reports I have received from officers in command, and other sources, the mass of the Gaikas have been expelled from the Amatolas; when the Caffres, as well as trans Keian, have repeatedly sued for peace, and when the war is virtually terminated; its continuance having been prosecuted to visit these turbulent savages with that retribution which justice demands."

Mr. H. Piddington, of Calcutta, has announced the discovery of a new mineral resin, to which, from its emitting a peculiar semi-animal odour, he has given the name of Hircine!

MILITARY SEMINARY, ADDISCOMBE.

A public examination was held on the 12th inst., at the East-India Company's Military Seminary, in the presence of the Chairman, Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., M.P., the deputy Chairman, Russell Ellice, Esq., several members of the Court of Directors, and the following visitors:—viz., His Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, Marquess of Normanby, Earl of Carlisle, Lord Gough, Lord Ashburton, Lord Montagu, Lord De Ros, Lord F. Fitzclarence, Lord Canning, Lord Elphinstone, Lord Mahon; Lieutenant General Rt. Hon. Vernon Smith, M.P.; Sir G. Pollock, G.C.B.; Sir G. Seavell, K.C.B.; Tickell, Bengal Engineers; Taylor, C.B.; Major General Lewis, R.A. C.B.; Colonels Sir F. Smith, R.E.; Cator, R.A.; Grant, late Adj.-Gen. Bengal Army; Powney, Bengal Artillery; Mansey; Outram, C.B.; Neil Campbell; Portlock, R.E.; Hay; Phillips; Hicks, C.B.; Majors Harvey, H.M.S.; Walpole, R.A.; Seaton, C.B.; Hunter; Captains Wilmot, R.A.; Travers, R.A.; Pennefather, late Bengal Cavalry; Boardieu, India Artillery; Hay; Ord, R.E.; McKerlie, R.E.; Keane; Lieutenants Gilly, Battine, C. R. Dicken; Revs. G. Coles, J. Harris, M. Brabazon, G. Trevor; Hon. C. S. Hardinge, M.P.; Physician General Currie; Messrs. T. Baring, M.P., H. J. Baillie, M.P., C. L. C. Bruce, M.P., R. Cobden, M.P., P. Melville, T. N. Waterfield, E. Waterfield, J. W. Kaye, G. G. Campbell, R. P. Nisbett, W. Eade, C. M. Thompson.

Some gentlemen cadets from the Royal Military Academy with an officer of the establishment.

Thirty-three gentlemen cadets were examined and selected for the several services as follows, viz.:—

For Infantry Service.—Henry George Wadham Spens, George Sutherland Pope, Charles Edward Lennox, George Archibald Bishop, Henry Pulleine Lyssaght, Douglas George Manning, Henry St. Maur Wynch, Richard George Jebb, Charles Jamieson, Thomas Dougal, Charles Frederick Middleton, Arthur Grant.

Prizes were awarded in the following order:—

First Class.

A. M. Lang—1st Mathematics, 1st Fortification, Military Surveying, 1st Hindustani, the Pollock Medal.

In presenting which, the Chairman said:—Mr. Lang: The inhabitants of Calcutta, as a token of their high sense of the great and successful military services and private worth of Lieutenant-General Sir George Pollock, and as a means of stimulating young soldiers to follow the example of that distinguished officer, caused a medal to be struck, called the "Pollock Medal," which the Court of Directors have undertaken to present to that cadet in each term who ranks highest in the scale of general merit, and who is also reported by the Lieutenant-Governor to be worthy, by his conduct and character, to receive this high mark of honorary distinction. In the present term you are the gentleman cadet who, in the concurrent opinion of the public examiner and Lieutenant-Governor, merits this honour. I have now the satisfaction of presenting to you this prize, in the presence of the distinguished officer whose name it bears (applause); and in doing so, I express my confident hope that your talents and good conduct, as evidenced here, preface a distinguished career in the public service. (Applause.)

H. F. Hancock—2nd Mathematics, 2nd Fortification, Military Drawing, Civil Drawing.

E. W. Humphry—French, 1st General Good Conduct.

In presenting which, the Chairman said:—Mr. Humphry: It affords me sincere gratification to present you this sword, as a mark of the high approbation of the Court of Directors of your exemplary conduct during the entire period of your residence at this institution, where, in the words of the Lieutenant-Governor, you have never once been subject to admonition or reproof. (Great applause.) I am persuaded that, during your career in India, you will wear it with honour to yourself, and with advantage to the public service. (Applause.)

C. S. Thomason—2nd Good Conduct.

H. E. Harington—Latin, 2nd Hindustani.

Second Class.

S. T. Trevor—Mathematics, Chemistry.

G. Newmarch—Military Surveying, French, Hindustani, 3rd General Good Conduct.

T. Beckley—Fortification.

H. D. Jackson—Civil Drawing.

J. Beatty—Military Drawing.

W. R. D. Sewell—Latin.

Third Class.

M. Elliot—4th General Good Conduct.

Mathematics.

The mathematical examination, which was conducted, according to custom, by Sir C. Pasley, displayed the proficiency of the students in a very favourable manner, and reflected great credit upon Professor Cape.

Fortification Department.

After dinner, the cadets were marched, as usual, to the Coldstream, across which a barrel bridge was formed; over this the cadets marched two deep, and a field gun limbered up was passed.

A charge of 20lbs. of powder lowered into the water, in the presence of the spectators, was fired by the voltaic battery, and produced an interesting effect, a jet of water being thrown up higher than the tallest of the tall trees that fringe the pond.

From the Coldstream the Chairman and visitors proceeded to the Sand-modelling Hall, the floor of which was covered over with a variety of beautifully executed models. The first was explained by Cadet Thomason. It represented a sunken battery for a gun, a howitzer, and a mortar, on the scale of two inches to a foot, and ordnance in brass suited to the scale tested on their platforms. The second was a model of the fortifications of Cabul, called the Balar Hissar, on the scale of one-eighth of an inch to a foot. This was explained by Cadet Hancock. The third was a front of the new citadel of Ghent, on the scale of a quarter of an inch to a foot, explained by Cadet Falconnet. The fourth was a front of the modern system (same scale), explained by Cadets Humphry and Holberton. The fifth consisted of more than two fronts of an arrangement of works proposed by the Professor of Fortification at Addiscombe, on the same scale, which was well explained by Cadet Lang, and which was much and deservedly admired.

Military Drawings, executed by the Gentlemen Cadets of the First Class.

	Subjects.
Mr. Hancock (first prize)	Aden.
Mr. Thomason
Mr. Salwey	Hong Kong.
Mr. Lang
Mr. Falconnet	Mequinenza.
Mr. M'Grigor
Mr. Manning	Newport.
Mr. Holberton	Cabul.
Mr. Monckton	Hong Kong.
Mr. Gordon	Hill Fort of Singurb.
Mr. Griffiths
Mr. Humphry	Cabul.
Mr. Smith	Tarragona.
Mr. S. Trevor	Hill Fort of Kurnalla.
Mr. Hunter	Ditto Wassota.
Mr. Cumberland

Second Class.

Mr. Beatty (2nd class)	Drawings for models.
Mr. S. Trevor
Mr. Watts
Mr. Jackson
Mr. Judge
Mr. Greig
Mr. Beckley

And several minor but very promising subjects in the three junior classes.

Civil Drawings.—First Class.

Mr. A. Lang	Landscape.
Mr. H. Hancock	Ditto (1st prize).
Mr. E. Humphry	Ditto.
Mr. J. Monckton	Ditto.
Mr. C. Thomason	Ditto.
Mr. G. Falconnet	Shipping and various.
Mr. J. Campbell	Landscape.
Mr. J. Griffith	Various.
Mr. J. Bryce	Ditto.
Mr. T. Holberton	Landscape.
Mr. H. Harrington	Ditto.
Mr. R. Smith	Various.
Mr. O. Sturges	Ditto.
Mr. J. Pearson	Landscape.

Mr. E. Salwey	Various.
Mr. W. Cumberland	Ditto.
Mr. F. Trevor	Ditto.
Mr. C. Hunter	Ditto.
Mr. D. M'Grigor	Ditto.
Mr. B. Gordon	Landscape.
Mr. D. Manning	Heads, in chalk.
Mr. A. Grant	Figures, in colour.
Mr. T. Dougal	Heads, in chalk.

(All exceedingly good.)

Second Class.

Mr. S. Trevor	Various.
Mr. T. Beckley	Ditto.
Mr. H. Jackson	Ditto (second prize).
Mr. J. Greig	Landscape.
Mr. J. Beatty	Ditto.
Mr. W. Sewell	Ditto.
Mr. J. Watts	Shipping.
Mr. F. Fitzroy	Various.
Mr. G. Traill	Ditto.
Mr. M. Pasley	Figures (pen and ink).
Mr. D. Gordon	Various.
Mr. C. Barnes	Ditto.
Mr. F. Cunliffe	Ditto.
Mr. W. Woodward	Landscape.
Mr. J. Marshall	Ditto.
Mr. S. Judge	Ditto.
Mr. C. La Touche	Ditto.

In the junior classes there were several subjects which entitled their authors to much commendation.

After the reports of the public examiner and the Lieutenant-Governor had been read by Mr. Clarke, of the Cadet-office, and the distribution of the prizes,

The Chairman (Sir James Hogg) rose, and addressed the cadets as follows:—Gentlemen—It affords me great pleasure to express, on behalf of the Court of Directors, our entire satisfaction with the result of this day's proceedings. (Applause.) They show most satisfactorily that the ample means placed at your command in the several branches of study have been employed zealously and effectually, and that in your persons the important objects of this excellent institution have been fully attained. You have all entered these walls within the last two years, after having proved before examiners appointed for the purpose that, as the sons of English gentlemen, your education had been duly attended to, according to your age. Since your admission many of you, and those in particular of the first class, have become proficient in some of the higher branches of mathematics. You have studied with good effect the theory and practice of fortification, of military surveying, and military plan drawing. You have made considerable progress in acquiring an elementary knowledge, at least of Hindustani, the vernacular language of the native army of India, and you have also improved your acquaintance with French, and with the Latin classics. You have, I trust, cultivated those habits of strict obedience, of regularity, and of discipline, which will be of incalculable advantage to you in your future career; and, above all, you have I know been carefully instructed in the doctrines and principles of our holy religion. In attaining these advantages you have had the inestimable benefit of the superintendence of the distinguished officers and professors whose services the East India Company have been fortunate enough to secure; and I rejoice to avail myself of this opportunity of expressing the cordial thanks of the Court of Directors to the public examiner, Sir Charles Pasley, the lieutenant-governor, Col. Abbott, and to all the professors and other officers in the establishment, for the great services they have thus rendered. (Applause.) You, gentlemen cadets of the first class, whose honourable and successful exertions have been rewarded by commissions in the corps of Engineers, will now proceed to the royal establishment at Chatham, to carry on and complete your knowledge of military engineering. At Chatham you will be placed under the orders of that distinguished officer Col. Harry Jones, whose valuable services I am happy to acknowledge. Under his able direction you will, in addition to the practice of field duties, of trigonometrical surveying, and practical astronomy, have ample opportunity of gaining sound knowledge in civil engineering, including all the processes for the construction, management, and working of railways, engine-making, the construction of canals and modes of irrigation; and thus you will, I trust, be well-fitted instruments to aid the Government of India in carrying out our plans for the improvement of the vast territories committed to our charge. You, gentlemen, who have now been selected for commissions in the Artillery and Infantry, will, after a short stay with your friends, proceed to your respective destinations, and will thus, within a few months, enter upon the active duties of your profession. Need I anxiously press upon you, my young friends, not only to continue and to perfect the studies which you have pursued here, but to enter upon fresh branches of study for your advancement in military and general knowledge. Your zeal for the service, your own appreciation of the important duties which may devolve upon you, will, I am persuaded, lead you onward in the course of improvement. Nor can you tell how soon your energies may be taxed to the uttermost. The latest despatches from India tell us of important military operations, in which many officers were engaged who left the seminary but a short time since. One promising young officer, Lieutenant Donaldson, of the Engineers, who attained distinction in this hall, and who embarked for India little more than a year ago, has, I grieve to say, fallen; but he fell gloriously, in the hour of victory, when mounting the breach at the storming of Rangoon. (Hear, hear.) Others who were here still more recently are employed in the same service, so that, young as you are, you may soon be called upon to serve your country in the field. Avail yourselves then I beseech you, of every opportunity of improvement by study and observation. The more versed you are in professional and general knowledge the more useful you will be to the Government you serve, and the more likely to rise to honour and distinction. Let me especially notice the importance of making yourselves familiar with the language of the soldiers who will be placed under your command. You have here acquired only the rudiments of the language; hasten to perfect your knowledge of it, that when you join your regiments you may find yourselves able to comprehend the wants and wishes of the Sepoys, to gain their confidence in your ability to lead them in times of difficulty; and what is of special importance, that you may be able to understand and respect their prejudices. You will thus attach them to your person by ties which, on their part, are never broken, and you will find that the sepoy, well cared for by his officers, is the most faithful and devoted of soldiers. (Hear.) True it is that they are of a different race, of a different complexion, and that their habits and opinions differ widely from ours. But in the great elements that constitute man they are the same. They will be alienated by ill treatment or neglect; they will be won by justice and kindness. I hope I need not tell you that the accomplished soldier is not the reckless, heedless, improvident character, which formerly he was sometimes represented to be. His profession imposes on him a degree of restraint greater than is required from any other. From no man is required such perfect command of temper. Demanding absolute subordination from others, he must be prepared to set the example of it in his own person. That which he looks for in those under him, he must yield to those above him. His obedience must not be sullen and dogged, but he as cheerful as it is implicit. The strength of an army lies not in its numbers, but in its efficiency; and the efficiency of an army, however excellent its materials, will always depend upon the character and competence of its officers. The fate of war cannot now be determined by dauntless courage and personal prowess. The race is not now to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. Science and skill are the means by which victory must be mainly achieved, and in them you must labour to be well versed, if you desire to advance the glory of your country or your own expectation. While I thus exhort you to render yourselves accomplished and skilled in the profession of arms, let me add my anxious wish and earnest prayer that the peace of India may not again be disturbed, and that the attention of the Government and the finances of the country may be directed to the development of its internal resources, and the amelioration of the physical and moral condition of its countless inhabitants. The duties of designing and executing public works are entrusted to the military servants of the State; but not to the idle and incompetent—incompetent, because they have been idle. It is not to such that these great works are entrusted. Here is a noble field open to you, and it remains with yourselves to decide whether or not you will claim a place in it. Have you a generous desire to confer good on your fellow-men? Then prepare yourselves to become the instruments for giving unfailling fertility to fields where occasional famine has hitherto spread desolation, and for affording assistance in the construction of the railways and various public works now in progress. Sixty years ago—a period which is as nothing in the history of a nation—and the south of India recognised not our sway, while our possessions elsewhere nearly limited to the Lower Provinces of Bengal. The British rule in India does not yet double in its duration the reign of the renowned Akbar. We may not be able to emulate our Mogul predecessors in the magnitude and grandeur of their public buildings, their palaces and pavilions, their temples and their tombs; but I hope that continued peace and tranquillity will enable the Government to devote their attention and their resources to public works calculated to increase the comforts and prosperity of the people at large. (Loud applause.) One caution affecting your personal conduct, hackneyed though it be, I cannot persuade myself to withhold—do not get into debt. (Loud cries of "hear, hear.") There is no country, no service, in which pecuniary embarrassment is so fatal to a man's comfort and advancement as India. In the civil branch, indeed, a servant in debt is regarded as unfit for important office; and remember that there are many civil situations, especially in the political line, for which military men are selected. If you wish to be happy yourselves, and to communicate happiness to your parents and friends at home, and if you are ambitious of distinction, maintain your independence, and guard against the very first approach of pecuniary difficulty. Let your rule be never to incur debt of any kind. The first breach of this rule may involve you in embarrassment not foreseen, and from the consequences of which there is no escape. To those of you who return to this seminary after the ensuing recess, I would only say persevere in those habits of study and discipline which have hitherto marked your residence here. I shall then hope, when I meet you again at the next public examination, to receive the same favourable testimony from your excellent Lieutenant-Governor as he has given on the present occasion. I may add, for your encouragement, that the demands for officers of engineers and the artillery are such, as to induce a belief that all who fully attain to the standards of these branches respectively, will receive commissions in them. (Great applause.) We are this day honoured with the presence of many distinguished visitors. I may especially allude to the presence of many distinguished members of the committee now sitting upon Indian affairs, and who are desirous of availing themselves of every means of becoming acquainted with the subjects upon which it will be their duty to report. I may also notice the presence of the noble lord (Lord F. Fitzclarence), who is about to proceed to the command of our troops at Bombay, and who kindly expressed his desire to see the working of an institution which has sent forth to the service of their country so many distinguished men. (Applause.) I am also happy and truly gratified to see here the noble lord to whose lot it fell, during his late brilliant career in India and China, to lead the British armies against the enemy in no less than fifteen battles, with what uniform success I need not tell you. (Great applause.) In India you will see numerous battalions whose colours bear the names of Moodkee, Sobraon, Ferozeshah, Chillianwallah, Goozerat, Gwalior, Maharajpore, China. When you witness these honourable distinctions you will recollect that Lord Gough, the hero of these battles, favoured you by being present when you passed for your commissions. (Applause.) To all of you, those who are finally leaving the institution as well as those who will return to it, let me say, act continually and consistently upon Christian principles, and maintain strict attention to your religious duties. The fear of God is the beginning of wisdom. Act as in His sight, and for His glory, and rest assured that Almighty Providence will preserve you amidst dangers, guide you in difficulties, and direct you in the paths of righteousness and peace. (Great applause.)

After the close of the examination the directors entertained their distinguished visitors to a splendid collation in the hall, at the close of which the party returned to town.

LAW.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, MAY 31.

Ex parte General Sir Charles Napier.—Mr. Serjeant Byles moved for a rule calling upon the East-India Company to show cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding them to pay to General Sir Charles Napier the sum of Rs. 20,198 (2,019*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*).

It appeared from his statement that, in the year 1843, Sir C. Napier was appointed Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's and the East-India Company's forces in Scinde, and that in the campaign which terminated in the annexation of the territory of Scinde to the British dominions, a large booty was taken, amounting to between Rs. 4,000,000 and Rs. 5,000,000. The Crown, by a royal warrant dated 11th November, 1845, granted that sum to the East-India Company, in trust, to be distributed among the officers and soldiers who served in the campaign. Sir C. Napier returned to England before the distribution of the money took place; but he again returned to India in 1849. At that time he held four different appointments; 1, that of Commander-in-Chief of the Queen's troops in India; 2, that of Commander-in-Chief of the Company's troops in India; 3, the local rank of general in India, to which no pay was attached; 4, that of Extraordinary Member of Council, to which office, when held by the Commander-in-Chief, no pay was attached. The only pay, therefore, to which he was entitled was that attached to the office of Commander-in-Chief, amounting to Rs. 14,300 a month. It was provided by the Act 3rd and 4th Vict. c. 37, that, when the Queen's troops went to India, the pay of the officers and soldiers generally should be paid by the Company. Sir C. Napier arrived in India in May, 1849. The prize-money in question was distributed in two dividends. The first was paid in 1849, and no question arose respecting that payment. In July, 1849, the Indian Government ordered the payment of a second dividend, which was paid to the officers and soldiers who had served in Scinde. But in April, 1850, an order was issued by the Indian Government, stating that certain charges debitable to the Scinde prize money had not been deducted from the second dividend, and ordering the amount of those charges to be deducted from the pay of the officers. In May, 1850, the pay of all the officers was stopped, and the pay for a large portion of the month of June was also stopped. Sir C. Napier addressed a protest to the Indian Government against this deduction, the consequence of which was, that the deductions which had been made from his salary were paid to him in July, 1850; but in October and November the Company deducted the same amounts from Sir C. Napier's salary as Commander-in-Chief for those months. The amount so deducted amounted to Rs. 20,198. In the protest presented by Sir C. Napier to the Indian Government in May, 1850, he objected to the deductions on the following grounds:—

“1. That her Majesty had given him a certain share of the Scinde prize-money, and the Governor-General in Council could not legally deduct any portion from that sum without a detailed and specific account being given of such deductions. 2. That the Governor-General in Council published in his orders that certain sums, with certain deductions, were to be paid to the captors of the prize booty according to her Majesty's warrant; that the said sums were paid accordingly, and were received by the parties, in perfect confidence in the correctness of the calculations made by the Government. 3. That the present unjust surcharge created great astonishment, and showed that no confidence could be placed in any calculations of the Indian Government. 4. Protesting against the pay of the officers being retrenched upon the vague assertion that ‘certain charges’ had been omitted five years before, and calling upon the Indian Government to state what those charges were, and by whose neglect they had been omitted, before making such demands. 5. That a number of the Queen's officers were in Europe, and some of the Company's officers had since died, and all of these would of course refuse to refund a single farthing; they were beyond this arbitrary exercise of power by the Indian Government, and therefore a portion only of the captors suffered by these ‘certain charges’ brought forward seven years after the booty was taken. 6. The retrenchment of pay was as unjust in detail as it was in principle and the concealment of items; it made a portion pay for the whole; it could not take from the two European regiments gone to England, and it did not venture to commit such an act of injustice on the sepoys; therefore the officers in the power of the Government were to pay for the whole, because some Government subordinates made a mistake. 7. That such conduct deprived the officers of all security for prize-money or pay; and saying that certain unknown omissions were made by certain unknown accountants, and therefore the Government retrenched their pay, showed a strange contrast with the exact details and vouchers so imperiously and so properly exacted from individuals in their accounts with the Indian Government.”

The Court of Directors in England overruled this protest, and ordered the pay to be deducted: this was done accordingly. In 1851 Sir C. Napier arrived in England, and made an application to the Company on the subject, intimating that he had a legal right, and if his claim was not attended to he should take the opinion of a court of law. The Company refused to accede to the claim, and therefore the present application was made. Sir C. Napier was induced to make this application, not so much on his own account, as for the sake of those other officers who were not in a position to maintain their rights. In arguing this case it would be necessary to consider three questions: 1. Whether the Company had any right to recover back any portion of this prize-money after it had been distributed and paid over? 2. If the Company had the right, could they stop it out of the officers' pay? 3. If they could not, was there any other remedy for recovery, except by mandamus, and would that writ lie?

Lord Campbell intimated that the main question was whether the writ would lie.

Mr. Serjeant Byles said, the 3rd and 4th Vict. c. 37, sec. 35, precluded the Company from making any deductions from the pay of the officers. It enacted, “That no paymaster or other person shall receive any fees or make any deductions whatsoever out of the pay or allowances of any officer or soldier (without his consent be obtained thereto), other than the usual deduction, or such necessary deduction as shall from time to time be required to be made, according to the regulations of the service.” The last clause referred to the case where soldiers' accoutrements were deficient, and allowed small deductions to be made from time to time on that account; with that exception, it was enacted, “that every paymaster or other officer having received any officer's or soldier's pay and allowances, who shall unlawfully detain for the space of one month the same, or refuse to pay the same when it shall become due, according to the several rates established by the regulations of the service, shall upon proof thereof before a court-martial be discharged from his employment, and shall forfeit Rs. 800, and be liable to such other punishment as shall by the court-martial be awarded,” &c. Sir C. Napier was the Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's and the Company's forces in India, and he (Mr. Serjeant Byles) contended that his pay in such capacity was pay within the meaning of the Act. If an action would lie against the Company for the recovery of the pay he admitted he could not ask for the interference of this Court; but it had been decided in the case of “Gibson v. the East-India Company” that an action would not lie. If an action would lie, it must be upon contract; but the Company, being a corporation, could not contract except under its common seal. The demand here was for pay which the Company were ordered by the Act to pay. It was a contract of imperfect obligation.

Lord Campbell.—How could this Court compel the performance of a duty of imperfect obligation?

Mr. Serjeant Byles said the 120th section of 33rd Geo. III. c. 52, in effect provided that the expenses of the troops in India should be paid by the Company.

Lord Campbell.—Do you say that any officer may come to this Court for a mandamus to the Company for his pay?

Mr. Serjeant Byles said that was his contention upon the Act.

Mr. Justice Coleridge observed that the Company could not be compelled to pay their own troops.

Mr. Serjeant Byles admitted that that would be an answer to that part of his case. As to the other, the Act said, “You shall pay my troops, and that without any deductions.” This, he contended, entitled Sir C. Napier to the interference of this Court in a case where the Company refused to discharge a duty imposed upon them by the Act.

Lord Campbell said the Court would take time to consider their decision.

Lord Campbell, in delivering the judgment of the Court, said the question was whether, if the pay had been retained by the Company without any reason assigned, this Court had jurisdiction to order the arrears of pay to be paid; for, if not, the Court would not be entitled to question whether the East-India Company was justified in making the deduction. The applicant must make out a legal obligation on the Company to pay the sum he now demanded, and that he had no remedy to recover it by an action at law. The latter point became material only when the former was established. It was incumbent on the applicant to show that there was an obligation resting upon the Company, which the law would enforce, to pay him, as Commander of the Queen's forces, or as Commander of the forces of the Company. In the attempt to prove that he had entirely failed. The only legal substratum for a mandamus must be either the common law, an Act of Parliament, or a contract. There was not such obligation at common law, or by contract. The Court must, therefore, see whether there was any enactment of the Legislature to support the application, which was grounded on certain statutes relating to the East-India Company. The Court had examined those statutes. The first was the 33rd Geo. III. c. 52, for continuing in the East-India Company the possession of the British possessions in India. The 127th section enacted that all sums issued by the Government for the pay of her Majesty's forces in India should be repaid by the East-India Company. That was simply an arrangement between the Company and the Government, and imposed no obligation on the Company as to the pay of the officers. The next was the 53rd Geo. III. c. 155, by which the Charter of the East-India Company was renewed. The 55th section enacted that the revenues of the Company should be applied, in the first place, in maintaining the forces in India; but it did not allocate any part of those revenues in particular to the Commander of the Forces. Then came the 4th Geo. IV. c. 81, the Mutiny Act, which by the 42nd and 43rd sections provided that no paymaster should receive any fees, or make any deductions out of the pay of the officers or soldiers, other than the usual deductions, under the penalty of being tried by a court-martial, and being dismissed from his employment, and fined 800 sicca rupees. By that Act no amount of pay was assigned to the Commander-in-Chief, and no directions were given for payment to him. The Court was then referred to the 3rd and 4th Will. IV., c. 85, under which India was now governed. The 79th section provided that the return to Europe of a Commander-in-Chief should be deemed in law to be a resignation of his office, and that his salary should cease from the day of his departure or resignation. That section supposed that the Commander-in-Chief was entitled to recover some pay, but it was entirely silent as to the amount and when it was to be paid. Nor was the applicant's case at all advanced by the next statutes, the 7th Will. IV. and 1st Vict. c. 47, which, in reference to the prohibition contained in the previous statute as to the non-payment of officers' salaries in their absence, provided that that provision should not extend to the case of absence by reason of sickness, and empowered the Court of Directors, subject to the control of the Commissioners for the Affairs of India, to direct the refunding by any officer or servant of the Company of the whole or any part of the salary or allowances which he might have received. That power the Directors were entitled to exercise without giving any reason for its exercise. That Act gave no right to any officer to demand any salary of the Company. The chief reliance had been placed on the 3rd and 4th Vict. c. 37, s. 35, which was said to contain a statutory recognition of the applicant's right to demand his pay from the Company without deduction. That statute was, however, only a new edition of the 4th Geo. IV. c. 81, which, by the 42nd and 43rd sections, provided against paymasters unlawfully withholding the pay of the officers and soldiers. Upon a review of all these statutes, the Court had come to the conclusion that the statutory obligation on the Company to pay the salary claimed had been in no degree established. General Napier said his salary was payable by the Company, and he complained that his pay while he remained in India had been withheld. His monthly salary amounted, he said, to Rs. 14,300, or 1,430*l.* sterling, which he said was payable monthly, according to the usual practice, and he asked this Court to interfere on his behalf to compel the Company to pay him that salary. It might be an honourable, but it was not a legal, obligation for the Company to make that payment. His Lordship then referred to the authorities which had been cited in support of the application. In the case of "Gibson v. the East-India Company" it had been decided that an action would not lie against the Company by the assignees of a retired officer to recover his pension. The Court of Common Pleas in that case said that the grant of a pension ranged under that class of obligations which were described by jurists as "imperfect obligations," wanting the vinculum juris, though binding in moral equity and justice; that it was a grant which the East-India Company was bound in foro consuetudinis to make good, but of which the performance was to be sought by petition, memorial, or remonstrance, not by an action in a court of law. Those observations were as applicable to the full salary of the Commander-in-Chief as to the half-pay of an officer, and not only where the right was sought to be enforced by an action, but where, as in this case, it was sought to be enforced by a writ of mandamus. The case of "the King v. the East-India Company" (4 B. and Ad., 530) was then relied on; but that was a case in which there was a duty distinctly imposed on the Company by Act of Parliament to transmit a despatch to India as altered by the India Board. Reliance was then placed on "Mr. Carmichael Smyth's case," in which this Court had granted a mandamus to the Lords of the Treasury to compel the payment of a sum of money for arrears of pension. The Court, in that case, granted the writ upon the ground that the Lords of the Treasury had received the money and had appropriated it to his use. The last case cited was that of "the Queen Dowager's annuity;" but there the question related to a right which was fixed and settled by Act of Parliament, but which there was no power to enforce by action, and which, the Court was of opinion, could only be enforced, if at all, by mandamus. On a full examination of all the statutes and cases, the Court had come to the conclusion that the distinguished officer who now sought a remedy by mandamus had mistaken his course, and that the rule could not be granted.

Rule refused.

FEROZPORE CHURCH.—The erection of the monumental church of Saint Andrew's, at Ferozpoor, was undertaken by subscription, as a thank-offering for our successes in the Punjab, and in order to remedy the want of a place for divine worship. It was a part of the plan that a general monument should be placed in the interior to the memory of all who fell in that campaign, and that tablets should be allowed to be put up, at individual expense, to the memory of officers and men whose relations or friends desired to offer that tribute of respect to them. The building is so near completion, that divine service was performed in it on the 7th March; but some portions, including the tower and spire, remain to be completed, and the funds are insufficient. The committee have made an appeal to the public for assistance, to enable them to carry out the original design of this commendable undertaking. Messrs. Grindlay have consented to receive subscriptions in England.

STEAM COMMUNICATION BETWEEN LIVERPOOL AND AUSTRALIA.—To meet the extraordinary demand for conveyance to our Australian colonies, an enterprising firm of Liverpool, Messrs. Vianna, Jones, and Chapple, have announced the formation of a line of screw steamers. Their fleet will consist of four vessels, viz. the Geelong, of 1,200 tons; the Frankfort, of 700 tons; the Osmanki, of 500 tons; and the Rattler, of 500. The Osmanki will be despatched on the 1st of August next for Port Phillip and Sydney, calling at Madeira and the Cape of Good Hope.

BILLS ON INDIA.—The amount received at the Treasury, East-India House, for bills on India from the 8th to 23rd May, was 144,811*l.*, and from 24th May to 7th June it has been 26,178*l.*, making the total for the month 170,989*l.*

EDUCATION IN INDIA.—From a Parliamentary paper recently printed, it appears that in the season of 1850 there were 23,163 students in the several schools and other establishments for education maintained at the public expense in the several presidencies of British India. An extract is given from a despatch to the Government of Fort St. George on "Bible Classes." The Council of Education proposed that the Bible should be included in the studies of the English classes, attendance on the Bible class being left optional. As the provincial schools and the Madras University were for the especial instruction of Hindoos and Mahomedans in the English language and the science of Europe, it was considered not expedient nor prudent in any way to interfere with the religious feelings and opinions of the people. All such tendency had been carefully avoided at both the other presidencies, where native education had been successfully prosecuted.

TRADE WITH CHINA.—From a return to the House of Commons just issued, it is shown that last year 103 British ships entered Inwards, and 67 cleared outwards, trading between the United Kingdom and China.

The ship Duke of Argyle has been engaged for the conveyance of troops and stores to Kurrachee.

East-India House, 9th June, 1852.

THE COURT of DIRECTORS of the EAST-INDIA COMPANY do hereby give notice,

That the Finance and Home Committee will be ready, on or before Wednesday, the 23rd instant, to receive proposals in writing, sealed up, from such persons as may be willing to supply the Company with

BRITISH IRON;

And that the conditions of the said contract may be had on application at the Secretary's office, where the proposals are to be left, any time before 11 o'clock in the forenoon of the said 23rd day of June, 1852, after which hour no Tender will be received.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

NEWSPAPER for AUSTRALIA, VAN DIEMEN'S LAND, and NEW ZEALAND.

The "HOME NEWS," many years established for transmission to India, with the latest news up to the departure of each Mail, will in future issue a special Edition for transmission by the new Mail steamers (the first of which leaves England on the 3rd of June) to Australia, Van Diemen's Land, and New Zealand. It will contain full and accurate reports of the Political and Domestic News of Europe and America, collected up to the hour of the departure of each Mail, embracing, in addition to the usual details of a comprehensive Newspaper, every item of intelligence directly affecting the material and social interests of the Colonies in their relations with the mother country; together with the latest Market Reports of London and Liverpool, Wool, Shares, Gold Mining Companies, Shipping Lists, &c.

The "HOME NEWS" is published in London, on the day of the despatch of each Mail, and Copies will be regularly forwarded upon application, by letter or otherwise, to the Publisher. It is unnecessary to point out the advantages of the "HOME NEWS" as a medium of Advertisements for all Vessels, Employments, Productions, Manufactures, and Agencies of every description, having reference to these distant markets.

Price, 9d. for a single Number.

UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,
Established in 1834.—Empowered by Special Act of Parliament.
1, KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON.
For the Assurance of Lives at Home and Abroad, including Gentlemen engaged in the Military and Naval Services.

DIRECTORS.
SIR HENRY WILLOCK, K.L.S., Chairman.
JOHN STEWART, Esq., Deputy Chairman.
Lieut.-Gen. Sir Richard Armstrong, C.B., K.C.T., and S.
John Bagshaw, Esq., M.P.

SOLICITOR.—William Henry Cotterill, Esq.
PHYSICIAN.—George Burrows, M.D., F.R.S., 18, Cavendish Square.
ACTUARY.—David Jones, Esq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 12th of May, 1852, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20		£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30	On or before	1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40	12th of May,	1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
50	1847.	1,000	42 15 0	23 10 3
60		1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assureds to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.

I.
NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.
This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5. 5s. in boards.
SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI AND ENGLISH DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH AND HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.
. To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages.
The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fittest corresponding translations into Hindustani.
REVIEW IN "TIMES," Jan. 3.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." * * * "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 53,000 words and phrases explained, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." * * * "In India, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

II.
5th Edition, 1 vol. royal 8vo. price 14s.
A GRAMMAR OF THE HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE.
To which is added, a short Grammar of the Dakhni.

III.
1 vol. royal 8vo. price £1. 10s.
AN INTRODUCTION TO THE HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE. Designed especially for those who have no instructor.

IV.
In 2 vols. 4to. price £1. 10s.

PERSPIRATION OF the FEET, and TENDER FEET.

All persons suffering from the above, are strongly recommended to use the late Dr. JAMES JOHNSTON'S ORTHOPEDIC MEDICATED FLUID, which hardens the Feet, removing all unpleasant smell after four or five applications. It does not check natural perspiration, can be easily applied, and acts with perfect comfort. The Medicated Fluid is a fine refrigerator, and imparts an agreeable firmness and texture to the hands; it is therefore suitable for rowers, yachtsmen, &c.

Sold by the Proprietors and Manufacturers, WRIGHT and LAURENCE, 47, Hatton Garden, Holborn, and wholesale by all the principal houses; also retail by the following Chemists:—Mr. BROOKS, 188, Fleet Street; Mr. G. WATTS, 17, Strand, near Charing Cross; Mr. W. DELATOURCH, 147, Oxford Street; Mr. G. BILTON, Sun Fire and Life Offices, 69, Three Colt Street, Limehouse; Mr. J. GRIFFITHS, Pleasant Place, King's Cross; Mr. T. BLACKLEY, 114, High Holborn; and by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors in the United Kingdom.—In Bottles at 1s. 1d. and 2s. 9d. each.

"May 10th, 1852.

"Having been made acquainted with the component parts of Messrs. Wright and Laurence's Lotion for Perspiration of the Feet, &c., I can with confidence certify as to its usefulness, and safety, as regards the application, so far that a child may drink it.—C. THOMSON, Surgeon and Apothecary, 8, Bayne's Row, Cold Bath Square, London."

Numerous Testimonials may be seen at the Depot, Hatton Garden.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS A MOST EFFECTUAL

CURE FOR DROPSY.—Extract of a letter from Edward Ropley, Esq., of the Indian Walk Estate, Tobago, dated April 8, 1852:—"To Professor Holloway, Sir,—I deem it a duty I owe to you and the public at large to inform you of a most miraculous recovery from that dreadful disease, dropsy, and which, under God, was effected by the use of your Pills. I was tapped five times in the course of eight months, and skilfully treated by two medical practitioners. Notwithstanding which, I got worse, and my strength failed so much as to leave no hopes of recovery. I then tried your Pills, which in six months perfectly cured me."

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

THE LAWRENCE ASYLUM.—VIEWS in the HIMALAYAS, made during a Six Years' Residence at Simla, Published for the benefit of the Lawrence Asylum.

Drawn by Mrs. W. L. L. SCOTT.

Price 2s. 4s. morocco. The work is now ready.

The object of this work is to aid in providing funds for the Lawrence Asylum, for the purpose of building a chapel and sufficiently large school-rooms to admit of 400 children being provided for and educated. This Institution, founded by Lieut.-Col. Sir Henry Lawrence, provides entirely for the Orphan Children of Soldiers serving or having served in India.

The current income has hitherto just been adequate to the expenses of the present number of children; the only permanent income is derived from the interest of £10,000, the gift of Maharajah Goolab Sing, and a subscription of £240 a year from the Government of India.

THE INDIAN CURRY SAUCE, of superior quality, in antique bottles.—This novel and piquant Sauce is peculiarly adapted for Steaks, Chops, Game, Fish, Cold Meats, Soups, &c. The addition of a little of this Sauce, in cases where a curry cannot be procured, will prove a valuable accompaniment to connoisseurs.

All Indian Condiments, Mangoes, Sauces, &c., from Calcutta direct.

PAYNE and Co., Importers and Manufacturers, 324 and 326, Regent Street, London.—May be had of Messrs. DUNCAN MACLEAN and SONS, Princes Street, Edinburgh; BAXTER and SONS, Buchanan Street, Glasgow; or through any Italian Warehouse in the kingdom.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE

MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of CROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

116, Jermyn Street, St. James's, London.

MESSRS. MANTON and Co., of Calcutta, GUN MAKERS, having purchased the Good-will, stock of Guns, Pistols, &c., belonging to that celebrated maker, Mr. SAMUEL NOCK, of the Regent Circus, Piccadilly, and the license to use that name, they respectfully inform their patrons that they have taken premises at 116, Jermyn Street, St. James's, a few doors from Regent Street, Waterloo Place, where the business will be carried on under the same superintendence and workmen as were employed by the late Mr. Nock. They invite the attention of sportsmen and gentlemen proceeding to India to their superior assortment of Double Guns, Rifles, and Pistols, which are of first-rate workmanship, and they pledge themselves that every article manufactured by them shall be in that superior style of excellence for which Mr. Nock was so justly celebrated.

The above business will be carried on in connection with the house in Calcutta; and, to meet the exigencies of the times, the prices of all their goods will be such as not to deter any young gentlemen from suiting themselves with every article in the sporting line requisite for their equipment to India.

MANTON and Co.'s superior H.E.I. Company's Cavalry, Infantry, and Navy Swords, continue to be manufactured, and can be had always at the London establishment.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC

STOCKING, KNEE-CAPS, ANKLETS, &c., which have been tested in the hottest climates, and proved invaluable in all cases where support is necessary. They are drawn on with ease, as an ordinary stocking, and perfectly porous. They produce a pressure equal and permanent in every part, and not a muscle of the limb is impeded in its free and healthy action. They are now recommended by every London practitioner of medicine, and may be ordered through Messrs. JOHN WOLFE and Co., Bombay (of whom prospectuses may be obtained); Messrs. GRINDLAY and Co.; and 5, Vere Street, London.

DECAYED TEETH and TOOTH-ACHE.—Price 2s. 6d.

—Patronized by Her Majesty and H.R.H. Prince Albert. Mr. HOWARD'S WHITE SUCCEDANEUM for stopping decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and immediately HARDENS INTO A WHITE ENAMEL; in will remain in the tooth many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, and arresting the further progress of decay, and is far superior to anything ever before used, as it will NEVER BECOME DISCOLOURED in the tooth. All persons use it themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Prepared only by Mr. Howard, Surgeon-Dentist, 17, George Street, Hanover Square, who will send it into the country free by post. Sold by Savory, 220, Regent Street; Sanger, 150, and Hannay, 63, Oxford Street; Butler, 4, Chancery; Johnston, 63, Cornhill; and all medicine vendors in the kingdom. Price 2s. 6d. Mr. Howard continues to supply the loss of teeth on his NEW SYSTEM OF SALT-ADHESION, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. 17, George Street, Hanover Square. At home from 10 till 4.

SUMMER—The recurrence of the summer solstice invites the full display of female beauty—adorning the fashionable promenade, the ride, and drive; in all cases, fervid heat, and its concomitant, dust, materially injure the skin, producing sunburn, tan, freckles, and discolorations, of an almost indelible character. To obviate and eradicate these baneful results, recourse may with confidence be had to ROWLANDS' KALYDOR, a preparation of vital importance to the sustenance of female beauty. It imparts a refreshing coolness to the skin, allays heat and irritability, purifies it from all eruptions, and realises a clear and fair complexion. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its selection by royalty, and the several courts throughout Europe, together with the élite of the aristocracy.—Price 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. per bottle.

The new and beautiful Perfume, ROWLANDS' AQUA D'ORO, is an essence of the subtlest and most durable pungency, the aroma and bouquet of which are the most refreshing known, and have caused it to be patronized by the élite of the aristocracy, whose judgment and good taste are never at fault. Its odorlessness, its revivifying effect, its refreshing properties, and its choice perfume applied to the delicate mouthpiece of the belle of fashion render it an essential accompaniment to places of public amusement and crowded assemblies. In all cases of over-excitement or fatigue it will prove gratifyingly refreshing, if taken as a cooling beverage, diluted with water.—Price 3s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, for the growth, and for preserving, improving, and beautifying the Human Hair.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for preserving and beautifying the Teeth, strengthening the Gums, and for rendering the Breath sweet and pure.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

Beware of SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS," preceding that of the article, on the wrapper or label. Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatten Garden, London; and by chemists and perfumers.

In Post 8vo. cloth lettered, price 9s. with Map.

Siamese and Burmese civil year 1215, and their religious year 2394.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THIS mail, like the last, is a short one, owing to the arrangements for the season. "The three mails of May," the Bombay Times observes, "are proverbial for their dullness; they not only follow each other in such rapid succession that, even in stirring times, the events of a week in India could scarcely form a chapter in history, but they are despatched at a season of proverbial lifelessness and inactivity,—when, with a vertical sun, the thermometer rarely registered short of three figures, and an impending deluge, a state of semi-somnolent inactivity is almost universal."

No further intelligence had been received from the seat of war in the Irrawaddy. Provision had been made for the protection and comfort of the troops during the rains; the Sepoys had been hutted, and materials were fast arriving from Moulmein for the construction of houses for the officers, and barracks for the men. It appears from a speech of Sir James Hogg, which is given in a subsequent page, that Lord Dalhousie, with commendable forethought, had despatched orders to Moulmein for the construction in frame-work of a vast number of wooden houses, which had been sent to Rangoon. The engineer officers with the force have been indefatigable in arranging a system of cleanliness and regularity in the cantonment, and their endeavours were greatly facilitated by the return of the natives, who had been driven away by the recent hostilities, or by the Governor of Rangoon.

The project of withdrawing the troops after the capture of Rangoon, until the ensuing season, if ever entertained,—which is doubted,—has been abandoned, and we are now assured by the Friend of India, that the troops will remain housed at Rangoon and Martaban for the rains, every possible provision which money and skill can secure being made for their health and convenience, and that, in the ensuing cold season, an expedition on a large scale will move up to the capital,—unless the court of Ava should offer its submission.

It seems to be generally understood that the army at Rangoon is to be largely reinforced. A strong body of troops, not less than 5,000, it is said, will be furnished from Bombay; the native troops of which presidency are represented to be eager to embark.

The probability of a speedy and successful termination of the war is confidently calculated upon by the Indian journals. The Bombay Times, seldom an advocate of the doctrine of annexation, observes:—

"If the same determination of purpose and energy of spirit which now actuate our councils remain, there is every reason to believe that three months after the renewal of hostilities the war will be concluded, and a treaty dictated by us signed by the golden-footed monarch in his capital, ascending from the crown of Burmah for ever an ample slice of his dominions. The annexation of the whole peninsula from Chittagong to Penang, had we but a just claim, and fought in an honest quarrel, such as now, seems a much less calamitous, and greatly less unhappy accident than it appears to be considered at home. An increase of five or six millions clear to our revenue—of probably twice as much more to the value of our commerce—of eight or ten millions to the number of our subjects, and a fifth or sixth to the area of our dominions,—is one of those misfortunes Englishmen in the East could submit to with patriotic fortitude and Christian resignation,—especially in the case of a country with a magnificent seacoast, and line of shipping ports all around, and one of the most defensible frontiers that can be imagined. We speak of course of such a possibility only in the event of our having law and justice on our side. Should it be found that our dominions were becoming too extensive, we might surrender the burning plains of Scinde, which draw from us half a million a year, for the peninsula bounded by the hills of Assam and Straits of Malacca, presenting the advantages enumerated."

The disturbances on the north-west frontier continued. The Delhi Gazette reports, on the authority of letters from Peshawar of the 6th May, that, notwithstanding the near approach of the season when military operations must be suspended, a force, consisting of Baldwin's troop of horse artillery, a detail of foot artillery, with two heavy howitzers, 600 rank and file of H.M.'s 32nd regiment, 600 rank and file of the 66th Ghorkas, and the 2nd irregular cavalry, with pontoons, was under orders to march to Nowshera on the morning of the 7th. This force, in addition to that already in the field, would form a pretty strong brigade. Its object seems to be to destroy some villages supposed to harbour men who had been mixed up in the murder of a tehsildar. The force is commanded by Sir Colin Campbell in person. The Gazette adds: "From all we can learn, this suspicion is likely to stir up a tribe that have hitherto given us no trouble."

Accounts from the Hazara country state that Jehandad Khan, in whose country Messrs. Carne and Tapp were murdered, and whose prime minister, Bostan Khan, was suspected by Major Abbott of having instigated the murder, had been attacked by the Hazimzaies and others, who succeeded in capturing two forts, named Jahmeree and Shoonglee. Major Abbott was on his tour in the Hazara country.

A small expedition, consisting of European and native troops, had been organized, with the view of inflicting summary punishment on the people of Othmankhel, for having harboured certain runaways. Their lands and villages, situate between the Raneezaie valley and the Momund country westward, are easily accessible to guns, and no obstacle has been thrown in Colonel Mackeson's way. "The constant and harassing demand for troops caused by these outbreaks," observes the Lahore Chronicle, "have induced the authorities to order up further reinforcements to Peshawar, and the 16th Irregular Cavalry, with the 4th regiment N.I., were to cross the Indus from Rawul Pindee." The Chronicle adds: "It has been asserted that considerable disaffection prevails in the Peshawar districts across the Cabul river. We should hardly wonder at it, seeing that the people are constantly harassed by inroads from their hill neighbours; but as the payment of revenue is a fair test in these matters, we may state, as a fact in opposition to assertions elsewhere made, that nearly the whole of the Hushtnugur dues have been realized without the presence of a single soldier."

From Cabul we learn the death of Ukram Khan, son of Dost Mahomed Khan, who died of fever, which is raging to a fearful extent in that country. Mahomed Uzfal Khan had been appointed ruler of Toorkistan in his room. Since the death of Ukram Khan, the people of Nimlik had revolted. The son of Ukram Khan had sent 3,000 troops against the rebels, and Dost Mahomed had ordered Mahomed Uzfal Khan to prepare to proceed to Toorkistan with as little delay as possible.

The Mofussilite, of May 7, has this paragraph:—

"The following news has just reached us from Cabul, and may be depended upon as authentic:—'Zuman Khan, son of Dost Mahomed, had been shot in a quarrel with a Kuzilbash in the city. The Dost, on hearing of it, sent for Khan Sheerens Khan, and ordered him to give up the murderer. The Khan pleaded inability, as the men had escaped, on which the Dost imprisoned him. Apejee, head of the Cabul Soonees, formerly at feud with the Kuzilbashes (on the score of creed, the latter being Sheahs), went to their fort and offered to join with the whole of the Cabulees, and make up their quarrel by combining against the Dost. This was agreed to, and they attacked the Bala Hissar, released Khan Sheerens Khan, and blockaded the Dost. The latest accounts say that he was shut up in the Bala Hissar with one regiment. His four sons, Jubber Khan, Shumsodeen Khan, Oosman Khan, and Ufzul Khan, were with him. No supplies were allowed to enter, and all communication cut off.'"

The Candaharee sirdars had been threatened by the Persian king with harsh measures, unless they withdrew their forces from Herat. Gholam Hyder Khan and Mahomed Ameen Khan, sons of Dost Mahomed, with 8,000 troops, cavalry and infantry, and twelve guns, had marched from Cabul for Herat.

The following intelligence from Oude is contained in the Englishman's Lucknow letter:—

"There is at this moment a war at Bheetee, in which two regular regiments (Capt. Bunbury's and Capt. Magness's), two Nujeeb corps, two Sebundee irregulars, and a detachment of a Rissala are engaged. The present defender of the fort, who was originally only a petty zemindar, but rose to the respectable position of a large talookholder by conquering the villages adjacent to his original estate with the sword, built it but a few years ago. The cannonading has been going on for the last ten days. According to the latest accounts, nine men have been lost in killed on the side of the assailants, besides several wounded. Abdool Hadz Khan, the commandant of the 400 cavalry employed there, seems to have secretly assisted the talookdar. The Chuckladar of Sultanpore, Agah Saheb, consequently complained of his defection to the minister, who seemed to think a severe reprimand a sufficient punishment for aiding the king's enemies against himself. Bheetee is about sixteen miles east from the military cantonments of Sultanpore. Runjeet Sing is the name of another landholder, who seems determined not to pay his debt of 80,000 rupees to government. He is a relation of Rundheer Sing, but not the person of the same name who lately had the engagement with Capt. P. Orr."

From the Deccan, there is a renewed rumour that our Resident at Hyderabad had been instructed to recommend to the Nizam that cession of territory should be made to us, the revenues of which would be sufficient to pay the contingent. On the other hand, in the Englishman, we find a correspondent in the Deccan writing thus:—

"I think the Nizam will shuffle out of his difficulty. If he were to be treated with common justice, it would be found that he owes us nothing. During the last fifty years the Madras commissariat at Secunderabad has wrongfully received and appropriated all the duties on liquors, &c. denominated the abkarry, producing one year with another a lac per annum. So we may get out of the scrape, but the contingent will be reduced—horse, foot, and excessive staff."

The Hurkaru is informed that the minister, Suraj-ool-moolk, had suggested that our Government should take temporary charge of the entire state, and pay itself from the revenue.

The Guicowar's treasury is said to have run dry: he had applied for a loan of half a million sterling for the payment of the arrears of his troops; but the Baroda bankers declined, unless under the British guarantee, which our Government declined to give.

The Singapore Free Press states that information had been received that a Cochin Chinese army, amounting to 5,000 men, had taken up a position at Hatien, on the present frontiers of Cambodia, while a Siamese army of 3,000 men had advanced into Cambodia from the Siamese side.

BENGAL.

BURMAH.

There is nothing particular to record this week in reference to our proceedings towards the eastward. Admiral Austen left Calcutta on Monday morning, after a residence of ten days in Calcutta, during which time he has been loaded with hospitalities, which have doubtless obliterated all remembrance of former neglect. He is at present in the hands of his physician, who has recommended a return to England for the benefit of his health, but the veteran will not quit the Indian seas, while laurels are to be won and stars are to be obtained. He proceeds, therefore, down to Penang, where he will husband his strength for the renewal of the struggle in the ensuing cold weather. The detention of the steamer, which brought intelligence of the capture of Rangoon, for ten days in Calcutta will have prepared the public for the announcement, that the troops are not to advance up to Prome before the rains, and are not to move from Rangoon at all, except on medical certificate, before November next. Had there been any intention to proceed up the Irrawaddy immediately, the earliest intimation would have been sent of this determination to General Godwin. The resolution to avoid any advance movement with our present limited force appears to be the dictate of wisdom as well as of prudence. It was hinted some time ago by some of the papers that Government had decided to withdraw the troops from Rangoon as soon as the town had been captured, and send them to Moulmein or Calcutta. If any such project was ever entertained—of which we have serious doubts—it has been very judiciously abandoned. Government would not have been justified in incurring the great sacrifice of life which a second capture of the great pagoda must have entailed. The troops will, therefore, remain housed at Rangoon and Martaban for the rains, and every possible provision which money and skill can secure will be made for their health and convenience; and as Rangoon is not of itself an insalubrious locality, it is to be hoped that the fearful mortality of 1824 will be avoided. In the ensuing cold season an expedition on a larger scale will move up to the capital—unless the court of Ava should immediately offer its submission, and pay down the expenses of the war, or the Court of Directors should order our troops to retire, re infecta; but it is not to be expected that the one will perform an act of such wisdom, or the other perpetrate an act of such folly.—Friend of India, May 6.

Extracts of a letter from Rangoon, dated April 22nd:—"We have just arrived from up the river, where we have, in company with H.M.'s ship Serpent, been capturing a vessel of about 250 tons, lately built at Ilangoon by the king, after an European model, and intended for a steamer. Unfortunately, however, as we were on the point of towing her out of the creek whither she had been conveyed to be secured from our grasp, she grounded and heeled over so much as the water fell, that part of the machinery which was on board fetched away, and bilged her so seriously as to render ineffectual all attempts to get her off.

She was consequently burnt on the following morning, not without the regret of the whole party.

"The Kemmendine stockade was intended by the Governor of Rangoon, in the event of the Dagon Pagoda stockade falling into our hands, to be a retiring post; but our rapid success compelled him and his suite to take flight, which they did on elephants, escorted by about 300 followers, under a heavy fire from our guns. He is said to be about ten miles hence, where some of the natives (Peguers), who are acquainted with his retreat, are willing to lead our forces. The people display the fullest confidence in us, and are flocking down by every opportunity to claim British protection, in the implicit belief that the country will be annexed. The village of Kemmendine is occupied by its former inhabitants, while the up-country people were living in boats on the banks. They have suffered severely from the Governor's barbarity, for he has impressed everybody capable of bearing arms to man the stockades, which have been provisioned by extortion from the villages within reach. It is to be hoped the Government will not shrink from holding this part of the country, Pegu, for as surely as they evacuate and abandon the province at the conclusion of the war, the cruelties of 1826 will be renewed, in revenge for the evident tendency of the population in our favour, and the countenance they give us. This anxiety for British rule arises from the knowledge of the advantages the inhabitants of the Tenasserim and Arracan provinces enjoy, in comparison with themselves, under their despotic and tyrannical governor.

"The steamers Berenice and Zenobia have been despatched to the Madras Presidency to bring over another regiment, I believe, from Vizagapatam; it is also whispered that the general has applied for two others from Bengal. Col. Bogle has gone back to Moulmein. Col. Coote had his pistol shattered in the holster. A friend has been up to the Dagon Pagoda: it is really a magnificent sight, and occupied by the three corps. The fortifications are of such immense strength, that military men consider it next to impregnable if garrisoned by Europeans. A rumour says it was taken so cheaply, by a ruse. A chief, who was captured, was brought to the general. He was directed by His Excellency to proceed at the head of the troops, and lead them to the weakest point, and informed that on the slightest suspicion of his taking the men in a wrong direction, he would be run up to the first tree, while, if he proved true, his liberty was promised. The man, not being learned in our customs and laws of war, strove to prove himself wise in his generation, hence our easy penetration into the very centre of the defences, with a loss utterly disproportionate to their strength. The stockade is as strong as it could ever possibly be made by the Burmese, and the troops at present in it might resist the entire power of the Burmese empire.

"We are off somewhere immediately. One says to go up the Paulang Creek, to destroy a stockade or so, or up the great mouth of the Irrawaddy, for a similar purpose. The Serpent and Phlegethon go together. The governor of Rangoon, who is but a short distance from hence, addressed a letter yesterday to Gen. Godwin, which arrived with a flag of truce. The contents were as follows, as near as I can glean, having heard the translation from good authority. The letter was addressed to the general of the British forces from 'our governor' of Rangoon, with the intent of opening negotiations. It went on to say that the 'two great nations of England and Burmah had for some time endeavoured to live upon amicable terms and avoid collisions, but unsuccessfully. One of these great battles has been fought, in which the British arms have triumphed by chance; two yet remain to be won. Both nations have suffered already severe losses and inconveniences, the country has been desolated, and misery entailed on all parties; it therefore rests with you, the general, who no doubt are, as is the Governor of Rangoon, a man of deep consideration, to say whether you will risk the chances of the two other battles, and inevitable consequences, or open negotiations such as will ensure future peace and good understanding between these two great nations.' On conclusion of the perusal of the letter, the General, who well knew the enemy he was dealing with, turned round, and in brief language, far more distinguished for vigour and emphasis than diplomatic courtesy, characterized the production and its author in terms which are unlikely ever to be translated to that functionary in the terse freedom of the Saxon tongue. The letter was then flung in the face of the bearer, a disguised coolie, or something of that sort, who was forthwith dismissed. The general opinion is that these were mere spies, to see what we had done, what were our plans, and their chances for the future.

"Mr. Kincaid, an American missionary, who has resided many years in this country, has been visited by numbers of the old inhabitants, who state that it is only requisite for the British government to secure them from future harm, and to countenance the proceeding, to cause them to rise in thousands, and render efficient assistance against their tyrants, whom they abhor. To illustrate how warmly the people value our protection, and dread their present rulers, take the following, to which I was a witness the other day, while at anchor off the village of Cussing, where we destroyed the king's steam-packet. Two Mahomedans, who have resided some years in the place, and intermarried with the natives, came on board with some Burmese to supplicate, as representatives of more than 3,000 souls, for any protection it might be in the power of the vessels to afford them, from the rapacity of the governor and his troops, who were quartered not many miles above the place where they had secreted themselves, ever since the commencement of hostilities, suffering severe privations. They implored to be conveyed to Kemmendine, Rangoon, or any other place, where they could enjoy British protection. Of course, this could not be acceded to, as the movements of the detachment were controlled by orders. It is most painful to witness the wanton destruction of valuable property over the whole site of Rangoon. More than two hundred substantial brick-built dwellings (some of them known to have cost upwards of a lakh of rupees for their erection) have been razed to the ground; all the combustible part of the materials being, apparently with the greatest care, burnt to ashes, together with thousands of wooden and thatched houses, some of them of no mean description. Where the fire did not take effect on the luxuriant and valuable fruit trees, the axe was called in to complete the work of devastation. Years will not suffice to restore Rangoon to its former beauty and importance to the Burmese.

"The Dagon Pagoda stockade mounted previous to our attack eighty-nine guns, several of the best English construction and finish. The magazine contained 50,000 barrels of powder, and a large powder manufactory has been discovered. The governor was so confident of the impregnability of the place, that he anticipated it could laugh the British to scorn for three years! The scrupulous care taken to prevent the burning of those fine edifices, the 'poonges houses,' or priestly habitations, has been a blessing, since (excepting where our shells have accidentally fired them) they are preserved entire, and afford excellent residences for both officers and men, as well as commissariat and ordnance offices, and godowns in abundance."—Englishman.

A valued correspondent writes:—"What is to be the next step in Burmah? The slaughter among the Burmese was greater than on our side, principally from the firing from the ships. On land they showed themselves hard fighters, and fully confirmed the impression so prevalent, as to the excellent qualities of their soldiery. Far be it from me to doubt the powers of a British army against the best savages that ever ate a prisoner; but from what has already taken place, it is evident that the stars in their courses will also fight against us if we attempt to invade a country which has cholera and fever for its defenders. Indeed, it is universally admitted, that it would be an act of madness to take any further steps till after the rains. But why go any further at all? Why not let well alone? We have now possession of the sea-board that joins Arracan and Moulemein, and having it, we have all we want, and all we should be likely to get eventually from the war. Even though we razed the cities of Ameerapoor and Ava, and gave the golden-footed monarch to be a meal for the dogs of the camp, let us remain where we are, give all our attention to making the stations of Martaban and Rangoon healthy and serviceable as stations for our troops; and if the Burmese are not satisfied, let them say so; they will then be the invaders. As to 'annexing' the country, it is absurd. We don't want the country, and should not know what to do with it if we had it."

As the above sentences probably represent the opinions of a large class, they are entitled to notice. Our correspondent's principal error (for we believe him to be wholly wrong) arises from his treating the present dominions of the king of Ava as one country, when it is well known that the people of Pegu would cheerfully transfer their alliance to the British. It was offered to us at the close of the last war, but we had not the courage to accept it. Once accepted, it may be secured without any difficulty by the permanent occupation of Prome and Syriam, the former an exceedingly healthy station. Our right to Pegu is as defensible as our right to its seaboard, and to seize this without seizing that would, under the circumstances, be both foolish and cruel; for the Burmese would lay waste all Pegu in the hope of starving us off the coast. Instead of having no use for Pegu, we should absolutely require it for the maintenance of our troops and trade at Rangoon. The fertility of the country rivals that of Bengal, while its population is friendly to us, and ripe for civilization. It longs for a change of masters, and will not, we think, be disappointed.—Delhi Gaz. May 8.

MR. CAMPBELL AND THE PRESS.

MR. GEORGE CAMPBELL, of the civil service, in his late work on India, has condescended to a misrepresentation so gross, that we cannot believe it to be unintentional. There is only one way, he says, of accounting for the outcry raised by the Indian press in Joteepersad's behalf. "The editors are always willing enough to side against Government, but in the instance alluded to, they must undoubtedly have been stimulated by bribes, because the popular opinion in every Indian cantonment ran very strong against the commissariat, and they wrote in the teeth of the feeling of the great majority of their subscribers. The accused was rich, in danger, and ready with his money."

Now, as the Delhi Gazette took part with the Government, and against Joteepersad, the above absurd sentence does not at any rate put us on our defences. But in justice to our contemporaries, we would point out how unfairly their accuser distorts the truth.

It is true, as he says, that public opinion in India ran very strong against the commissariat; and it is equally true that public opinion ran very strong with Joteepersad, the commissariat contractor. In the condemnation of "the commissariat," as a body, lay the strongest point in Joteepersad's defence. Mr. Campbell did not venture to assert that Joteepersad was unpopular—that would have been too glaring a misstatement. Joteepersad was—and Mr. Campbell knew it—about the most popular man in India at that time, and the trial of Joteepersad was the most unpopular measure undertaken by Government since the annexation of Scinde.

The Friend of India and the Delhi Gazette were the only papers in the country, which endeavoured to stem the tide of public opinion by defending the Government and the commissariat; and odium enough did we incur by it. It was we who "wrote in the teeth of the feeling of the great body of our readers," and we appeal to those readers now if this be not the case. So that Mr. Campbell's argument destroys itself. It does more. It destroys one's entire confidence in the man who has been mean enough to use it—for Mr. Campbell was in India at the time when the outcry in favour of Joteepersad was at its height, and had peculiar opportunities of learning the state of public opinion; for he travelled leisurely by land from the Sutledge to Calcutta in November and December 1850, mixing a great deal in society, as will be remembered by many of our readers. That he learned from all he heard that Joteepersad's prosecution was unpopular, is most unpopular, is most evident from his present bare-faced attempt to identify Joteepersad with the "commissariat," when the case was in reality, as he well knew, Joteepersad against the commissariat. It is highly creditable to the Indian press that such disingenuous means should have to be resorted to, to make out a case against it. And this by a man who made use of the press so long as it served him, and boasted openly of his contributions to the very newspaper at which his present accusations are most pointedly aimed!—Delhi Gazette.

The Delhi Gazette, one of the two Indian journals that supported Government in its proceedings against Joteepersad, demolishes the flimsy inference on which Mr. George Campbell founds the charge of corruption which he so recklessly writes against the whole Indian press. Of course the Delhi, being on the other side, was not bribed by the Lallah. This even Mr. Campbell must acknowledge. Therefore, when it undertakes to show that its opponents have been wrongly accused, its observations may be received with confidence. Mr. Campbell bases his charge of bribery on the assumption that the Pro-Jotee papers wrote against the feeling of their subscribers, and could have thus jeopardised their own interests only for a consideration. Our up-country contemporary, on the contrary, admits that the public generally was in favour of Joteepersad, and that he and the Friend were on the unpopular side. This was undoubtedly the fact. As we have said already, the feeling might be against the commissariat, but the contractor was not held responsible for the sins of the commissariat, and he was considered an ill-used man even by those who might not be very confident of his immaculate honesty. Where was the need, then, of bribing the press to take up the popular side?—Hurkaru.

LAW.

INSOLVENT DEBTOR'S COURT, MAY.

In re John Babington.—The insolvent was a captain in the Madras artillery, and had been twenty-two years and nine months a subaltern.

Mr. Bell opposed on behalf of Messrs. Gordon and Co. of Madras, under the 51st clause of the Act for extravagance, and contracting debts without having any reasonable prospect of being able to pay them. From the year 1838 to 1840 he contracted a debt to the amount of Rs. 3,048, he being on a small salary. He likewise incurred debts in this country, his debts amounting altogether to Rs. 11,000. The insolvent, Mr. Bell stated, had incurred the debt to Messrs. Gordon and Co. many years ago, and after it had gone on accumulating by interest, he gave a bond for the full amount of principal and interest; but as the insolvent would not pay it nor answer their letters, Messrs. Gordon and Co. put it in the hands of an attorney, and when they sued insolvent upon his bond, he put in the plea of non est factum through his attorney, Mr. Caruthers. Messrs. Paul, Lyons, and Bell begged him to withdraw this plea, on account of the great expense it would put Messrs. Gordon and Co. to, as a commission would have to be sent to Madras. He came to Calcutta, as he said, for the purpose of making arrangements to pay the debt, but immediately on his arrival he incurred fresh debts; one to Messrs. Ranken and Co., tailors, of Rs. 800; to Messrs. Crump and Sohorne, a debt of Rs. 100 for wines; to Messrs. Manton, gunsmiths, Rs. 35; to Messrs. Monteith and Co., Rs. 62; to Messrs. Thacker and Co., booksellers, Rs. 75; and ever since he had been in Calcutta had been borrowing money. The insolvent, he, however, admitted, had the excuse for borrowing that he had been in great difficulties.

The Insolvent stated, that he did not deny the deed, his lawyer must have done so; he instructed him to defend the action; he merely acted by his advice, and never heard from Paul, Lyons, and Bell about the expense of a mission to Madras. Mr. Caruthers had his sanction to do whatever he thought right; the original debt to Gordon and Co. was only Rs. 303, but he subsequently got more goods from them to the value of Rs. 47, the rest of their claim was made up of entirely of interest; he had been in gaol a little more than one month, his pay was Rs. 295 per month before he got his captaincy, which he obtained in June last, just at the time of his correspondence with Paul, Lyons, and Bell.

The Commissioner observed, that there was no justification in defending an action when there was no defence to it.

Mr. Thomas opposed, in behalf of Messrs. Ranken and Co. tailors.

The Insolvent stated, that he came to Calcutta in October 1851, upon the invitation of Messrs. Paul, Lyons, and Bell, and contracted the debt to Messrs. Ranken and Co. immediately after his arrival, in consequence of his having lost his kit in the sundrbands; the bill amounted to Rs. 906, the charges being most enormously high; it was his intention to run up a bill of Rs. 400 or Rs. 500, but when it was presented, he found it more than double that amount. It was his intention to pay them at the end of a twelvemonth at the rate of Rs. 50 per month; he told them that he would make arrangements to pay them, but did not specify the sum he intended to give, nor did he mention the object that brought him to Calcutta, or that he had come down on the invitation of Messrs. Paul, Lyons, and Bell. It was nothing unusual to take a year's credit from tradesmen; the charges of Ranken and Co. were three or four as much as that of other tailors.

The Commissioner.—It was not fair to say that they charged three or four times as much as other tailors; he knew that was not the case.

The Insolvent to the Commissioner.—Messrs. Gordon and Co. had applied frequently for payment, and since the return of insolvent from England in 1841, he had paid them Rs. 200, and the actual balance of the debt then amounted to about Rs. 142; thought that he was paying them principal, but what he paid all went to interest. He gave them the bond in 1837, merely to avoid being so frequently written to; was aware that he was paying interest at the rate of 10 per cent.; saw Mr. Caruthers immediately on his arrival; merely gave him a statement of his debts, who told insolvent to avoid the execution of any writ; told him that he (the insolvent) was sued upon this bond; he did not go himself to Messrs. Paul, Lyons, and Bell, because he was afraid of being subject to arrest; never heard of the commission (a writ that went to obtain proof of the signature of insolvent to the bond), never gave it a thought, was so confident of a compromise.

Mr. Caruthers.—Application was made to him to prevent the commission going to Madras, but he did not assent as he wished to gain time; the insolvent told witness that he expected to get Rs. 3,000 back pay; he received instructions from Captain Babington to defend the action; he denied the execution of the bond, but he, witness, told him that he knew the witnesses to it; he also explained to Captain Babington the expense of a commission, and showed him the letter of Messrs. Paul, Lyons, and Bell; but he appeared confident that he would get money to pay the bond; he recommended the insolvent to come to Calcutta, as he thought it probable, that if he was present, a compromise might be effected. The insolvent at first denied executing the bond; had no recollection of executing it, but witness said he must be mistaken, as he knew the witnesses to it.

Mr. Peterson addressed the commissioner, and submitted that, although there might be extravagance on the part of the insolvent, there was really nothing to bring him within the criminal clause of the act.

The Commissioner.—The conduct of the insolvent had been very bad; he wished to throw the whole blame of denying the bond on his attorney; he stated that he had frequent applications from Messrs. Gordon and Co., it is, therefore, incredible that the fact of the execution of the bond should have escaped his memory, but he stated to his attorney, Mr. Caruthers, that he did not recollect having executed the bond; and he now said that he knew nothing about the commission, although Mr. Caruthers stated that he actually showed him the letter from Paul, Lyons, and Bell, but yet he would throw the whole odium of the transaction upon his attorney; but there was no pretence for his so doing, as he acted entirely under instructions; if the attorney had, however, acted on his own responsibility, he would have been liable for his share of the blame; but the instructions gave full authority to put in the denial, and he could not at all exonerate him from the consequences of it. He would not say that he would apply the penal clauses of the Act for merely putting in the plea of non est factum, but he put his creditors to a great and unnecessary expense in forcing them to send a commission, and which might have been avoided; and instead of going to his creditors himself on his arrival in Calcutta, he employed an attorney. He could not say that persons in this country were very rigid to those indebted to them, and the insolvent had no reason to suppose that they would have rejected a compromise. He omits to answer the letter of his creditors, and acts dishonestly and extravagantly, and now said that the debt was all interest; but a man kept out of his money is entitled to interest, and the interest is as much debt as the principal. He considered that the opposition of Messrs. Gordon and Co. had been substantiated.

Next is the debt due to Messrs. Ranken and Co.; the insolvent came to Calcutta greatly in debt, and whose means would take many years to pay off these debts, but instead of allowing that circumstance to have any weight with him, went immediately to Ranken and Co. tailors, and contracted another debt without having the slightest hopes of being able to pay it; he did not communicate to them the fact that he was already deeply indebted, but he now said that their charges were enormous; but there was no proof of that, nor did it appear that he asked the price before he ordered the goods, but he had no reasonable prospect of being able to pay them; he ought to have told them that he was in debt, and that he intended to pay them by small instalments; had he done so, it is not at all likely that they would have acceded to such conditions: he was sorry to say that he considered both oppositions proved. The order of the Court was, that the insolvent be discharged from all debts as to all creditors, except the two opposing creditors; at the suit of either he was liable to imprisonment for the space of twelve calendar months, after which period he would be considered discharged.

Mr. Peterson observed, that if the insolvent was imprisoned, he would lose his commission.

The Commissioner.—He could not help that; the insolvent had better put himself in communication with the parties, and endeavour to avoid imprisonment.

PUNJAB THUGS.—During three months, upwards of 500 murders (inclusive of the Cis-Sutlej murders) have been discovered. The names of 320 Thugs have been revealed; of these 120 have been seized, and nearly half of them confess. It has been already explained that the greater number of the highway robberies were committed by Thugs, of whom a large number are now in irons and the rest dispirited. Highway robbery has consequently decreased, and the main roads are safer to travellers. These results are mainly owing to Mr. Brereton's vigorous proceedings. The crime has chiefly prevailed in the districts of Umritser and Wuzerabad, which might be expected on account of their central position. They number 165 and 132 murders respectively. The districts next in the list are those of Lahore, Julundhur, Goojerat, Jelum, and Rawul Pindee (all on the main road) which number from twenty to forty murders each. In the other districts the numbers are inconsiderable.—Lahore Chron., May 5.

SANITARY REFORM IN INDIA has made but slow progress in the metropolis or interior. In regard to the latter this can be easily explained. The European portion of the community, amongst whom alone a full perception of the value of sanitary arrangement exists, resides far away from those parts of sadder towns which urgently require improvements, and the fact fails to be brought home to them. In Calcutta, however, the case is widely different; there we possess a highly educated class, who should take the lead in carrying out laws for the preservation of the public health. Instead of this, we find no branch of legislation more inoperative than that relating to sanitary objects, partly owing to intrinsic deficiencies in the municipal Acts, and partly to the unenlightened impatience of taxation which has displayed itself by throwing constant impediments in the way of the commissioners appointed to administer them. As regards the metropolis, however, circumstances are now in train to effect improvement, and we may hope that a few years will witness a great change. It is quite inexplicable how so long a time should have passed by without reform. Some of the best parts of the city are perfectly poisonous, especially during the cold season, and, instead of being surprised at the present rate of mortality, our only wonder is that so much immunity should be enjoyed. The Mofussil is far more unfavourably situated. There the deaths and disease, owing to removable causes, are appalling. Custom has blunted our sensibilities until we hear of whole towns being depopulated by cholera or fever, as though such fatal visitations must occur in the ordinary course of events. Such is so far from being the case, that we may rest assured of being able thoroughly to eradicate all malarious fevers which comprise the great bulk of suffering amongst the peasantry, under an improved sanitary system.—Hurkaru.

DRESS OF THE EUROPEAN TROOPS AT RANGOON.—The Calcutta Morning Chronicle calls attention to the worse than absurdity of the present dress of the European troops employed at Rangoon. The men were actually landed and exposed to the sun for two whole days in red cloth jackets which would be oppressive on a summer's day in England, in stocks stiff enough to give any man an apoplexy, and with shakos on their heads, weighing we are afraid to guess what, and so ingeniously constructed as to yield the smallest possible protection from the sun. General Godwin himself wore his cocked hat and plume throughout the operations, and thus compelled his officers to do the same. The natural consequence was that more men suffered from the coup de soleil than from the enemy's fire, and the "pause" of H.M.'s 51st may have been owing in no small degree to a run of nearly half a mile under a burning sun, with a weight of accoutrements which would burthen a Canadian.

THE 3RD REGIMENT PUNJAB CAVALRY, raised in 1849, and the 3rd Punjab Battery, organised in 1850, both quartered at Asnee near Mithenkote, have volunteered to proceed to Burmah should the Government be pleased to accept of their services.

COURTS-MARTIAL.—Three officers (Brev. Major G. P. Thomas, 64th N.I., Ens. W. L. R. Lumsdaine, 6th N.I., and Ens. A. De C. Comyn) are about to be tried before courts-martial at Agra, on charges which, if proved, must entail penalties of disgraceful dismissal from the army.—Englishman, May 5.

INSOLVENTS.—Seventeen applications were heard before the Commissioner in the Insolvent Court of Calcutta on the 1st instant. In the case of Captain Babington, of the Madras army, whose discharge was opposed by Messrs. Ranken and Co. on the ground that he had contracted his debt with them without any prospect of paying it, the Commissioner considered that this was proved, and refused the discharge for twelve months. He however allowed Captain Babington to endeavour to make some arrangement with his creditors by which imprisonment, and the consequent loss of his commission, might be averted.—Friend of India, May 6.

The Englishman remarks upon this case:—"The decision of the Commissioner in the Insolvent Court, in the case of Captain Babington, appears so inconsistent with the usual practice of the Court, so severe, so harsh, that we feel inclined to say a few words on it, however unwilling to oppose the opinion of a judge so learned as Sir Lawrence Peel. Is it to caprice, is it to some sudden anger that we must ascribe it, that Captain Babington has been so severely visited, when we daily see insolvents, whose difficulties are accompanied with even deep dishonesty, walk triumphantly through the court, smiled on by the officers, condoled with by the attorneys, and commiserated by the Commissioner? Did Sir Lawrence know to what he was condemning Captain Babington when the harsh sentence was fulminated against him? Are there two measures of justice, one for the insolvent ditcher, another for the ruined officer? And is that for the latter to be a doom nearly equalling a capital offence, whilst the former shall proceed on his way rejoicing?"

THE IMPRISONED SIKH SIRDARS.—The Calcutta Morning Chronicle states that the Government have promised to grant the Sikh sirdars, Chutter Singh, Utter Singh, and Shere Singh, now confined in Fort William, their liberty on the termination of the Burmese war. We presume this act of clemency will be accompanied by a provision that they cannot be allowed to re-enter the Punjab; but even this is scarcely necessary, as the men who volunteered to carry the British standards into Ava, are not likely to rise in arms at the bidding of their thrice-beaten leaders.

DR. O'SHAUGHNESSY.—The Calcutta Chamber of Commerce have presented Dr. O'Shaughnessy with Rs. 6,200, "as a mark of their appreciation of the eminent services he has rendered to the community, and especially to the trade of Calcutta, in completing, at great personal exertion, the electric telegraph from Calcutta to Kedgerie." To this they attach the following:—"This sum they beg you will appropriate to the purchase of books or apparatus, or in such manner as you consider will best promote the object you have in view."

MR. H. PIDDINGTON.—The officers of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company have subscribed for a handsome silver vase, to be presented to Mr. Henry Piddington, of Calcutta, in token of their gratitude for the services which he has rendered to the nautical profession by his labours in elucidation of the law of storms.

MR. BETHUNE'S FEMALE SCHOOL is said to be in a decaying state.

VISITS TO CASHMERE.—Military officers visiting Cashmere in great numbers have, it is said, distressed the people of those portions of the country through which they have passed, as the local authorities have compelled the villagers to supply all the wants of visitors gratis. The Board of Administration of the Punjab have issued stringent orders that no European visitors shall receive presents from the people of Cashmere.

THE ASSAM TEA COMPANY held their annual meeting on the 8th May. The report was most satisfactory. Notwithstanding the long drought, the company obtained a crop of 2,58,354 lbs. of tea during the past season.

OPIMUM SALE.—The following shows the result of the fifth opium sale held on the 10th May:—

	Chests.	Highest.	Lowest.	Average.	Proceeds.
Behar	1,920	1,095	1,090	1,090-12-3	20,94,275
Benares ...	880	1,110	1,105	1,105-1-4	9,72,475

THE AMALGAMATION of the Board of Revenue and the Board of Customs Salt and Opium, has been effected.

A CORPS OF BILDARS is immediately to be raised and organized for service in Arracan. The men are to be speedily instructed, and placed under intelligent sapper officers, and the corps will as soon as possible proceed to the Aeng Pass, and render the approaches to it and the pass itself easily practicable for guns, and the passage of troops, a strong brigade of which, under command of that most intelligent and gallant officer Sir John Cheape, K.C.B., will, it is understood, advance through the pass in question as soon after the rains as possible, creating a formidable diversion in the camp of the enemy, and greatly favouring General Godwin's advance up the Irrawaddy. The corps of bildars, which will be strictly a local one, will, on the conclusion of the war, be organized as a police battalion, to whom will be intrusted the protection of any districts that may be conquered or ceded. The arrangement is a wise and thoughtful one, and if carried out will, we doubt not, prove of incalculable benefit, should our information as to Sir John Cheape's taking the field in the direction of Arracan prove correct.—Englishman, May 5.

THE 7TH CAVALRY.—The Englishman has received several letters from the Punjab and the Upper-Provinces, regarding the late unfortunate business in the 7th Cavalry, when the troop either refused to, or did not charge. "The troopers have met the accusation with a countercharge, reflecting on the conduct of Lieut. Tottenham, the officer commanding the party; but it would appear from the following extract of a letter from an officer holding a staff situation of trust in the Punjab, and who is likely to be well informed, that Lieut. Tottenham is not to blame:—"The troop of the 7th Cavalry who would not fight the other day have tried to exculpate themselves, by swearing Tottenham was not with them at all, but luckily for him, other parties saw him urging them to charge. It is said that the trumpeter confessed before the court that he was obliged to tell the same story as the native officers and men, under threat of his life, which they swore to take if he did not. The story the troopers told was, that the enemy attacked them, and that, headed by the native officer, they resisted gallantly, but were overpowered, and compelled to give way, after which up came Lieut. Tottenham, who reported them to save himself. However, as I said before, lucky for T., others saw his conduct."

LYALL'S ESTATE.—A dividend of ten annas per one hundred rupees has been declared in the estate of Mr. John Lyall, senior, at Calcutta.

THE NEW MARRIAGE ACT.—The Governor-General in Council has, by the last mail, sent home a recommendation to the Hon. the Court of Directors to obtain an Act of Parliament to rectify the error in the Dissenters' Marriage Act in reference to the legal age of Native Christians. The Governor-General, regarding the subject as one of importance, has recommended it for the early consideration of the Court of Directors.—Calcutta Christian Adv. May 8.

THE HON MR. LYSAGHT.—A strange story was lately circulated by one of the Bombay papers, regarding the death of the Hon. Mr. Lysaght, whose body was brought into Poona in a palanquin some months ago. Mr. Lysaght had just sold out of H.M. 86th Regiment, of which he was senior ensign. It was given out at the time, and correctly as we now learn, that he had died of abscess of the liver. But owing to certain peculiar circumstances attending his death, a report gained ground that the unfortunate gentleman had been killed in a duel, and that the affair had been "hushed up" by his brother-officers. A letter from the surgeon of the 86th Regiment makes it sufficiently evident that Mr. Lysaght died a natural death.—Delhi Gaz. May 8.

THE BENGAL SEPOYS.—We are glad to learn from a Calcutta letter, that the 27th, 33rd, and 10th regiments of Native Infantry have volunteered to go on service to Burmah. This affords ample proof if any be wanting, that the sepoys have no objection to go on a sea voyage if they are properly managed; and we have little doubt that many other regiments will follow the example of those already mentioned, should their services be needed.—Ibid, May 15.

THE UNION BANK mystery is being gradually solved, and the iniquities connected with it are struggling into light. The committee are working with a will, and tracing lost assets to rather curious fountain-heads. That they will recover anything worth recovering is doubtful; but it is nearly certain that they will be able to fix the saddles on the right horses, and prove who are the black, or rather, who are the blackest sheep of the flock. On dit, that a certain barrister of reputation, deeming himself aggrieved by the manner in which the inquiry was being carried on, called out a fellow-barrister, who has made himself active in the investigation, giving as a reason, that he was unwarrantably interfering in his private affairs. It is said that the reply he received to the challenge was, that Mr. ———— certainly would meet him, but it should be in the arena of the Supreme Court, and not with pistols at twelve paces.—Delhi Gazette, May 8.

SICKNESS IN THE HILLS.—We regret to learn, by a letter from Almorah, that sickness prevails to an alarming extent in the interior of the Kemaon district. Mahamuree, small-pox, and cholera were all raging at the time our correspondent wrote, and the first of these deadly complaints was committing such havoc with the Booteahs, that in a very short space of time no less than forty deaths had taken place in one village, and it was deemed necessary to despatch an Assistant and Sub-Assistant Surgeon to the localities infected, in order to check the disease. The weather at Almorah is described as delightfully cool and pleasant, but the season is said to be an extraordinary one, as scarcely a day passes without rain and heavy thunder.—Ibid. May 12.

THE MILITARY BOARD, when abolished, is to be replaced by a Principal Engineer at Bengal, Agra, and Lahore, each having the control over the works, both civil and military, in his own division, being for the most part stationary, with a secretary to assist him in his office, and a deputy to travel and inspect works. The ordnance department will be placed under a separate officer.—Cuizen.

THE MONEY MARKET.—A correspondent of the Hurkaru gives the following string of rumours prevalent in the City of Palaces on the 10th May:—"There were various reports and conjectures current in the bazaar yesterday. One was to the effect that the 5 per cent. siccas was to be paid off instantly. The other that a new 4 per cent. company was to be opened, inviting subscriptions in half cash and half in the 4 per cent. siccas, so as to convert all Government securities into one denomination of coin, namely Company's Rupees. The third was, that the coffers of the Treasury were not so full for many many years (with about fifteen crores), and spoke volumes in favour of Lord Dalhousie's highly prosperous administration, that there were more than ample funds to provide against all contingencies of the Burmese war!" And the Hurkaru of the 12th states, that money was so plentiful in the bazaar, that loans on the deposit of Company's paper, leaving a very moderate margin, might be obtained from respectable shroffs at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum.

SECRETARYSHIP OF THE BANK.—The Court of Directors, in opposition to Lord Dalhousie's view of the matter, have decided in favour of the appointment of a civilian to the secretaryship of the Bank of Bengal.—Hurkaru, May 11.

DEATH OF MR. A. U. C. PLOWDEN.—We regret to announce the death of Mr. A. U. C. Plowden, of the Bengal Civil Service. Mr. Plowden was suddenly seized with apoplexy on the afternoon of the 30th ult., and continued insensible till his death, which took place the same evening. The deceased gentleman was much and deservedly respected, and his loss will be felt by a large circle of relatives and friends. Mr. G. D. Turnbull, C. S. at present stationed at Seharunpore, is likely to succeed the late Mr. A. U. C. Plowden as Magistrate and Collector of Boolandshahur.

THE SOUTH-EASTERN FRONTIER.—It is a matter of surprise that the Burmese, now that the war has fairly commenced, should not as yet have made any attempt on our south-eastern provinces via the Aeng Pass. They cannot be ignorant of the comparatively weak state of that frontier, and yet they make no demonstration in that quarter. This would lead one to imagine that the Burmese did not join, heart and soul, in the contest with their king. But still we do not think that the Government have any right to count upon the supineness of our adversaries, and that whether attacked or not that frontier ought most undoubtedly to be strengthened by the addition of at least one European corps, besides native infantry and artillery. It is true, that were an attack made, we should no doubt be able eventually to repel our foes; but to allow a single Burmese soldier to set foot on British ground, would be a fault on the part of the Indian government, which it would be difficult to excuse. Our present force, stationed in Arakan and Assam, consists of the Sylhet light infantry, the Assam corps, the Arakan local battalion, the 67th N. I. (about to be relieved by the 5th M. N. I.) together with the 38th light infantry at Daka. This force, unaided by Europeans, cannot but be considered totally inadequate for the defence of these important provinces, and yet it is all we have to oppose to any troops the Burmese may choose to march upon Calcutta.—Lahore Chronicle, May 8.

THE 38TH N. I.—A local contemporary lately published a report of disturbances having taken place in the 38th N. I., on the receipt of the order for the dismissal of eight men who made themselves prominent in the affair at Barrackpore. No such disturbance occurred, nor was there anything to justify the report. The order was received at camp Roodpore on the 20th April, at 4 p.m. At 6 p.m. the same day it was read at a parade ordered for the publication of the sentence of a court martial on one of the sepoys. The culprits being called one by one, were ordered to take off their accoutrements, and this they did without a word. Not a word was heard in the whole corps, and the men went to their lines in the most orderly manner. Next morning the regiment marched into Dacca, without having lost a man on the way from Barrackpore. Three companies are, we hear, to go to Sylhet, Capt. Nepean, Lieut. Peile, and Ens. Lestrangle going with them.—Bengal Hurkaru, May 1.

BRIGADIER LLOYD.—We understand that there is some intention at head quarters of permitting Brigadier Lloyd, C.B., commanding at Agra, to retain his brigade a year beyond the period when, according to regulation, his tour on the staff should expire. Colonel Lloyd was brought on the brigade staff on the 21st January, 1848, drawing his pay from the 17th February, and his tour will therefore expire at the commencement of '53, but if the intention above alluded to is carried out, and he is allowed a sixth year, his period of command will, of course, be extended to '54. We do not approve of this method of rewarding merit; it can only be effected by punishing some one perhaps equally deserving with the officer reaping the benefit. It is robbing Peter to pay Paul. Because A is a good officer, shall B, who is, perhaps, equally deserving, be deprived of the rank and station he has a right to expect, that the former may be rewarded? As the Bengal army is now constituted, the retention of an officer in a brigade command beyond the five years allotted for the tour, inflicts an injury on all those below him, but more especially on such who from their seniority are more immediately affected by the arrangement. We trust, therefore, that the intention we have above alluded to may not be carried out, however deserving Brigadier Lloyd may have proved himself.—Englishman, May 8. The Englishman contained the information of its being probable that Brig. Lloyd would be permitted to enjoy an extra year upon the staff instead of going out as customary, when his incumbency should end according to the rule of the service. In the sound view which our contemporary takes of the matter, we heartily concur. The Governor General is setting the regulations he is bound to maintain, at defiance as fast as he can, and doing all in his power to alter their conditions. To Sir W. Gilbert was given "another year;" to Brig. Wheeler is given "another year;" and now Brig. Lloyd is to shew us how the indulgence, all partial and damaging as it is to the service at large, may be continued ad infinitum to suit the purposes, or the personal regards of the people at army head quarters. The unfairness of this proceeding speaks, trumpet-tongued, to the understanding of all military men.—Hurkaru, May 10.

SUPPRESSION OF DACOITY.—We are happy to see that Mr. Wauchope has been gazetted as commissioner for the suppression of dacoity in the six districts around Calcutta, in which crime has latterly increased to so insufferable a degree. The simple promulgation of the fact, that Government has at length taken the field in earnest against these miscreants, and has appointed a public officer to the exclusive duty of ferreting them out, and breaking up their organization, will of itself do much to restore peace and safety to these disturbed districts. This duty could not have been confided to one in whom the public has greater confidence, or who is better adapted by natural aptitude, and official experience for the energetic performance of it.—Friend of India.

THE NAGPORE PRESIDENCY.—We understand that the emoluments of the office of President of the court of Nagpore have been reduced from fifty-five to fifty thousand Company's rupees per annum. This reduction has, we are told, been carried out since the appointment of Mr. C. G. Mansel, the present incumbent.—Hurkaru, May 7.

SYLHET.—The Hurkaru understands that the Sylhet light infantry battalion are to be immediately equipped with a supply of percussion fusils, shot and shell, &c.; as it is expected that corps will have to sustain a brush with the Burmese.

MAJOR D. F. EVANS.—The Benares Recorder understands that a court of inquiry has been ordered to assemble at Ghazepore to investigate charges brought against Major D. F. Evans, of the 16th Grenadiers, sub-assistant in the Stud Department, by his superior officer Major Sherer, superintendent of the Central Stud.

CAPT. OUSELEY.—We have been informed that the sentence passed by the Court-Martial on Capt. Ouseley, of the 50th regiment N.I., is a reprimand; but that as the Commander-in-Chief does not approve of the sentence, his Excellency deems it inexpedient to inflict any further reprimand than will be conveyed by the promulgation of the proceedings in General Orders.

CAPTAIN NUTHALL has been ordered to proceed, and probably has already proceeded, to Sandoway, for the purpose of planning a defensive work for that place. This is of course only a precautionary measure, as the Burmese are likely to have quite enough to do to keep their own, instead of going coquetting with our frontier posts.—Hurkaru, May 8.

AMMUNITION.—We understand that the indent last received for the supply of ammunition for the troops in Burmah was so large that the arsenal here was unable to meet the entire demand immediately, and orders have in consequence been sent on to Madras to forward ammunition stores without delay to the scene of hostilities.—Hurkaru, May 11.

LAHORE.—We regret much to learn that the hospital of H.M.'s 96th regiment shows an increase of sickness since their removal to Meean Meer, which may probably be attributed to the prevailing heat during the last few days. They left Anarkulee with 130 sick. On Friday last the number had risen to 142, of which 96 were fever cases. The foot artillery have also a large proportion of men in hospital.—Lahore Chronicle, May 12.

A serious fracas has occurred between two young officers of the 24th N. I., on detached command at Azimgurb. On its being reported to the commanding officer of the regiment, he placed them both under arrest, and ordered them to proceed forthwith to regimental head-quarters, with a view to the matter being investigated by a court of enquiry. This affair may probably bring into requisition the services of the new Judge Advocate-General.—Benares Recorder, May 1.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

VISITS TO KASHMEER.

Notification.—By the Board of Administration.—Revised Rules for the guidance of officers and other travellers visiting Kashmeer and the dominions generally of Maharaja Goolab Sing. Dated Lahore, 24th April, 1859.

1.—Presents of every description must be rigidly refused, and every article supplied by the local authorities paid for at the market rate.

2.—Koolees employed in carrying baggage, or for other purposes, to be settled with as in our provinces, daily, and to receive three Company's annas for every march of ten miles, and half an anna for every one and a half mile above ten.

3.—No interference is to be offered to Kardars, Thanadars, or others, servants or subjects of the Maharaja, and no calls to be made on them, except in decided emergencies, and in such cases payments to be made at the rates demanded, which, if exorbitant, to be reported to the Secretary at Lahore.

4.—If by accident, or otherwise, a traveller or his servants, be brought in contact with the Maharaja, his son, nephews, or any of his agents, they must remember they are travelling in the dominions of an independent sovereign, and must treat him and his officers with respect, and be guided by, and conform to, the local laws and usages.

5. In regard to carriers and traders, travellers should act as they would in the British territory. Where there are bazars, or shops, their servants should go to them, and not force grain dealers to attend at their tents. Travellers proceeding to Ladak, and other places where food is not procurable, should take supplies and carriages with them, and should not make demands on the Maharaja's servants, or be any way dependent on them. Mules are the best carriage, and will make travellers independent of local aid.

6. Officers proceeding by way of Bhimber, will obtain a servant of Maharaja Goolab Sing to accompany them, on application to the police station, at that place, and at the Jumoo police station if they proceed by the latter road. All references to the local authorities to be made through these servants of the Maharaja; but payment of koolees, &c. should not be made through them, but in their presence, by travellers themselves.

7.—Only two roads are authorised as routes for European visitors, namely, that via Bhimber, and that by Poonah, both leaving the plain in the neighbourhood of Jelum. Bhimber is recommended for all travellers, but as the road over the Peer Punjal is not open till May, Poonah is mentioned as open in April, but the road is difficult, and is not recommended. All other roads, including that through Hazara, are forbidden.

8.—It will be the duty of the board to report any officer, or traveller, infringing any of these rules, which are passed under the orders of Government.

9.—It is positively prohibited to take away "rusud" or supplies, without payment, (except on the first and last day of a visitor's stay at Kashmeer, when it may happen that rusud is sent expressly by the Maharaja).

10.—Every officer applying for permission to visit Kashmeer, should state in his application that he has engaged, or will engage, before proceeding, a sufficient number of panies or mules for the conveyance of his baggage.

MADRAS.

THE FIFTH NIZAM'S CAVALRY.

THE following are the remarks made by General Fraser, the Resident at the Nizam's court, upon the trial of the rissaldar in the 5th Nizam's Cavalry, who was fully and honourably acquitted of the five charges preferred against him, and whose case has excited so much interest at this presidency:—

"In bringing these proceedings to a conclusion, the duty is now imposed upon me of stating my entire concurrence in the opinion of the Court, expressed in its remarks on the trial of Jemadar Abid Khan, that there is strong presumption of a conspiracy having been formed, supported by false evidence, for the purpose of criminating Rissaldar Zoolficar Ali Beg, and other officers and men of the 5th regiment Nizam's Cavalry, principally, as it appears to me, with the base and sordid view of promoting the interests of the leading parties among the conspirators, by the removal of those persons from the regiment to whose rank and offices they expected eventually to succeed.

"As united for the furtherance of this scheme, and directly implicated in it, the Court has designated the undermentioned individuals: Jemadar Ushrukh Khan, Duffadars Ghoolam Mahomed Khan and Hakim Beg, Naib Duffadars Sha Jehan Khan, Shaik Mahomed Fazil, and Shaw Mahomed Khan; Silladars Shaik Kulloo and Nuttee Khan, Bargeers Mirza Mustapha Beg, Moola Bux Laul Khan, Jaffer Ali Khan, Gurreeb Sha Beg, Ali Bahadoor Khan, Aluff Khan, 2nd Cavalry, and Esa Koolde Beg, Mutsudies Shaik Abdool Ryheem and Koveeram. An attentive consideration of the proceedings on the several trials in which these persons have more or less borne a prominent part, has not only suggested to my mind a presumption, but has impressed upon it the absolute conviction, that the whole of the above-mentioned parties have been guilty of the disgraceful and infamous conduct imputed to them.

"There may be varying shades of criminality in the guilt of these several persons; but as it would be a disgrace to the Contingent that even the least culpable among them should remain in its ranks, the whole of the eighteen individuals above enumerated are hereby summarily dismissed from the Nizam's service.

"The 5th Nizam's Cavalry being thus cleared of these evil characters, the continued presence of any one of whom in a regiment would be sufficient to bring discredit on it, I regard the 5th cavalry as being restored to the honourable position it has ever held in the Contingent, and completely vindicated from that reproach which was temporarily attached to it by the machinations of a guilty party.

"I therefore cancel the order issued by me in the month of August last for the stoppage of promotion in the regiment, and desire that it be resumed from the date of the promulgation of these orders. I fully concur in the judgment expressed by the Court in the 4th para. of its remarks on the trial of Zoolficar Ali Beg, that there was nothing in the statement therein alluded to to affect in the slightest degree the honourable character of Captain Sutherland Orr.

"The whole of the officers and men whose attendance has been required at Bolaram during the recent trials will proceed forthwith to join their respective stations.

"Captain Commandant Yates is relieved from the performance of all military duty pending the receipt of orders from the Government of India, and in the mean time he is permitted to reside at any place he may choose to select for that purpose, within the Nizam's dominions. Renewed discussion or agitation among the officers or men of the Contingent, whether European or native, of any question connected with the recent trials is positively prohibited; if any circumstance connected with these trials, or any question arising out of them, shall seem to require communication to superior authority, it must be represented direct to headquarters, for the consideration and orders of the Resident, who will judge of the nature of the case, and give instructions regarding it accordingly.

"The Court, of which Major FitzGerald was president, is dissolved; and I have to express my highest approval of the manner in which it has conducted its proceedings. It has exhibited during the whole course of its elaborate inquiry those united qualifications of untiring patience, exemption from prejudice, and sagacity in the conduct of the embarrassed questions submitted for its investigations, which were absolutely necessary with a view to their elucidation, and without which it had been vain to expect that a satisfactory conclusion would ever have been attained.

"(Signed) J. S. FRASER, Resident.

"Hydrabad Residency, 8th April, 1852."

SALT THANNADARS.—Government, it is said, propose to raise the salaries of the salt thannadars to Rs. 100 per month, or thereabouts. The resolution is a wise one, though it comes so late in the day. In each district where the salt manufacture is carried on there are, we believe, one or two kotars, or places where the salt is piled for sale. About sixty or seventy heaps compose a kotar; every heap being held to contain twenty garce. The kotar is in the charge of a thannadar, who draws a munificent salary, averaging Rs. 33 or Rs. 40 per mensem. The difficulties in the way of getting at an accurate process for either weighing or measuring salt, with the unavoidable wastage to be allowed for, afford too fair a chance of a little lucrative speculation to be let slip by a Hindu functionary. He duly improves it, with the assistance of an easy-going collector, somewhat after the following fashion. In heaping the salt, a couple of garce over and above the regulated quantity somehow manage to find their way into each stack. In due course of time the day of official measurement arrives, and with it the collector or his able assistant. At a judicious distance from the saline mounds the huzoor's tent is pitched, and from beneath its ample canopy is witnessed the mysterious operation of ascertaining the precise quantity available for revenue. A wastage of from one to two garce in each heap is duly reported, and the thannadar becomes responsible for the returns on eighteen or eighteen and a half garce; thus leaving a comfortable margin of about a couple of garce on each stack for his individual benefit.—Athenaeum, May 6.

BEARERS.—The Madras Circulator asserts positively that the local government has seized and imprisoned "hundreds" of men in the Penitentiary, with the view of sending them to Rangoon. The building is guarded by sentinels, and the poor bearers are delivered up to the tender mercies of the police. According to the same authority, no attempt whatever was made to induce them to go willingly, and this in the Madras presidency, where half the population are men without caste, and consequently without any religious prejudices against the sea. We presume the truth of this almost incredible story is, that the men had received advances, with which they were very likely to make off. Even in this case, however, the measure must be considered rather "strong," and the narrative will by no means increase the popularity of the war in England.—Friend of India.

THE MOPLAHS.—The Malabar correspondent of the Englishman gives the following as an illustration of the difficulty the judicial officers experience in dealing with this class of rioters:—"One of the ringleaders of the last disturbance, a rich Moplah, called Cotally Abdoolah, who is now under trial, has started objections to being tried by Mr. Frere, the session judge at Tellicherry, stating that the judge's mind is prejudiced against him, and that the magistrate (Mr. Robinson) who investigated his case, and committed him to trial, is Mr. Frere's brother-in-law, and besides that the investigation, prior to committing him, was carried on by Mr. Robinson in the present judge's house; for the validity of such refusal to be tried, Cotally Abdoolah quotes Regulations."

THE MACAULAY CODE, we understand, will very shortly become the law of the land, Mr. Peacock having brought out the amended draft in his portmanteau. But few of Mr. Bethune's additions will be retained, it is said. We shall be curious to see what success has been achieved in the way of removing the objections made to the Code on its first appearance in the pages of the Gazette.—Athenaeum, May 13.

TRANSPORTATION FOR LIFE OF A MERCHANT'S CLERK.—The Madras presidency has lately exhibited one of those examples of motiveless crime, which every now and then puzzle philosophers. Mr. Mackertich was for thirty-five years employed as a book-keeper in the house of Messrs. Binny and Co., and was considered a highly honest and respectable man. Some months ago, however, he absconded with a few thousand rupees, and reached Calcutta in safety, but almost immediately returned to Madras and surrendered himself. He was tried in the Supreme Court, found guilty, and condemned to "transportation for life," a punishment almost too heavy for the offence. One paper says, he is to be transported to the Tenasserim Provinces, but the 9th section of Act XIII. of 1850, the Breach of Trust Act, under which he was convicted, specially provides that the convict shall be sent out of the territories of the East-India Company.—Friend of India.

MR. KIGHT, the aeronaut who recently exhibited in Calcutta, has lately made a successful ascent in Mysore, to the boundless delight of the people and the rajah, who has, according to the Madras Spectator, remunerated him with truly Oriental liberality. The surprise of the natives is said to have been extreme, and many of them quietly accounted for the feat by ascribing divine attributes to Mr. Kight. Perhaps we may yet hear of a shrine being erected to the king of the air!

ARRIVAL OF THE HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE 51st N.I.—The Athenaeum of May 11th notices the arrival of the head-quarters of the 51st regt. N.I., under the command of Lieut. Col. E. Measiter, at Madras, from Singapore, in the Hugh Lindsay steamer.

THE TANJORE BOND COMMISSION has commenced to sit; good luck betide the hatching. In connection with this circumstance we may mention a rumour, that ill-health will compel the Accountant-General to take leave of absence to the Cape for a couple of years. How very unfortunate! The public will sincerely sympathize in that officer's disappointment on the failure of his health at so critical a time.—Athenaeum, May 6.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

THE LATE MAJOR OAKES, MADRAS ARTILLERY.

Fort St. George, May 11, 1852.—In nominating a successor to Major Oakes as director of the Artillery Depot, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council desires to express the deep regret with which he has received the report of that officer's death.

Major Oakes's whole course of service was distinguished by the singular activity and unceasing labour with which he devoted himself to every subject belonging to his profession, rendering his death a loss, not only to his immediate regiment, but to the service at large.

Major Oakes died, as he had lived, in the energetic discharge of his duty.

BOMBAY.

THE LONDON MAIL of April 24th arrived at Bombay May 21st, per Auckland.

MR. LAWRIE, late an ensign in the 5th Bombay N.L.I., has embraced Mahomedanism. He was dismissed from the army for breaking his arrest. Since then he has been unable to obtain any permanent means of subsistence. He offered himself in vain as a groom to a civil servant. His desperate circumstances seem to have tempted him to try his fortune with the Mahomedans, as he has been left to starve by his fellow-Christians.—Hurthurs.

NATIVE JOURNALS.—There seems to be no end of new native journals, or journals in native interests, about to be brought into existence amongst us in Bombay. We have heard of a Mahratta paper being in contemplation, while those already in existence can barely manage to hold their heads above water. On the 1st of May is to appear the Parsee Reformer, which opens with a subscription list of three hundred. Its editor and proprietor is, we are told, the brother of the celebrated Nowrojee, of the Chabook,—a man with large experience of Parsee virtues and failings, and who will spare no labour in lauding the one and decrying the other. The number of Goozeratte publications is fast increasing,—an indisputable evidence of the Parsees being given to reading, at all events. We wish them all success—there is still ample room for another score,—providing they confine themselves to legitimate journalism, and eschew abuse and foul language towards their opponents and mankind in general.—B. Times, May 1.

A MEETING OF THE ATTORNEYS practising before the Supreme Court took place in the rooms of the Grand Jury on the 27th April, to take into consideration the new scale of fees just promulgated by the Supreme Court, which are not only much lower than anything to be found in India, but meet with no parallel in point of lowness at home. This is the second reduction in the scale of charges that has within a short period been made at Bombay, and, at the rates hereafter proposed to be allowed, the lawyers seem to think that the profession will be abandoned. The Court is said here to have pushed matters to an extreme, for fear of encountering the mischiefs that have overtaken the profession at Madras, where, in consequence of the extravagance of law charges, the Supreme Court has been abandoned. The attempts hitherto made to reduce law charges at Bombay have all been followed by a large increase in the amount of cases tried and in that of the money expended on law. On the present occasion, reductions are said to have been pushed so far that no amount of increase could make practice remunerative. The Court may have erred in the matter—very possibly: the personalities and abuse with which in certain quarters it is loaded—not by the attorneys, we can readily believe—and the mean personal motives ascribed to the Chief Justice, seem indefensible, and likely to produce an effect on the public mind the very opposite of that intended.—Ibid.

THE INDIAN MARRIAGE ACT has now been in force for three months, and about a dozen registrars are scattered up and down the Bombay presidency, yet not a single marriage, we believe, has yet been solemnized under its provisions in Western India. This is rather remarkable, considering the anxiety that was previously manifested on the subject by the different denominations of Christians for whose benefit the Act was passed. The Dis-senters of India seem, indeed, to have been more anxious to obtain the recognition of their right to have their marriages solemnized according to their own forms and ceremonies, than they are to avail themselves of the privilege now that they possess it.—Ibid, May 5.

BABA FURKEY.—The Bombay Telegraph, May 22, referring to Baroda affairs, gives the substance of a petition sent home by one Baba Furkey, a British subject, native of Nassick, who seems to have been cheated, robbed, threatened, swindled, and misused in every way, till he sought the British territory for safety from oppression. The editor observes at the close of the narrative: "Nothing can surpass the atrocious system of swindling, lying, and perjury, and the abominable corruption, which seems to taint the air of Goozerat on every side, which it discloses."

SURVEY OF THE COAST.—Commander James Rennie has returned from his survey on the coast to the northward; his examinations have extended from the mouth of the Tappee to Damoo, and have, we are assured, been most minute and laborious, and most fertile in results of importance.—Times, May 21.

A RUMOUR has been current for some days past that two European regiments (86th and 83rd) and four native corps are to be sent round to Rangoon from Bombay in the end of September; but as we cannot trace it to any authentic source, we give it as a rumour merely.—Bombay Times, May 22.

Two Cases of crim. con., and one of breach of promise of marriage, are likely to come for trial before the Supreme Court of Bombay ere very long.—Telegraph, May 22.

MAJOR E. WHICHELO, 9th N.I., and deputy commissary-general, retires on a lieutenant-colonel's pension on the 18th inst. He will be succeeded in the deputy commissary-generalship by Major Pope, the senior assistant, from Poona.

DR. KAYES.—We regret to find that the very severe accident that befel Dr. Kayes while ascending Rangoon river, has compelled him to quit the squadron. He is now on his way to Bombay via Madras, for the benefit of his health, being disabled for the performance of the active field-duty for which he so gallantly volunteered in February.—Bombay Times, May 21.

THE BAZZA BHAH.—From Gwalior we learn that her highness the Bazza Bha, who has for some time past been residing at Osjein, the capital of Rajpootana, has deputed her minister, Govindrow Jeyram, to the durbar, with a present of the enormous sum of twelve lacs of rupees (120,000*l.*) on the occasion of her grand-daughter, who is married to his Highness Jyajeerow Scindia, having attained the age of puberty.—Poona Observer, May 15.

LIEUT. WILKINSON.—The reported death of Lieut. Wilkinson, 16th N.I., by a tiger, near Asseerghur, has, we observe, been formally contradicted by Colonel Duff, of that regiment. We mentioned its untruth a few days since.—Bombay Times, May 22.

TIGER SHOOTING.—Accidents through tiger-shooting have been more numerous this season than we remember to have before heard of. Some short time since a young officer was very seriously hurt by one near Asseerghur—he was not killed, as was affirmed, but very sadly torn. Mr. Elliot, of the 1st Lancers, had his arm fearfully mauled; and at the hills ten days since a shikarree had his arm smashed at the shoulder. Near Baroda a splendid tiger had been roused and was making straight for a gallant young sportsman, who lodged a bullet in him on his advance; he still came bounding on, when all the shikarrees fled, leaving the party in question with only one barrel loaded. Luckily this took effect—the brute rolled over, but immediately got on his feet and turned off at right angles, when, wounded as he was, he made one tremendous spring at a poor shikarree, and with a single stroke broke his arm, dislocated the vertebrae of his back and neck, and of course killed the man in an instant. The distance cleared was found on measurement to be no less than fifteen feet. The animal was now nearly exhausted, and another shot closed his career.—Bombay Times, May 19.

SINGAPORE.

We hear of wars and rumours of wars on every side. The preparations for war between Tringanu and Pahang, which we formerly noticed, are said to be advancing apace. Actual hostilities are stated to prevail between the countries of Acheen and Dilli. The people of Batu Bara are asserted to be at war with the inhabitants of the interior, and intestinal disturbances prevail in Perak, some of the principal chiefs being up in arms against each other.—Free Press, April 9.

LABUAN.

Accounts have been received from Labuan to the end of March. In a former issue we noticed that a native of Bruni was carried off by an alligator whilst passing the Gingara stream, on the road from town to the coal-mines. Since then, it appears that two natives, in a small canoe, while crossing the river, were attacked by an alligator, which seized the canoe in its mouth with great violence before discovering its mistake; the inmates, however, managed to escape. Our correspondent writes, that in Beach-road, between the court-house and Sandy Point, that is, in the central part of the town, brushwood has grown to the height of seven feet, in which snakes abound. There does not appear to be a disposition on the part of the officials to encourage early rising, the police magistrate seldom opening his court before noon; and at Coal Point, where the bulk of the natives reside, there is no justice of the peace, necessitating witnesses and others to proceed to the police magistrate's office upon the most trivial occasions. Twenty-seven lots of country land were to be sold by the Government on April 1st. Each lot averaged from 12 to 13 acres. One or more of these lots will, it is said, be purchased by a Chinese, who contemplates manufacturing sago.—Straits Times, April 20.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

At a meeting of the Bombay branch Royal Asiatic Society, on the 13th May, a Government letter, calling for a report of a metallic vessel and coins, found near Hydrabad in Sindh, which were submitted to the society, and had been handed over to the Rev. Dr. Wilson, to whom these articles had been given for examination, was read, and the following is Dr. Wilson's report upon them:—

"The drinking-cup, which is of copper, is of no great antiquity, if I may judge from its form. The rupee is one of the Moghul emperors of Hindustan, of Serokshir, about 1713, A.D., I should think, though I am not certain of the king's name. It bears that the coin was struck 'both in silver and gold.' The copper coins, if I may judge from their general appearance, belong partly to the Ghanzevid dynasty, and partly to the Moghul dynasty. With a single exception they are illegible. I agree with Mr. Ersars in considering the one of which some portion can be made out to belong to Arshan Shah Ghazni. This will bring it to the date of about A.D. 1115. The hexagonal piece I have found to be of lead. It has, I think, been the seal of some charter."

A letter from A. Richardson, Esq., deputy secretary to Government, general department, intimates that three cases of antiquities, received from Commander Jones, I.N., surveyor in Mesopotamia, would be handed over to the society, by the Commander-in-Chief, I.N., for the society's examination and report as to their nature, and the desirableness of sending them home to the museum of the India House.

These antiquities consist of an hour-glass-shaped coffin, made of mud, in which were found traces of a skeleton, and over which were several bricks with cuneiform inscriptions, raised in a roof-like form; also some bricks of a like kind, and a large urn made of mud, which was found inverted over them; in the cavity thus formed were also found some human teeth and a little dust, supposed to be the residue of the other parts of the skeleton.

These remains were excavated from a mound in the plains of Ghehara, which is supposed to represent the site of the ancient Kilwatha.

In his strange hotch-potch, entitled Thirty-five Years in the East, lately published, Dr. Honigberger has related some facts which are not without their value in science. The following incident, which happened whilst he was at Lahore, in the service of Sheer Sing, the Maharajah of the Sikhs, settles the sometimes disputed question whether the human system can be protected against, and made to resist the effects of, the poison of venomous reptiles; and, in this case, the specific is indicated. We give the details in the doctor's own words:—

"About the same time, under Sheer Sing's administration, a faqueer struck me from behind with a stone, whilst I was passing the bazaar at Lahore; I was told that he was insane, and had already behaved in the same rude manner to some sirdars. On this account I caused him to be imprisoned, placed a chain upon his legs, and had him taken to my powder-mill to work. I gave him good food, administered remedies, and prohibited him from smoking churrus or eating opium, to which habits he was previously addicted. Scarcely was he a few days in the mill when I was informed that he had been bitten by a serpent, and at once sent him some medicaments which I judged likely to prevent the ill effects of the venom. On the same afternoon I visited him, and found him in good spirits. I at first attributed the circumstance to the effect produced by the remedies I had sent, but was surprised on hearing that he had not taken them, he being of opinion that the venom of the serpent was incapable of affecting him, inasmuch as he had often been bitten by serpents without having sustained any injury. The serpent which wounded him on this occasion was a viper, which he had caught and retained in his possession, and he offered to allow himself to be bitten on the tongue, if I would consent to witness it. At that time, Dr. W. Jameson (now superintendent of the botanical garden at Saharunpore) was on a visit to Lahore, and the maharajah showed him great attention, which induced me to inform the maharajah of the offer made by the faqueer, and I requested him to relate the case to Dr. Jameson, as I felt sure he would be interested in it.

"As for myself, I doubted the truth of the faqueer's assertion, and was persuaded that no European physician would believe it. Accordingly, I was directed to present the faqueer to the doctor, who was at that time stopping at Anarkulle. To test the experiment, I took a fowl with me. The doctor smiled, when I related to him the particulars, and, as I expected, expressed his disbelief of the faqueer's statement. However, the faqueer put his hand over the pot in which the viper was contained, and he was immediately bitten; he afterwards held the fowl near the pot, which was also bitten; but the doctor still appeared to think there was some deception in the matter. I took the fowl home, and placed it beneath a basket, where I found it dead on the following morning; although the faqueer, who was bitten first, was quite well. I then took him, and also the dead fowl, with me, to present them to the maharajah; and having given him a full account of what had been done, informed him that both the faqueer and the fowl had since been under my surveillance. At his request, the faqueer was presented to him. He was accompanied by a mezur (workman), who had just caught a viper, which the faqueer had put into the same pot in which the former had been, and presented it for the inspection of the assembly. Maharajah Sheer Sing asked him whether he would really allow himself to be bitten by venomous serpents, and whether it was true that he would not thereby sustain injury? The faqueer answered in the affirmative, and offered to give immediate proof of it. He uncovered the pot, and was about to present his hand, but the maharajah objected to the serpents which the faqueer had brought with him, and said that he would order some to be procured. He handed to the faqueer seven rupees, which he had just received as nazarana (present), but he immediately gave them to the mezur, saying, "That is a gift of the son of a laundress," and departed. Sheer Sing pretended not to have heard this insulting remark, although it was spoken so loud that every body noticed it; and I felt much annoyed, having been the cause of the introduction of the insolent faqueer. I reprimanded him, and gave orders for his re-imprisonment as a lunatic. He had not yet given the maharajah a proof of his assertion, and consequently had not deserved the reward of seven rupees. The bad consequences of his unready tongue, however, did not fail to overtake him; I did not doubt that Sheer Sing would very soon procure the serpents which he had ordered, and therefore gave instructions to the soldiers who accompanied the faqueer to the mill, to bring him early in the morning to my abode, so that he might be at hand, in case the maharajah should send for us. The next morning the faqueer, on his way to me, met with a friend of his, who inquired where he was going, and why he was fettered? He replied, that he was bound to show Sheer Sing his ability, and at once, as if in bravado, untied the pot which contained his two vipers, and caused himself to be bitten by one of them. Scarcely had he advanced two steps, when he staggered and fell. But he summoned all his strength, and rose again, in order to proceed, but again fell; and not being able to rise a second time, a charpai (stretcher) was brought, to convey him from the bazaar to my house. He was followed by a multitude of curious people, and I caused him to be taken into a neighbouring stable, belonging to the faqueer Chirakooddeen, who went immediately to see the patient, as he was then vomiting blood. Chirakooddeen was of opinion that he could never recover, and the injured faqueer being a Brahmin, he wished me to send him to a termsale (an Indian temple), in order to avoid the unpleasant consequences which might attend his death; but, on mentioning this intention to the patient, he preferred being conveyed to a friend of his, who was living at a tower called Shabburj, where he himself had previously resided; which was accordingly done. I gave him some remedies, and sent him away; but scarcely was he removed from the stable, when the payahs (armed attendants of the durbar) appeared, summoning me to present myself with the faqueer to the durbar. I stated, that he had already received the reward of his insolence, and was not expected to recover; but Sheer Sing, who was probably much annoyed at the epithet, "son of a laundress," dispatched several messengers, ordering me to bring him to the durbar on his bed; and I was obliged to obey. I arrived, however, too late, for the assembly had already left the durbar, and Sheer Sing had departed from the hazoreebagh to the interior of the fortress. On the same day, the faqueer had a swelling on his knee, and diarrhoea; but he soon recovered, and afterwards proved very useful to me, when I began to make my experiments with the serpents, which produced so many curious results, that I sacrificed upwards of two hundred fowls in less than six months. At that time poultry was remarkably cheap at Lahore, the English not having yet occupied that country, and four couple could be purchased for one rupee. The faqueer really possessed the secret of preventing his blood being affected by the bites of venomous reptiles; and, having at length succeeded in obtaining his statement of it, I now present it to the public. The faqueer was an arsenic-eater, and to this reason he ascribed the cause of his remaining unaffected by any serpent's venom. Perhaps he was right, because in India arsenic is an ingredient in various compositions which are recommended as remedies against the bite of serpents. He told me, that, during his stay under my control, he could not procure the poison, and that that was the reason why the viper's bite affected him, which might possibly have been the case."

Captain Smith, in his Narrative of Five Years' Residence in Nepal, gives the following account of the doings of a late rajah of that country:—

"Run Bahadur's Brahmin queen gave birth to three children, and immediately after her last confinement was attacked with small-pox. Run Bahadur became almost frantic; all the hakims (native doctors) were consulted, and large rewards were offered for a perfect recovery. The gods at Nepal were propitiated and consulted. Sacrifices and daily offerings were made to them. The ranees getting worse, all became alarmed, and the king furious. His ministers and doctors then advised that, as the holy city of Benares contained many celebrated men, a deputation should immediately be sent there to fetch as many as could be induced to come to Nepal under promises of large rewards for a cure. These arrived in due time, but all their art was in vain. The small-pox had done its work most effectually, and on the queen's recovery (she having stipulated the king should neither see nor visit her until she was well), she requested her attendants to furnish her with a looking-glass. When she beheld for the first time the dreadful ravages made on her once beautiful face, she became disconsolate, and dismissing her attendants, poisoned herself.

"Upon hearing of her death, Run Bahadur rushed into her apartment, and beholding his once lovely queen a corpse, and dreadfully spotted with the small-pox, he became frantic. He cursed his kingdom, her doctors, and the gods of Nepal, vowing vengeance on all. He first sent for the unfortunate Benares doctors, denounced them as liars and impostors, ordered them to be soundly flogged, and each to have his right ear and nose cut off in his presence. This was duly performed. He then wreaked his vengeance on the gods of Nepal (not even excepting the famous temple at Pas Pat Nath), and after abusing them in the most gross way, he accused them of having obtained from him twelve thousand goats, some hundred weight of sweetmeats, two thousand gallons of milk, &c., under false pretences, and that he would take summary vengeance for having wilfully disfigured his queen. He ordered all the artillery, varying from three to twelve-pounders, to be brought in front of the palace, with all the made-up ammunition at Khatmandoo. The guns were loaded to the muzzle, and down he marched to the head-quarters of the Nepal deities. On arriving at Pas Pat Nath, the guns were drawn up in front of the several deities, honouring the most sacred with the heaviest metal. When the order to fire was given, many of the chiefs and soldiers ran away panic-stricken, and others hesitated to obey the sacrilegious order; and not until several gunners had been cut down, were the guns opened. Down came the gods and goddesses from their hitherto sacred positions; and after six hours' heavy cannonading, not a vestige of the deities remained. Their temples sharing the same fate, the priests ran away confounded, many escaping to the British territory; but those who were not so fortunate were seized, and each deprived of his holy head.

"The Goorkha King now became satisfied, vowing, however, no god should ever again be elevated in his dominions until his departed queen was restored to him. His life after this, as may be supposed, was a short one. The principal chiefs of his court, therefore, who found themselves the objects of his cruel and revengeful persecutions, again formed a conspiracy against the rajah, which was brought to a desperate issue rather prematurely."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, June 29, 1852.

THE slight discussion in the House of Commons last week, originated by a motion of Lord Jocelyn for papers connected with Scinde, will extend and popularize the sympathy which has been for some time past exerting a silent influence upon both branches of the Indian Government on behalf of the ex-Ameers of that country, and which the late discovery of the frauds committed by Ali Moorad, the Ameer of Khyrpore, has tended in some degree to sanction. Nothing is more revolting to English feelings than the spectacle of innocence oppressed; and, under this generous impulse, Lord Jocelyn drew a picture of the characters, the virtues, and the sufferings of those unfortunate princes,—whom he represented as unoffending victims to unnatural enmity and diabolical treachery,—which derives much of its colouring from the fancy. Enough, however, remains to justify a large measure of pity and compassion.

Scinde, from the year 1590 to 1736, was a province of the Mogul empire of India; it then fell under the power of the Calora chiefs, who ruled it, in subordination to the Afghan sovereigns, until 1786, when they were expelled by the chiefs of the Talpoors, a tribe of Belooches, whose dominion had lasted only fifty-seven years when the battle of Meanees transferred the territory to the British.

In the year 1837, the Indian Government, having an eye to the Punjab and to Afghanistan, took advantage of the success attending its interference with Runjeet Sing in favour of the Ameers of Scinde, to "establish British influence on a solid basis" in that country, and proposed a treaty which stipulated, amongst other things, that an accredited British minister should reside at the court of Hyderabad. The Ameers resisted this article, protesting against being "watched and dictated to by an English gentleman;" but the restoration of the Mazaree districts, which had been seized by Runjeet, depending upon the fact of the British Government, the Ameers, after a year's hesitation, yielded the point, and signed the treaty of 1838.

No sooner had this been done, than the British Resident (Colonel Pottinger) was instructed to communicate to the Ameers the tripartite treaty for the restoration of Shah Shooja, who thereby engaged to relinquish all claims of supremacy over Scinde, on condition that the Ameers paid him a sum to be determined by the British Government; and, in making this communication, the Resident was directed to state that the Governor-General expected from the Ameers "some ostensible display of their attachment to British interests," otherwise, it was hinted, the British Government would not oppose any offensive operations which might be commenced against them by their restored master; although the Ameers produced releases, signed by Shah Shooja, renouncing all claims upon Scinde.

The effect of this communication was to inspire the Ameers with very natural alarm, and with distrust of our intentions; and they opened secret negotiations with Candahar and Persia. The discovery of these intrigues was followed by a denunciation on the part of the British Government of the "duplicity" of the Hyderabad court, a threat of hostilities, and a direction to the Resident "to take the most energetic measures for placing our relations with Scinde upon a more satisfactory and secure footing." A British corps was directed to occupy Shikarpore; plans for subdividing the territory possessed jointly by the Ameers were discussed, with the view of creating separate interests amongst them, and it was determined that a British subsidiary force should be maintained in Scinde. A new treaty was accordingly tendered to the Ameers, the stipulations of which included the admission of a British force, to be stationed at Tatta, the expense to be defrayed by the Ameers.

Exasperated by these reiterated demands, the princes summoned the Belooches, and prepared for resistance; but Sir John Keane, with the army of the Indus, was upon the spot, and the Ameers were sensible that they had no alternative but ruin or submission. They chose the latter; all the points were conceded, and in 1839 a new treaty was signed.

The Ameers appear now to have determined that their best policy was to cast aside all suspicion of the British Government, and to act as real friends. They declared that their "eyes had been opened;" that they had erred through ignorance of our good faith, and they professed submission to the pleasure of the Governor-General of India.

The treaty, on its ratification by the Governor-General, was amended in such a manner as that each Ameer was recognised as head of a principality, whereby the confederacy was virtually dissolved, each chief being bound to refer his differences with the other chiefs to our arbitration. This "amendment" was not calculated to confirm the new feelings of the Ameers, and was not assented to by them without extreme repugnance, and efforts, though ineffectual, to procure a modification.

The death of the elder Ameer, Noor Mahomed, in 1840, and the intrigues of the other Ameers, both of Hyderabad and of Khyrpore, threw great advantages into the hands of the British Government, which, when our troubles in Afghanistan began, intimated that, in case of any faithlessness on the part of either of these princes, he should lose his sovereignty. Such was the tone which, in three short years, our Governor-General was able to assume towards these independent princes!

About this time, Ali Moorad, then Ameer of Meerpore, brother of Roostum Khan, the Ameer of Khyrpore, who was supposed to be our friend, began to mix in these intrigues with the view of aggrandizing himself at the expense of his family. Major Outram had, at this period (1842) become Resident, and he reported that the Ameers of Upper and Lower Scinde entertained projects hostile to us, and awaited only a favourable opportunity to "throw off their allegiance to the British Government;" and he proposed that, as their conduct justified us in "dictating our terms to the Ameers," they should be required to cede Bukkur, Sukkur, and Kurachee, and permission to cut wood for steam-navigation in their shikargahs, or hunting preserves, grating as such a proposal, he admitted, would be to their feelings. These suggestions the Governor-General did not then adopt, recommending that the minds of these princes should be "left in tranquillity for the present." Further representations being, however, made that the Ameers were engaged in hostile intrigues against us, Lord Ellenborough, in September, 1842, instructed Sir Charles Napier, who commanded the army of reserve, that, if ample and convincing evidence could be obtained of the "guilt" of any of the chiefs, it was his intention "to inflict upon them so signal a punishment as should effectually deter others from similar conduct."

Sir Charles, in a paper which he transmitted to the Governor-General, laid down a doctrine which placed the poor Ameers at our feet. "The evident object of the treaties," he says, "is to favour our Indian interests, by the abolition of barbarism, by ameliorating the condition of society, and by obliging the Ameers to do, in compliance with treaties, that which honourable and civilized rulers would do of their own accord." To the three places named by Major Outram, he added Shikarpore and Subzulkote, all of which he recommended that we should "take for our own," in the interests of humanity and of the British Government!

Swayed by the opinions of Sir C. Napier, Lord Ellenborough at length authorized him to name a commissioner to negotiate a new treaty with the Ameers, which deprived them of the right of coining money,—the mark of sovereignty,—gave the British Government power to cut timber in the shikargahs, and ceded Kurachee and Tatta to the British Government, and Subzulkote to the Nawab of Bhaulpore. Sir Charles appointed Major Outram to press this "new arrangement" upon the Ameers, who now beheld their ruin approaching. One of them, Nusseer Khan, whom Colonel Pottinger had represented to be the warmest and sincerest of our friends, wrote to Sir Charles Napier, at this moment, a letter of temperate expostulation, touching in its terms, in which he reminds him they were but a few years back independent sovereigns of the country; that they had yielded every concession asked by the English, in order to secure their friendship and protection, and enjoy peace and quiet.

In the negotiations, the Ameers objected to the new treaty that it was a violation of former stipulations, which they declared they had never infringed. All was unavailing. They affixed their seals to the draft new treaty. The Belooches tribes, however, assembled, and, under the direction of their sirdars, whom the Ameers could not control, attacked the residency, but were crushed in the sanguinary field of Meance.

We have in this narrative simply traced the leading transactions between the Indian Government and the Ameers of Lower Scinde, without reference to any of those secret intrigues in which Ali Moorad is reputed to have played so treacherous a game; and although it is not to be denied that their conduct afforded to an encroaching neighbour all the advantages the latter could desire, it is abundantly clear that no mercy was shown them, and that pretexts were rather sought than neglected for promoting the "interests of humanity," and for "abolishing barbarism," by substituting British authority for that of the Talpoors. Sir Henry Pottinger, who had all along deprecated severe measures towards the Ameers, in 1843 denounced their deposition as "unprincipled and disgraceful."

There seems no reason to doubt that one of the Ameers, Roostum Khan of Khyrpore, fell a victim to the villainy of Ali Moorad, his brother, whose craft, accompanied by forgery, deceived Sir Charles Napier. The conviction of that chief of a fraudulent substitution of a false for a genuine document, recently proclaimed to the world, justifies every presumption against him. It is to be recollected, too, that the Belooches sirdars did not determine to fight the British until they found that no pledge had been given that Roostum Khan and the Ameers of Upper Scinde should get back their lands which had been transferred to Ali Moorad. "One of the heaviest charges against the Ameers," said Lord Jocelyn, "was the attack which their troops had made on the British army. He must say, that when he considered their knowledge of the entire innocence of the Ameers, whom they saw so unjustly assailed; their deep feeling of devoted attachment towards their ancient rulers, and their indignant sense of the manner in which their aged chief had been treated by his unnatural brother, with the concurrence and co-operation of the British Government, he must say, he could find no fault with the Scindians for rushing into the field in defence of their own honour and that of their rulers."

Of the private character of the deposed Ameers we shall say nothing, because it forms no part of the question. By some they are described as amiable and exemplary; by others, barbarous, selfish, and cruel. Lieutenant Eastwick reports a conversation he had with Noor Mahomed, who, when he urged the benefits which would result from the introduction of manufactures and agriculture amongst the people, replied, "What are the people to us? what care we, if they pay us our revenues, whether they are poor or rich? Give us our hunting preserves and our enjoyments free from interruption, and that is all we require."

This, however, we repeat, does not affect the question, which is, whether the Ameers have been treated with justice or over-punished. We rather incline to the latter opinion.

THE attention of political readers is now concentrated upon the advertisement columns of the newspapers throughout the United Kingdom; and to those who read these vehicles of what has been termed the "daily bread of the mind" principally for amusement, the most amusing portions of the journals are the addresses of candidates for seats in the new Parliament. The strange position and relations of parties; the transition state of some of the great political questions of the day; the embarrassment in which candidates, new as well as old, find themselves through the incongruity of past votes or declarations with present opinions, and with the prospects "looming in the future," all contribute to make the addresses to constituents very entertaining, and sometimes very droll, compositions. In one we see a fierce free trader soothing an agricultural constituency, smarting under losses, with some of the generalities of the adverse party; immediately after this address we read another from a red-hot protectionist, sighing, indeed, over the departed corn-law, but not offending the prejudices of the free-trade electors by hinting at the possibility of its revival, whilst tickling the ears of his own partisans with such phrases as "careful revision of our commercial tariff," and "upholding the staple interests of the country, without unduly fostering any." In one place we have an anti-papist, addressing a constituency strongly impregnated with the Roman Catholic element, speaking with respect of Maynooth College, and justifying his vote against it by a desire to see the institution placed by a searching inquiry above all reproach. In another we read tirades against Roman superstition, and encomia upon the purity of the reformed faith, from one to whom either church is, perhaps, a matter of indifference. Reform of the representation, reform of our financial system, reform of the law,—reform in every shape,—by the skilful use of terms, can be professed by candidates of all shades of opinion, so as to lead the reader of their addresses to believe that upon these points one man is ready to go as far as another. All prescribe to themselves as boundaries "the principles of our glorious constitution;" all desire to shun excess, and manifest the utmost horror at the extremes of socialism and revolution.

These dramatic displays, as they are regarded by a calm looker-on, have their effect, and, reinforced judiciously with the oily words and cordial grasp of a man of rank, accomplish their object,—that of gaining votes. The practice is of old standing, and may lose some of its intrinsic vice through its antiquity. The ancient Romans do not appear to have issued addresses; but their candidates practised the ambitus, or canvassing; the assiduitas, or personal solicitation; and the prensatio, or taking the voter kindly by the hand. Even a mode of treating, called by the gentle name of benignitas, and a species of bribery, termed liberalitas, were not illegal, until they degenerated into largitiones.

The result of the general election, now imminent, it is extremely difficult even to speculate upon. That the Whigs have sadly damaged themselves in public estimation as a party,—through their later measures, and especially by the manner in which they slipped from power,—their own advocates are not slow to admit. That the present ministers have made a skilful use of the advantages thrown into their hands, and stand, upon the whole, in a better position than when they undertook the administration, is generally acknowledged. On most of the great questions respecting which the passions of the people are likely to be put in motion, the opinions of the ministers lean to the popular side; and as they profess to be ready, upon the alternative of free trade or protection, to obey the wishes of the constituency, it would not be a matter of much surprise to us if the supporters of Lord Derby's government should form a majority in the new Parliament. Even in Mr. Cobden's long and laboured address to the electors of the West Riding of Yorkshire, besides a passing reference to "the imperfection of our electoral system," the only topic upon which he dwells is free trade,—a pretty sure proof that, in his opinion, upon the other parts of their policy, the principles of the present ministry are in unison with the sentiments of the bulk of the people.

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

THE BURMESE WAR.

London Gazette of June 15.

India House, June 14, 1852.

The following despatches have been this day received at the East-India House:—

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Secret Committee of the East-India Company.

(Extract.)

Fort William, May 3, 1852.

We have the honour to transmit to you a copy of the further papers regarding Rangoon affairs.

In these documents our sentiments are expressed in warm, but not exaggerated, terms; for, in truth, no language could be employed too strong to convey the praise which is justly due to the gallantry, the fortitude, the patience, temper and discipline which have been exhibited, during the several operations on the coast, by all branches of the combined force, and by those who have led them so well.

We beg most respectfully and most earnestly to commend the services of these brave men, according to their several ranks and recorded merit, to the gracious consideration of her Majesty the Queen, and to the approbation and favour of the Court of Directors.

We have, &c.

(Then follows the "Notification" which appeared in the last Mail, p. 349.)

Lieut. General H. Godwin, C.B., commanding the Forces in Ava, Arracan, and Tenasserim Provinces, to C. Allen, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India.

Rangoon, April 22, 1852.

Sir,—I have the honour to advise you, for the information of the Governor-General of India in Council, that everything remains quiet in this neighbourhood. There are various accounts of the defeated Burmese army, under the late governor of Rangoon, and they tend to the conclusion that he may be retreating up the country with a very small force. The inhabitants of the villages around visit Rangoon, and bring in various articles for sale. The old inhabitants are partially settling themselves in the vicinity of the old town, and great numbers of Burmese are in our employ as coolies.

It has been reported to me that a detachment of the 26th Madras N.I., in garrison at Martaban, had marched against a post occupied by the enemy, which it most spiritedly routed on the 11th inst., without loss; and that on the 14th, the pickets at Martaban were attacked, and the enemy beaten off with great spirit by the same corps, commanded by Capt. Welch, at a very trifling loss. All this will, I have no doubt, subside on the fall of Rangoon becoming known.

I have, &c.

H. GODWIN, Lieut. General Commanding the Forces in Ava, Arracan, and Tenasserim Provinces.

EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of Proprietors of East-India Stock was held on the 23rd June, 1852, at the Company's House, in Leadenhall Street; Sir J. W. Hogg, Bart., Chairman of the Court of Directors, in the chair.

The Minutes of the last General Court were read.

RETURNS, &c.

The Chairman acquainted the Court that certain returns to Parliamentary orders, and accounts of annuities and superannuations granted since the last Court, were laid on the table.

DIVIDENDS.

The Chairman acquainted the Court that the warrants for the payment of the half-yearly dividends would be ready for delivery on the 6th of July.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEES.

The Chairman acquainted the Court that select committees had been appointed by the two Houses of Parliament, to inquire into the operation of the provisions of the Act of the 3rd and 4th of Wm. IV. for the management of the affairs of British India by the East-India Company.

BY-LAWS.

The report of the committee of by-laws was brought up and read. It stated that the by-laws had been duly observed during the past year. The committee of by-laws was then reappointed for the ensuing year.

The Court then adjourned.

EAST-INDIA COLLEGE, HAILEYBURY.

CLOSE OF THE TERM.

Monday (yesterday) being the day appointed for closing the first Term for the year 1852, a deputation from the Court of Directors of the East-India Company visited the College, for the purpose of receiving the Report of the Principal, and of distributing the medals and prizes awarded to the successful competitors in the various branches of Oriental, Classical, and European literature.

A special train left the Shoreditch station of the Eastern Counties Railway at half-past 10 o'clock; and on the arrival of the Directors and the visitors at Haileybury, the distinguished party proceeded to the lodge to pay their respects to the Principal (the Rev. H. Melville). The Directors then repaired to the Council-room, where they received a highly satisfactory Report from the Rev. the Principal.

The Deputation, after receiving the Principal's Report, repaired to the Examination Hall, where the visitors and a considerable number of the students had already assembled.

The chair was occupied by Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., M.P., Chairman of the Honourable Court of Directors, who, together with the following directors, formed the deputation:—Russell Ellice, Esq., Deputy Chairman; William Wigram, Esq.; John Lock, Esq.; Lieut.-General Sir James L. Lushington, G.C.B.; Sir Richard Jenkins, G.C.B.; Sir Henry Willock, K.L.S.; Lieut.-Col. W. H. Sykes; W. H. C. Plowden, Esq., M.P.; Elliot Macnaghten, Esq.; John C. Whiteman, Esq.; Ross D. Mangles, Esq., M.P.; W. J. Eastwick, Esq.; Wm. Dent, Esq.; Major J. A. Moore; Henry Alexander, Esq.; Lieut.-Gen. J. Caulfield, C.B.

Among the visitors were the following:—H. R. H. the Duke of Cambridge, K. G.; His Grace the Duke of Newcastle; Lord Frederick Fitz-Clarence; the Marquess of Normanby; Earl Powis; Lord Elphinstone; Lord De Ros; Lord Wodehouse; Viscount Mahon, M. P.; the Bishop of Oxford; the Hon. Percy Smythe; Right Hon. Vernon Smith, M. P.; Sir Harry Verney, Bart., M. P.; Thomas Baring, Esq.; W. E. Gladstone, Esq., M. P.; Sir Robt. H. Inglis, Bart., M. P.; Sir T. E. Colebrooke, Bart., M. P.; Sir John Herschel, Bart.; Sir John Hall, Bart.; Lieut.-General Sir Chas. Pasley, K.C.B.; Henry Kemble, Esq.; Edward Kemble, Esq.; Colonel Sim; General Barr; Colonel Hardinge; Sir Robert K. Arbuthnot, Bart.; Rev. T. J. Rowell; Rev. A. Meggison; Dr. Colledge; Captain Hogg, &c., &c.

The following civilians at home were also present:—W. H. Woodcock, Esq.; T. P. Woodcock, Esq.; G. M. Ogilvie, Esq.; F. Millett, Esq.; R. Parry Nisbet, Esq.; D. Davidson, Esq.; R. K. Pringle, Esq.; E. H. Lushington, Esq.; G. Campbell, Esq.; W. H. Broadhurst, Esq.; H. T. Ravenshaw, Esq.; J. H. Ravenshaw, Esq.; David Cunliffe, Esq.; J. W. Cherry, Esq.

The Chairman having taken his seat,

Mr. Hooper read the following list of medals, prizes, and other honourable distinctions obtained by the students:—

Mr. Waterfield, who was received with loud applause by his fellow-students, read the Prize Essay on "The Crusades considered in their Political and Social Effects on Europe." The essay, which was able, terse, and logical, traced the history of the Crusades from their origin in the superstitious zeal of the Christian world, roused by the preaching of earnest and eloquent monks, to their final results, shown less in the success of their intention, than in their effect upon the character and institutions of Europe. The essay, which was read with extreme distinctness, concluded with the following eloquent passage on the influence of the Crusades upon the Roman Church, in the bosom of which they had their commencement:—

"We find that where the immediate result of the Crusades is in our view prejudicial, the spirit thereby roused has, in its secret workings, removed the evil, or converted it into good. If the blood and treasure of Christendom were lavishly squandered on the fields of Palestine, the lives and property of the survivors were rendered doubly secure by the augmented strength of the government, and the growing power of the middle classes. If the military fanaticism, then almost universal, proved a bar to progress in peaceful pursuits, our modern literature and traffic may trace their origin to the spirit of energy and activity introduced by these expeditions. If they tended to exalt to an overweening height the dignity of Rome, and contributed to introduce many corruptions into the church, that power was overthrown, and those errors were uprooted in consequence of their very excesses. The evil they occasioned has long passed away, but the good shall spread wider and wider, until the sign of a new crusade shall be impressed upon the foreheads of all men—the emblem of peace and love, not the sign of war and destruction,—until the crescent shall grow dim before the sun in his strength, and all the nations of the earth shall be gathered beneath the shadow of the cross."

The Essayist, on concluding his reading, was hailed with a renewal of the enthusiastic plaudits which welcomed him on his first appearance.

Mr. Chapman read a translation of a passage in Gibbon into Persian. Mr. Chapman was received with enthusiastic applause.

Mr. Waterfield, amidst similar demonstrations, read a translation of some of the first verses in the old ballad of "Chevy Chase," done into Sanscrit verse by himself.

Mr. Chapman (who was again warmly applauded), read a passage from the History of Hindustan, translated by himself into Hindoostanee.

The Chairman then delivered the medals and prizes to the successful students.

In presenting the two medals and six prizes which had been awarded to Mr. Waterfield, the chairman addressed him as follows—Allow me to congratulate you on the honourable distinction you have this day won, on the number of prizes you have received, and especially on your English essay, which displays great ability, great research, and great industry. I hope these successes may be the prelude to a distinguished career in the Company's service. (Cheers.)

In presenting the medals and prizes to Mr. Herschel, the chairman said—I must congratulate you also on the prizes with which you are literally loaded. It is a great gratification to me, and it must be an equal gratification to all present, to find that you thus sustain the reputation of the distinguished name you bear. (Loud cheers.)

The Chairman then addressed the assembled students as follows:—

Gentlemen students,—It is impossible that I should speak from this chair without a deep sense of the vast importance of that branch of the service of India, for which you, gentlemen, are destined; nor without an impression of solemnity, derived from the consideration that each of you will be called upon to discharge duties which involve the happiness or misery of masses of mankind. Your qualifications to enter upon your course of studies here are tested by a very stringent examination previously to admission. Subsequently, a course of study, adapted to the end in view, is prescribed, and a high standard must be attained. If you fail to pass the required tests, you lose a term in the first instance, and ultimately, if the failure continue, you lose your appointments. I rejoice to know that such serious penalties are rarely incurred. When they do happen, they are painful evidences of the necessity imposed upon the Court of Directors to observe the greatest vigilance in guarding against the admission of unworthy or incompetent persons to the civil service of India;—for whilst this Institution presents great advantages to the deserving, it acts, and was designed to act, as a barrier to protect India from the engagement of improper men in the conduct of any part of public affairs. If your lot had been cast in this country, we might possibly speculate on the future improvement of those deficient in ability, application, or principle. But launched, as you will be, at an early period, into the discharge of responsible duties in a distant land, we cannot incur risks, or venture on experiments, that may compromise the interests of millions and the reputation of Government. (Cheers). The report which has been this day made to us of the present state of the college, is satisfactory to the Court of Directors; and it is now my duty to express the cordial thanks of the Court to the Principal and Professors for the zeal, ability, and success, with which they have applied themselves to aid you in your studies, and to sustain the reputation of the college. It has been always our good fortune to secure the services of men of the highest talents and attainments. This was never more conspicuous than at present. I may here observe that your Principal and Professors were all distinguished in their early career. It was at your period of life that their talents first developed themselves; and you will generally find, that talent and industry displayed in youth accompany a man through life. Such is the case in this Institution; and in the civil service of India a very recent example may be adduced. In June, 1846, when occupying this chair, I had the happiness to bestow the highest distinctions which this Institution can give on Mr. Temple. He gained four medals and four other prizes. He had not been long at the college at Calcutta before he gained the highest honours in the native languages. He was then immediately sent into our new territories in the Punjab, and employed in assessing the revenues. But a few days since I received a report from the Government of India, stating that this gentleman had already rendered most valuable services. All this has occurred within the last six years. I need scarcely observe the field before you is so extensive, and the occupations so various and important, as to call forth all the efforts of the mind, and to bring all your attainments into use. A man's character and qualifications are soon discovered in India. His powers are almost immediately called into action, and, although some years must pass in positions comparatively subordinate, yet his talents and industry cannot remain buried. The able and the laborious, the pains-taking and the active public servant, however young, is soon known to be such. He attracts the notice of his superiors, the eyes of the Government are upon him, and, ere long, promotion marks the estimation in which he is held. In India office is not conferred by favour. Let me impress upon you that, from the moment of your entering within these walls, your future success depends upon yourselves. The Government cannot, if they would, appoint the incompetent. They require in all the offices of state men of capacity and intelligence, and the higher the duties the greater the necessity imposed upon the Government to select fit men for the discharge of them. Let me further say that the natives of India are making rapid advances in intelligence and knowledge. I rejoice that it is so, and that the local Government is enabled to avail itself extensively of the services of the natives in important offices. But the professors and students of this college must be prepared fully to maintain their standard, and, if possible, to increase the present qualifications. There will soon be competition between Europeans and natives, and the race will be won by the most competent. Remember that it is the supremacy of the mind which enables us to hold India in subjection to Great Britain. A primary and indispensable qualification in all our servants is knowledge of the native languages. Called upon to communicate with the natives of the Courts upon nice points of law, upon intricacies in the adjustment of landed rights;—called upon, moreover, to administer justice in difficult cases, and to weigh conflicting testimony, how can these duties be discharged with any degree of efficiency or satisfaction unless the officer be master of the language? In this college you have the advantage of receiving elementary instruction in the Oriental languages; and this cannot fail, if duly improved, to be of the greatest service to you upon your arrival in India. You are, of course, aware that, after your arrival, you must pass a strict examination in the languages previously to your being permitted to enter upon the public service; and the length of the period requisite for this purpose mainly depends upon the progress you have made here. You have also the advantage of instruction in Law and Political Economy, under the eminent Professors of these branches of study. It is impossible to exaggerate their importance. In this country, the bench is filled by men who have previously been in constant practice at the bar. In India the case is different. The qualifications of the future judges there are derived first from elementary knowledge acquired here, and subsequently from information and experience whilst engaged in discharging subordinate duties, especially in the revenue department, and thus becoming acquainted with the regulations of the Government, and customs and habits of the people. In like manner the mode of assessment of land, and the effect upon the community of various fiscal arrangements, make it of importance that the officers engaged in effecting such arrangements should be conversant with sound principles of political economy, and acquainted with the springs of wealth and the sources of national prosperity. (Cheers.) I will not, however, dilate at any greater length on the course of study in this place. I will advert, though only for a moment, to considerations of far higher importance, the moral and religious principles by which your conduct as public servants shall be governed. You know well that the basis of all sound morality is religion, in the doctrines and principles of which you have been constantly instructed. When removed from most of the external advantages which you have hitherto been permitted to enjoy, you will I trust, show by your conduct that you are influenced by the truths in which you have been instructed. You will be in the midst of men of different creeds from yourselves, and you will, testify by your actions, rather than by words, the practical superiority of the Christian faith. Let it be seen in the consistency with which you maintain the principles and the practices of your religion, and the forbearance with which you regard all who differ from you. (Cheers.) The natives of India have ever been treated by our Government with kindness and consideration. Let it be your constant care, that, in your persons, our national character and reputation may, in these and all other respects, be fully maintained. (Cheers.) In the discharge of your duties you may, at first, find much in the peculiarities of the natives to irritate, and the influence of climate may tend to increase that irritation. But you must cautiously guard against giving way to the infirmity of temper. If uncontrolled, it will gain the mastery, and its dominion will be fatal to your respect, your utility, and your happiness. There is one danger against which I must emphatically warn you. I allude to extravagance; it is essential to a civilian's promotion to important offices that he should be independent in his pecuniary circumstances. This cannot be if his expenditure exceeds his means. One of the evils of Indian life is the facility afforded to young men to borrow money. Let me beseech you, as you value your happiness and future welfare, never to yield to the temptation. You will find your allowance amply sufficient for all that you can require to maintain your position as gentlemen, and to make some provision for future retirement. Debt once incurred will accumulate with frightful rapidity, and destroy the bright prospects with which you now enter the public service. I trust that these brief suggestions may have the effect of impressing you with a due sense of the importance of the work in which you are now about to engage, of the danger to which you will be exposed, and of the necessity for vigilance and self-control, to enable you efficiently to discharge your duties. Remember that our eye, the eye of the Government, the eye of the public, will be upon you. You have at this moment a most gratifying evidence of the interest taken in the preparation of young men for our civil service. An illustrious member of the royal family, distinguished by the most zealous devotion to his own service, and generally by high character and attainments, has done us the honour to be present on this occasion. I am also happy and gratified to see here many members of the committees now sitting to investigate the affairs of India, in view to the determination of the important question which Parliament will have shortly to decide, whether the East-India Company shall continue to be invested with the administration of the territories of British India. I will only here say that, charged as we now are with this important duty, we endeavour to keep steadily in view the happiness of the millions for whose benefit the trust has been committed to us. In accomplishing this great purpose, we claim the services of those who have been here prepared for their duties in India, and I humbly hope that, through their agency, and under the blessing of Divine Providence, the East-India Company may continue to be that honoured instrument of raising the character and advancing the prosperity of the people of India. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, I bid you farewell, with the warmest wishes for your success and happiness here and in India. (Loud and continued cheering.)

The deputation and the visitors then retired, and after perambulating the grounds of the College for half an hour, repaired to the Examination Hall, where a sumptuous luncheon was served. The chair was occupied by Sir James Weir Hogg, the Chairman of the Court of Directors; and his immediate supporters were, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke of Newcastle, Lord F. Fitzclarence, the Marquess of Normanby, the Rev. the Principal, &c.

At the close of the repast,

The Chairman rose and said—In the Examination Hall he had referred to the presence, upon this occasion, of an illustrious member of the Royal family; and he might be allowed now to say that nothing could tend more to the encouragement of an institution such as this College, than the interest taken in it by the distinguished persons who were now present. (Cheers.) Those who were acquainted with the present position of our military affairs, must be aware of the great demands which were made upon the time and attention of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge; and it must, therefore, be more gratifying to find him present on such an occasion, as a proof of the interest he felt in, and the convictions he entertained of the advantages arising out of, this institution. (Cheers.) Without further preface, he would propose the health of their illustrious guest, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge. (Much cheering.)

The Duke of Cambridge on rising was received with enthusiastic cheering. He said he was grateful for the very flattering manner in which the Chairman had been pleased to mention his name, and assured him that he was correct in stating that, in attending here to-day, he had been actuated by the interest he felt in the College, and by the desire to witness proceedings so extremely interesting as those which had taken place to-day. (Cheers.) He was glad that, through the kindness of the Court of Directors, he had been afforded an opportunity of attending an institution based on such admirable principles, and of witnessing the success of those young men who had been here prepared to go out to distant regions to carry out the objects and the orders of the British Government. (Cheers.) What they had seen to-day—what they had witnessed in another part of the building—must convince all present that the greatest care and attention was paid to the instruction of the young men educated in this College. Not being conversant with the languages of India, he had been, although a willing, still a stupid, listener to much that passed in the library; but he was able to discover—and it gave him much gratification to make the discovery—that great attention was paid to a branch of education so necessary to the service of the East Indies, as the native languages of the East. (Cheers.) It must be apparent to all, that the utility of the men who went forth from this College must greatly depend upon their being thoroughly acquainted with the Oriental tongues; and he felt confident that, while this branch of study received so much attention, and other studies, also necessary to qualify the civilian, were not neglected, they would witness those good results which had hitherto attended the rule of the East-India Company. (Cheers.) Vast as was the empire over which the Company presided in India, it must tend to promote the greatness and the prosperity of the mother country, if the men sent out to administer that Government, were rendered competent for their important duties, by their studies in this place; and he felt assured, by what he had observed to-day, that those intrusted with the administration of affairs in that distant portion of the empire, would perform their duties with zeal and ability which would command success. (Cheers.) There was nothing that he, an humble individual, could add to the able address which had been delivered to the young men here to-day; but he must be permitted to say that he agreed with every word the Chairman had uttered. He thought that the advice tendered to those who were leaving for India was admirable; and that the principles advocated by the Chairman in reference to their demeanour towards the natives of that country, was highly satisfactory. If those principles continued to be the guide of the Court of Directors and of their servants, he thought they might confidently trust that the English rule in India would continue to be as prosperous and glorious as it had hitherto been. (Loud and continued cheering.)

The Chairman, in rising to propose the next toast, said—It was impossible to exaggerate the importance of this Institution, which, for half a century, had sent forth to India an unbroken succession of public servants, distinguished alike for their talents, their integrity, and their industry. Such results as these were chiefly accomplished through the instrumentality of those who presided over the students at this College. In this respect the Court of Directors had been peculiarly fortunate, and never, perhaps, more so than at this moment. The Principal was the distinguished member of a distinguished family, whose services to India must be acknowledged by all; and the Professors were men of talent, who devoted themselves to their duties with assiduity equal to their talents. (Cheers.) He need say no more to recommend the next toast, the only toast it was customary to propose on these occasions—"The health of the Principal and the Professors." (Loud cheers.)

The Rev. the Principal, on rising, was received with much applause. He said—"May it please your Royal Highness, my Lords and Gentlemen, I need hardly say, on behalf of myself and the Professors of this College, that we feel deeply gratified by the very obliging terms in which the Chairman has been pleased to notice our services, and by the kind manner in which the toast of our health has been received by this distinguished company. We can claim nothing to ourselves beyond an earnest endeavour to carry out, as efficiently as possible, the rules which the Government of the country have been pleased to lay down for the training the civil servants of the East-India Company. We are ready, moreover, to submit to the most rigid inquiry into the state of this College, believing, in all honesty, that we spare no pains to make it answer the great ends for which it was instituted, and believe, also, that it does answer those ends in a very high and satisfactory degree.

A few other toasts were given, when the company separated and returned to town.

BANQUET TO LORD F. FITZCLARENCE.

On the 19th of June, a magnificent banquet was given, at the London Tavern, by the East-India Company to Lord Frederick Fitzclarence, on his departure to take the command of the troops in the Bombay presidency. The company assembled to meet the noble lord, about 200 in number, comprised those renowned in war, statesmanship, and science. Sir James Weir Hogg, chairman of the East-India Company, presided; on his right were his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, Lord F. Fitzclarence, his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, the Duke of Newcastle, the Marquess of Normanby, &c.; on his left, the Lord Mayor, his Highness the ex-Rajah of Coorgh, Viscount Melville, Viscount Canning, &c. Amongst the distinguished guests were Lord Elcho, Sir Robert Campbell, Bart., Lord de Ros, Lord Elphinstone, Lord Montague, Lord Broughton, Right Hon. S. Herbert, Right Hon. H. Goulburn, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Lieut.-General Sir W. Cotton, Lieut.-General Sir G. Pollock, Sir George Bonham, the Solicitor-General, Earl of Strafford, Viscount Hardinge, Lord Stanley, Lord Saltoun, Lord Colchester, Right Hon. J. C. Herries, Right Hon. Sir James Graham, Bart., Right Hon. Sir J. S. Pakington, Bart., Right Hon. J. W. Henley, Sir W. Molesworth, Bart., the Attorney-General, Sir H. Verney, Bart., Lieut.-General Sir J. Lushington, Lieut.-General Sir J. Macdonald, Sir Herbert Maddock, Lord A. Fitzclarence, Right Hon. W. Beresford, Right Hon. R. A. Christopher, Right Hon. Sir E. Ryan, Sir E. Colebrooke, Bart., Sir R. H. Inglis, Bart., Sir John Herschel, Bart., Sir R. Jenkins, G. C. B., Lieut.-General Sir C. Pasley, K. C. B., Sir John Campbell, Sir Henry Willock, &c.

The cloth having been removed,

The Chairman gave "Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen," and afterwards, "Prince Albert, and the other members of the Royal Family;" adding, "it is peculiarly gratifying to the Court of Directors that his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge has been pleased to be present on this occasion, because, having devoted himself with increasing zeal to the study of his profession, no one is more competent to appreciate the services of military men. May I be permitted to add, in the presence of his royal highness, that he emulates the brightest example of his revered and lamented father, who will long live in the recollections of Englishmen?"

The Duke of Cambridge.—"I fear I shall be considered as less than respectful to this society if I do not assure you how deeply sensible I am of the honour of being permitted to be present on this occasion. I am proud of that honour, because I feel the greatest respect for my honourable friend the Chairman, and the Court of Directors over whom he so ably presides. I am also happy to attend, because it is an occasion when the Chairman is about to bring under your notice a gallant friend of mine, who sits on my right, who has been selected by her Majesty, with the sanction of the Court of Directors, to fill a high position in a distant and important part of her Majesty's dominions. As a military man, I am sure the company will forgive me if I express the high gratification I feel that they have secured the military services of my gallant friend, who is, I believe, a thorough soldier. By the favour of his Sovereign and the sanction of the Court of Directors, he has been placed in a position in which it will be in his power to prove himself the real, good, and gallant British soldier that he is; and I am confident that, when the time comes for him to resign the position to which he has now been elected, he will return with credit to himself, and that the Court of Directors will have no cause to regret the confidence they have now placed in him.

The Chairman.—"I now propose the health of the distinguished guest to meet whom we have assembled this evening. A vacancy having occurred in the command of the troops of Bombay, the Court of Directors were anxious to select for that high appointment some officer of rank and consideration, who was devoted to his profession, who would be recognised as possessing those qualities which are requisite to the due discharge of the various and important duties which devolve on the commander of large bodies of troops, and who is also in the full vigour of health. All these important objects have happily been attained in the selection of the gallant general, Lord Frederick Fitzclarence, who, ever since he succeeded to the command of a regiment, has won the respect of the whole British army, as an officer whose every thought is devoted to the improvement and well-being of those placed under him—who, during those years that he has commanded an important division of the army, has shown, by his energy, talent, and zeal, how well qualified he is for the discharge of those important duties—who has not only secured for himself the approbation of his Grace the Commander-in-Chief, but the confidence and admiration of all who were placed under his command, and given unmixed satisfaction to the whole community resident in the district. The Court of Directors, when they found that such an officer was available for India, at once, by a unanimous resolution, appointed Lord Frederick as Commander-in-Chief in Bombay, with a seat in the council at that place. I venture to stand here as sponsor for my noble friend on this occasion, and to say that he will maintain the discipline of the army—that he will with his own eyes inspect every regiment placed under his command—that he will encourage the zealous, stimulate the tardy, and admonish the negligent, if such there should unfortunately be; that he will inquire into every detail of the army, in order to correct what may be found imperfect; that he will carry out and perfect a system of education for the soldier, and encourage the officer to improve himself in the knowledge of his profession. I venture to encourage the hope that, during his lordship's command, peace will not be disturbed in the territory of Bombay; but this I may say, if unfortunately it should be necessary for this army to take the field, I then feel confident that, under Lord Frederick Fitzclarence, the war will be brought to a speedy, successful, and glorious termination. I shall only add the hope, in which I am sure every one present will fervently join, that, when his lordship's command draws to a close, he will return to his native country with his health unimpaired, and having added fresh lustre to his already distinguished reputation as a military commander.

Lord Frederick Fitzclarence.—"In the first place, I return my thanks to you, Mr. Chairman, for the kind manner in which you have proposed my health to this noble and illustrious assemblage; I have also to thank this company for the flattering manner in which they have received the toast, which, I grieve to say, my conscience and my feelings tell me I am unworthy of. I stand in a peculiar situation at this moment, knowing, as I do, the many and glorious men who, before now, have stood in the position which I now occupy, who have gained great renown, and with laurels to themselves added glory to their country. It is impossible for me not to feel the difference there is between me and those great men, many of whom I have for years called my friends, and whom I now see before me, both statesmen and warriors. I would especially allude to an officer belonging to your own illustrious army, Sir George Pollock. But I beg you to believe that I fear not dangers—I court them rather, because I know I have your approbation and that of the Court of Directors, expressed not this evening only, but in the India House, when I took the oath of office. I feel that I am about to go not only to serve my Sovereign in a distant land, but to serve the greatest and most opulent society the world has ever seen. I am honoured in being the servant of this honourable Company. You, Mr. Chairman, in the address you delivered to me on that occasion, so eloquently pointed out to me my various duties, both as a soldier and as a general, to those who would be placed under my command, stating that I would be to them not only a general but a parent, that they will never be effaced from my mind. Such has ever been the care of the officers, both in the British army and your own service, for the comforts of the native soldier. It has ever been the custom of your service to respect the comforts, the feelings, and even the prejudices of the native soldiers; and I believe in doing that, we are carrying out the purest feelings and principles of that religion which teaches us to do to others as we would that others should do to us. You also pointed out the duties that would devolve on me as a Member of the Council of Bombay. Let me request the Court of Directors to believe that I have been so educated and brought up by my great and illustrious commander, the Duke of Wellington, that I feel the first duty of a soldier is obedience, not only to the military, but also to the civil authorities. For five years I held an appointment on the staff, and I am happy to say that, during all that period, no single difference ever happened amongst us, and that all the authorities, civil and military, acted harmoniously together as one body. You were kind enough to say, Mr. Chairman, that you would be sponsor for my public actions. Permit me to say I have another godfather here; I mean the Mayor of Portsmouth, who will bear me out when I say he always found me ready to support the civil power. I had the honour and happiness, Sir, of accompanying you to Addiscombe, where I saw many young men receiving their education who will be ultimately destined to serve you in India. It is impossible for me to express the pleasure I felt on that occasion. I had often wondered at the great deeds which were performed in the Indian service; but my wonder ceased when I witnessed the education that those young men received, and I am satisfied that the troops under the command of such officers would be capable of any achievement. For myself, I may now say I have passed the meridian, not indeed of manhood, but of youth. Had my appointment taken place five years ago, I might have wished to lead your magnificent army into the field; but as it is, I have now no wish for that, unless it should be necessary in order to preserve your empire in India. I cannot sit down without further thanking you for your goodness in having invited so many of my old friends to meet me here; and I can only say to them as I do to you,—for this may be the last time I may see them and you,—“God bless you.”

The Chairman then proposed “The Navy,” coupled with the name of Sir Augustus Clifford.

Rear-Admiral Sir A. Clifford, in returning thanks, said, “It is now twenty-five or twenty-six years since I had the honour of first meeting this noble Company on the occasion of my carrying out one of your most distinguished governors—that good and eminent man Lord William Bentinck, whose friendship I am proud to acknowledge, and which circumstance I have ever thought one of the proudest events in my life. And if I were again afloat, nothing would give me greater pleasure than to convey your distinguished guest to his destination. Having resided in the vicinity of his late command, I have had frequent opportunities of witnessing his devotion to the public service of the country, and his anxiety to benefit every person placed under his command. I congratulate you, Sir, on having such an officer to command your troops, and I feel confident that he will not only give satisfaction to his honourable employers, but add to his own reputation.”

The Chairman then gave, “The Army, and the Earl of Strafford.”

The Earl of Strafford briefly returned thanks.

The Chairman.—I have now the gratifying duty of proposing “Her Majesty’s Ministers.” In this free country, party spirit is sure more or less to prevail; but this generous contest is confined to the battle-field of the great council of the country, and those most prominently engaged in it can happily and cordially unite at the social board. The East-India Company have no politics; the party strife of England enters not into our deliberations; our duty is to discharge the sacred trust committed to us, apart from all strife, in watching over the happiness of the millions intrusted to our care. In the discharge of that duty we have frequent occasion to claim the co-operation of the Queen’s Ministers, which they have cordially afforded us, and on all occasions have evinced an anxious interest and an earnest desire to promote the welfare of her Majesty’s dominions in India.

Sir J. Pakington.—I feel that, in acknowledging this toast, I am precluded from touching on any question of party politics, and I shall not, therefore, dwell on the relations between her Majesty’s Government and the Court of Directors, because I think that ground will be more fitly taken up in another place. I shall, therefore, only express my ardent hope that her Majesty’s Government may continue to co-operate harmoniously with this great Company, for promoting the welfare and prosperity of the vast and magnificent portion of the Queen’s dominions which is intrusted to your care.

The Chairman.—I have now to beg your attention to that particular member of the Cabinet whose duty it is to preside over the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India. In the discharge of our functions we are placed in constant and intimate communication with that right honourable gentleman, and I hope he will permit me to bear my humble testimony to the zeal and assiduity with which he performs the important duties intrusted to his care, and, above all, to the cordiality with which he co-operates with the Court of Directors in sanctioning every measure calculated to promote the interests, develop the resources, and advance the prosperity of our empire in the East. I beg to propose “The health of the Right Hon. Mr. Herries, the President of the Board of Control.”

Mr. Herries returned thanks. The noble lord had so fully expressed the sentiments he entertained with respect to the greatness of the charge intrusted to him, that nothing remained for him (Mr. Herries) to add upon that subject. He could not, however, refrain from calling the attention of the noble lord to that important part of the duty which he would have to perform in assisting in the councils of the Bombay presidency. The noble lord would there have an opportunity of seeing what he (Mr. Herries) had already seen during the short period he had held office—what England had done, was doing, and was aspiring yet to do, for the advancement of the happiness, the prosperity, and the general welfare of the interesting people, to the promotion of whose interests his future labours would be directed. The honourable chairman had most truly stated that he had observed in him (Mr. Herries) a desire to advance, to the utmost of his ability, those interests in which he and his colleagues were so deeply concerned. There did, indeed, exist a kind of amicable antagonism between the office he filled and the Court of Directors; but though they were destined in a great degree to check and control each other, yet, when conducted in the spirit of which he had had experience on the part of the Company, the antagonism was, in fact, a harmonious disposition to accomplish one common end. He was bound to say that, in all his transactions with the honourable chairman and his colleagues, he had found nothing but the most honest zeal, and the purest intentions to promote the prosperity of that country, which, under the Crown, they had been appointed to govern. The right honourable gentleman, in eulogistic terms, gave, “The Health of the Chairman, Sir James Weir Hogg.”

The Chairman returned thanks. Great and important duties, he said, had been intrusted to the East-India Company, and he rejoiced that the wisdom of Parliament had required that at certain periods they should render an account of their stewardship, and prove themselves deserving of a continuance of the confidence of the Crown and the country. One of those periods had now arrived, and he looked to the result with an anxiety commensurate to the magnitude of the interests at stake, but with no apprehension. Whatever the wisdom of Parliament might determine, he ventured to indulge a confident hope that the Company would obtain from it an admission that, as stewards of the Crown, they had honestly, faithfully, anxiously, and, he might say, not unsuccessfully, discharged their important office as trustees for the most important, the mightiest, the richest, and the greatest of its appanages.

The Chairman proposed “The Health of the Marquess of Dalhousie, the Governor-General of India.” Shortly after his arrival in India, Lord Dalhousie found himself involved in the second Sikh war; and, under his able and energetic administration, that war closed by the subjugation of the enemy, and the annexation of the Punjab to the British dominions. Since that period he had been employed in improving the resources and ameliorating the condition of the natives, in promoting their education, and generally in advancing the interest of our Indian empire. On his way to Calcutta, in February last, he was met with the intelligence of the hostile spirit displayed by the Burmese, and the imminent prospect of immediate hostilities. Seeing the advanced period of the year, the marquess felt that not a day was to be lost in assembling troops to strike a rapid blow; and—the Commander-in-Chief being absent on a tour of duty in the north-west—he, on his own responsibility, gave the requisite orders, which were executed with such promptitude, that 3,000 British, and 3,000 native troops, fully armed and equipped, were collected and embarked between the 11th February and the 1st of March; while eighteen vessels of war, sixteen of them armed steamers, were collected in the river of Rangoon. As another proof of the energy and foresight of Lord Dalhousie, he might remark that he sent orders to Moulemein for the construction in framework of a vast number of wood houses, which were sent to Rangoon, that our troops might be put under cover; and he also sent orders for the supply of the necessary provisions, including vast droves of bullocks, that the European troops might enjoy the comfort of fresh provisions. By the last accounts it appeared that these frame-work houses had arrived, and the report of General Godwin stated that the health of the troops was good, and that the wounded were doing well.

The Chairman proposed “The Health of the Lord Mayor of London.”

The Lord Mayor returned thanks.

The next toast was, “The Civil Service of India, and the health of Mr. Bird, a distinguished member of that service;” and Mr. Bird returned thanks.

The Chairman then gave “The Army of India.” Let them cast their eyes over the map of that country, and they would see it thickly studded with places, the names of which would never have been known but for the deeds of the Indian army—deeds of daring and ever enduring—deeds so numerous that the minutest historian could not chronicle them. He called upon them to do honour to that army by drinking its health in a bumper.

General M'Leod returned thanks.

The Chairmen then gave, as the last toast, "The Visitors, and the Duke of Newcastle," to which his Grace responded.

The company then separated.

THE EASTERN ARCHIPELAGO COMPANY.

IN 1847 a company was formed for the purpose of working coal-mines in Labuan and Borneo. To this company the Board of Trade granted a charter, requiring, among other things, that 100,000*l.* capital should be subscribed for, and 50,000*l.* actually paid up within twelve months of the issuing of the charter, and that the company should not begin business until a certificate, signed by at least three of the directors, should be produced to the Board of Trade, declaring that these provisions had been complied with. To do the directors justice, they seem to have been anxious not to have recourse to deception, if fair play would answer the purpose, an elevated strain of morality which we feel bound to record, as furnishing some evidence of the curious psychological fact, that they actually were visited by some compunctious twinges of conscience. The period of twelve months within which they were to raise the 50,000*l.* expired in July, 1848. The day approached, and they had obtained only 5,000*l.*, or a tenth part of the sum. They applied for an extension of time, but this Government had no power to give. Driven to extremity, they adopted another course. They purchased on credit an unopened mine, for the price of which they debited themselves with 46,000*l.*, and which they treated as capital subscribed to the same amount. Thus was all difficulty removed, and, now no longer requiring an extension of time, they forwarded to the Board of Trade the following remarkable certificate, which we copy verbatim, as a contribution towards the history and philosophy of joint-stock companies:—

"We, the undersigned directors of the Eastern Archipelago Company, hereby certify that the sum of 100,000*l.*, being half of the capital of the said corporation, hath been subscribed for, and that the sum of 50,000*l.* hath been paid up.

"Dated this 25th day of July, 1848.

"JOHN M'GREGOR, Chairman.

"CHARLES DRINKWATER BEZBUNE, Deputy-Chairman.

"H. H. LINDSAY.

"ALEXANDER NAIEN.

"HENRY WILK."

To use the emphatic and almost Scriptural language of these directors, our attention hath seldom, if ever, been directed to a more extraordinary document. A debt was never before treated as a payment, or a heavy liability as capital. We never heard of an insolvent who inserted his liabilities among his assets, or took credit, not for what was owing to him, but what he owed, nor of a company which reckoned as capital the very subject-matter upon which that capital was proposed to be invested. But it is no subject for ridicule. Either there are two codes of law and morality, the one for directors of joint-stock companies, and the other for the public, or if this be not so, the obtaining the benefit of the charter by such falsehoods is nothing less than swindling, and the issuing so grossly false a certificate very little short of perjury. Had a single shilling's worth of goods been obtained by such means, the party obtaining it would be liable to transportation; and had the solemn public duty of giving a true certificate been enforced by requiring an oath, the like penalty would have been incurred by the commission of the crime of perjury. These are legal distinctions; but in the eye of morality there is none. The duty to tell the truth in a matter which the law of the country intrusts to our veracity, is a perfect obligation which cannot be added to—even an oath cannot add to it.

We observe that the attorney and solicitor-general appeared in court as counsel for the Crown, and that they were therefore forced to know that a certificate required by Government for the protection of the public was wilfully given to a statement known to be utterly false. No lawyer can doubt that such a falsehood is a very aggravated misdemeanour, punishable by fine and imprisonment. Is it too much to expect from these high officials that they should put in force against these offenders the law which visits with such undeviating severity the delinquencies of clerks, accountants, and pawnbrokers? A jury has declared the charter void, because obtained by a false certificate, and by such finding has really convicted the directors of a misdemeanour. Why are the civil consequences of the falsehood to follow, and the penal to remain in abeyance? If the object of the punishment be example, where could a fitter case be found?—Times.

CHINESE INVASION OF CALIFORNIA.

San Francisco, May 2.

Some of the wise men among us, fearing an inroad of Chinamen, are becoming alarmed at the prospect of a large immigration. They are continually arriving in batches of 500 to 1,000 in every vessel from China, and 10,000 are reported as ready to come forward in a fleet of merchantmen from Canton and other ports.

A prejudice which has for some time existed in the minds of many persons here against the Chinamen is now gaining strength, and it is feared will lead to measures of a hostile nature. The assumed evil they inflict upon the country, of carrying away nearly all the gold they amass, without any commensurate expenditure in the country, has induced the governor of the state to address a special message on the subject to the legislature. It is assumed by the governor, that the Chinamen are all hired to work for contractors, who receive nearly all the proceeds of their labour. This conclusion has been jumped at without any reliable information to justify it. The best-informed persons acquainted with China deny the truth of this assumption. The argument for the expulsion of these people is founded on narrow principles. It is assumed that the country derives no benefit from them, overlooking the direct and important benefit to American shipping afforded by their passage-money; the money they expend here in rents, purchase of land, and building of houses; the direct and indirect taxes which they pay; the large sums which they contribute to the custom-house in duties upon imported goods; the cost of their rig for the campaign in the mines, expended in the purchase of tools, boots, provisions, &c.; the passage-money and freight hence up to the interior towns, and the travelling fares they pay in getting transported to the mines. These are all direct advantages to this country which are overlooked. The indirect advantages promise to be more important still, in the extended commercial relations which their intercourse with us must produce with China.

The Chinamen, through some of their spokesmen, among whom a Celestial rejoicing in the name of Hab-wa is the chief, have published a letter in reply to the governor's message. Hab-wa and his friends' letter is a most excellent production, and full of sly humour. They tell the governor that in their country all great men are learned men, and that a man's rank is just according to his education. The inference is obvious, that the governor, being a great man by virtue of his high office, must of course be also a "learned" man. This is a severe hit. There is another, of a more generic character. "We do not deny that many Chinese tell lies; and so do many Americans, even in courts of justice." Hab-wa evidently thinks the latter failing something worse than a "white lie." The tenour of this letter has turned the tide a good deal in favour of the Celestials, and it is sincerely to be hoped that the prejudice against them will soon die away.—Times.

The Calcutta Englishman publishes a communication upon the remarkable emigration taking place from China to California. The return of a few emigrants from San Francisco with a considerable quantity of gold, it is stated, had excited an emigration mania in Canton, and created an immediate demand for freight to California. Since the 1st January, 1852, no fewer than 7,537 emigrants have started, and 9,270 more are about to depart; in all 16,807 men, who have paid about 672,280 dollars for passage. As these men never take their wives, they do not make California their home, but return to their own country as soon as they have collected a small competence.

LAW.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, JUNE 19.

The Queen v. The Eastern Archipelago Company.—This was a proceeding by scire facias, to repeal letters patent granted by her Majesty in the year 1847 for incorporating the Eastern Archipelago Company. The ground of the proceeding was that certain provisions contained in the charter had not been complied with. This charter incorporated the company, with a capital of 200,000*l.*, in 2,000 shares of 100*l.*, for the purpose of cultivating land, working mines, and trafficking in the island of Labuan. It contained directions that, within twelve months from the date of the charter, 100,000*l.* of the capital should be subscribed, and 50,000*l.* paid up; that, within the same period, a deed of settlement should be executed and lodged in the office of the Board of Trade. The scire facias suggested that the parties had not entered into such agreement; that 100,000*l.* had not been subscribed, and 50,000*l.* had not been paid up; that no deed had been lodged in the office of the Board of Trade; that business had been commenced by the company before 50,000*l.* had been paid up, and before 100,000*l.* had been subscribed; that a false certificate had been sent by the company to the Board of Trade that 100,000*l.* had been subscribed and 50,000*l.* paid up. Upon these and numerous other suggestions there were traverses.

The jury gave a verdict for the defendants on the issue as to the lodging the deed, and for the Crown on the issue relating to the paying up the 50,000*l.* The finding upon these issues virtually determined the others, certain questions of law being reserved for the consideration of the Court above.

Verdict for the Crown.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, JUNE 23 & 24.

The Ameers of Scinde.—Lord Jocelyn, in moving for papers relating to a charge preferred against Meer Ali Moorad, Ameer of Upper Scinde, of having made fraudulent alterations in the treaty of Nownahur, concluded between him and the late Meer Roostum Khan, entered at some length into details which, in his opinion, bore upon the condition of the ex-rulers of Scinde, once the faithful allies of the British Government in India, now captives in a foreign land. He moved for these documents, he said, on behalf of the ex-Ameers, believing that the matters which had been brought to light with reference to the conduct of Ali Moorad Khan placed at the disposal of the Government means of repairing the injury done to those princes. Lord Jocelyn gave an outline of the transactions in Scinde subsequent to 1838, when, in furtherance of the policy adopted by the Indian Government to replace Shah Soojah upon the throne of Cabul, a treaty was entered into between that Government and the Ameers of Scinde. He explained the position of Ali Moorad Khan with relation to the other members of the Khyrpore family; he recounted his intrigues against his elder brother, Roostum Khan, which caused the latter to fly into the desert and cede to him the turban; the success of those intrigues in deceiving Sir Charles Napier; their effect upon the Ameers of Lower Scinde; the exasperation of the Belooches at the treatment of their aged chief, Roostum, and the consequent battle of Hyderabad, which overthrew the power of the Ameers, and consigned them to captivity, one portion being sent into Hindostan, and another being left to the tender mercies of the unnatural Ali Moorad Khan. He next referred to the suspicions which invaded Sir C. Napier, when about to leave Scinde in 1846, respecting the good faith of Ali Moorad, and to the investigation instituted by Sir George Clerk, which resulted in the conviction of that Ameer of having destroyed a leaf of a Koran on which the treaty of Nownahur was written, and substituted another of a different tenour, whereby he had possessed himself of lands to which he was not entitled. He showed the bearing of the treacherous conduct of Ali Moorad upon the Ameers of Scinde, the services they had rendered to the British Government at a period when their hostility would have been most pernicious, and he exposed, in forcible terms, the prejudice which, he said, the treatment of this unhappy family had excited against the British name throughout Central Asia, and which had reached even the recesses of Central Africa. He did not ask, he added, nor did these unfortunate princes ask, to be replaced upon their thrones as rulers, but merely to be allowed to visit their native land.

Sir R. Inglis felt it to be an honour and a privilege to second the motion, believing this to be a case of great oppression.

Mr. Baillie observed that the speech of Lord Jocelyn had little connection with his notice. The policy of the conquest of Scinde and the deposition of the Ameers had received the sanction and approbation of the Government, and of that House. The Government of India had already taken into consideration the condition of the ex-Ameers, in order to render it as agreeable as it could be made to them. So long ago as February, 1851, Lord Dalhousie had brought the subject to the attention of the Court of Directors, who had concurred in his views for ameliorating the state of the fallen family, and in November last the Governor-General had communicated with the Bombay Government, who had written to Mr. Frere, the Commissioner in Scinde, whose report, in December last, suggested that the Government of India might consent to the return of the Ameers to their country, with money stipends for their maintenance, and that temporary assistance should be afforded to the family of Roostum Khan. In April last the Governor-General had sanctioned this last suggestion of Mr. Frere, and had directed assistance to be furnished to the family until the Government could decide upon the whole question. There had, therefore, been no backwardness nor disinclination on the part of the Government of India to ameliorate the condition of the ex-Ameers, whom Lord Jocelyn had represented as models of virtue and fidelity. He (Mr. Baillie) did not express any opinion upon that head, though it did not follow because one Ameer had turned out a rogue, that the rest were necessarily honest and virtuous. The Government had no objection to the production of the evidence and report of the Commission of Inquiry into the charge against Ali Moorad; but they thought it inexpedient to rake up past transactions and a question of state policy which had been so long settled—a course that would lead to a belief in India that nothing was certain or secure.

Col. Estcourt thought this was a subject in which the justice of England was in question.

Mr. Herries, in the absence of Lord Jocelyn, suggested that the first part of his motion should be agreed to, and the other matters left for future discussion.

Mr. Hume observed that the result had proved the justice of his suspicions respecting this case from the first: the Government of the day had been duped by an artful man. Parliament should have the fullest information before it, including the minutes and correspondence upon the European records.

The papers moved for were ultimately ordered, with the exception of the report of Sir George Clerk.

MADRAS RAILWAY.—A company has been formed for the construction of a railway in the presidency of Madras. The capital is to be 500,000*l.*, in shares of 20*l.* each, with a guaranteed interest from the East-India House of 4½ per cent., and the line is to proceed from the city of Madras into the interior, passing through Conjeeveram, Wallajanuggur, and Vellore, and ultimately reaching Bangalore. The facilities for the work, as regards the nature of the country, are stated to be unquestionable, and the existence of a large population throughout the route, and the absence of all competition from water-carriage, are likewise referred to as circumstances that would give a certainty of success to the undertaking, wholly apart from the security of the guarantee. In the first instance only a single line of rails is to be laid down, so as to enable the road to be carried as far as the capital will permit, and to insure the earliest return of profit. The general conditions of the contract with the East-India Company are precisely the same as those entered into with regard to the railways already in course of construction in Bombay and Bengal, with the exception that in those cases the guarantee is 5 per cent. The lands are to be granted for 99 years free of charge. On the opening of the line, one-half of any surplus beyond 4½ per cent. is to be applied to reimburse the India House for the interest they may have already paid, after which the railway company will take the whole, subject to the right reserved by the Government of requiring a reduction of fares whenever the dividend shall exceed 10 per cent. The India House are also to have the power of purchasing the line at the end either of 25 or 50 years, at a price equal to the average value of the shares for the three preceding years; and, on the other hand, the Company, after it shall have been opened three months, may at any time surrender it altogether, and demand the return of their capital.—Times.

NEW STRAM LINE TO AUSTRALIA.—The Cunard Company has decided upon establishing a first-class line of steam-ships between the United States, Panama, and Australia, in conjunction with their mail steamers to New York. The arrangements are completed, and the vessels are nearly ready to commence running, even before the railroad between Panama and Chagres is completed. By the adoption of the Panama route, New Zealand and the whole of the Australian colonies will be brought into direct and rapid communication, not only with the mother country and Europe, but also with the United States, Central and South America, California, and the South Sea Islands. It has been clearly shown in evidence before the select committee of 1851, that the extent of trade and shipping between those places and the colonies is at present very considerably on the increase, far exceeding in importance to the colonies that of the trade and shipping with India and China.

FURTHER RESEARCHES IN THE ARCTIC REGIONS.—It is the intention of the Hudson's Bay Company to despatch Dr. John Rae to the northern coasts of America, to complete various discoveries in those regions. The gallant officer proceeds by way of Chesterfield Inlet to Cape Nicolai—Sir James Ross's farthest in 1831,—thence to survey as far north as Cape Bird—Sir James Ross's farthest in 1850; thus to complete the north-west passage!—Nautical Standard.

MINING IN AUSTRALIA.—The Council of the Society of Arts have appointed a deputation to wait upon the director of the Government School of Mines, to request that the eminent professors of that school should immediately arrange a series of lectures on gold for the instruction of emigrants to Australia.

UNITED STATES EXPEDITION AGAINST JAPAN.—The New York Herald says that, owing to the demand for seamen, the Government is unable to obtain crews for the vessels composing the Japan squadron.

THE INDIAN COLLECTION.—The sale of the second portion of this collection was resumed yesterday at the Auction Mart. Although on the whole the things now brought forward are not so valuable as those recently disposed of, there are many objects of great interest, including the splendid display of arms, carpets and rugs, and an inlaid alabaster chess-table, which is a marvellously tasteful piece of workmanship.

TESTIMONIAL TO DR. JEREMIE.—On the occasion of Dr. Jeremie, the Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge, resigning the posts of Dean and Professor at Haileybury College, the resident students presented him with a handsome testimonial, expressive of the esteem in which they held him. The members of the civil service in India, whose esteem for Dr. Jeremie dates from the early days of their studentship at Haileybury, also determined on presenting him with some testimonial of their affection and regard. A sum of 500*l.* was subscribed; the selection of the plate was intrusted to Mr. M. Williams, one of the professors at the College; and the execution to Messrs. Hunt and Roskell, the celebrated goldsmiths. We have now to announce that the testimonial is about to be presented. It is a handsome piece of plate, and consists of a pedestal or column, supported from the base by three figures, representing religion, philosophy, and literature, the column being crowned by a woman, symbolical of India. There are branches, which may be fitted to the column, when it is required to form a candelabrum.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS.—The Monarch and St. Croix for the conveyance of troops, and the Harkaway and Southampton for freight of stores, to Calcutta.

MADRAS.

Schedule of all Administrations whereof the final balances have been paid to the persons entitled to the same, specifying the amount of such balances, and the persons to whom paid. Prepared from the 1st July to 31st December, 1851, under Section XI. of Act VII. of 1849.

Schedule of all Sums of Money, Bonds, and other Securities received by the Administrator-General on account of each Estate remaining under his charge, together with the payments made thereout, and the balances. Prepared up to the 31st December last, under Section XI. of Act VII. of 1849, extended by Act II. of 1850.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

East-India House, 23rd June, 1859.

THE COURT of DIRECTORS of the EAST-INDIA COMPANY do hereby give notice,

That the Finance and Home Committee will be ready, on or before Wednesday, the 7th July next, to receive proposals in writing, sealed up, from such persons as may be willing to supply the Company with

3,500 HOGSHEADS OF EXPORT LONDON PORTER;

And that the conditions of the said contract may be had on application at the Secretary's office, where the proposals are to be left, any time before 11 o'clock in the forenoon of the said 7th day of July, 1859, after which hour no Tender will be received.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,
Established in 1834.—Empowered by Special Act of Parliament.

1, KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON.

For the Assurance of Lives at Home and Abroad, including Gentlemen engaged in the Military and Naval Services.

SIR HENRY WATSON, Bart., Chairman.

JOHN STEWART, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Richard Armstrong,
C.B., K.C.T., and S.
John Bagshaw, Esq., M.P.
Augustus Bosanquet, Esq.
Charles Dashwood Bruce, Esq.
Ellis Watkin Cuthite, Esq.
William Kilburn, Esq.Francis Macnaghten, Esq.
Charles Otway Mayne, Esq.
William Rothery, Esq.
Robert Saunders, Esq.
Capt. Samuel Thornton, R.N.
Brodie McChie Wilcox, Esq., M.P.AUDITORS.—Robert Gardner, Esq.; Robert Hichens, Esq.;
William Oxenborough, Esq.

BANKERS.—Bank of England, and Messrs. Currie and Co.

SOLICITOR.—William Henry Cotterill, Esq.

PHYSICIAN.—George Burrows, M.D., F.R.S., 18, Cavendish Square.

ACTUARY.—David Jones, Esq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 18th of May, 1859, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20		£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 19 8
30	On or before	1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40	12th of May,	1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
60	1847.	1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

AGENTS IN INDIA.CALCUTTA—Messrs. Braddon & Co. | MADRAS—Messrs. Bainbridge & Co.
BOMBAY—Messrs. Leckie & Co.

MICHAEL ELIJAH IMPEY, Secretary.

ADDISCOMBE.—On the 1st of August next, Mr. W. KIESER, A.M., will be ready to receive a limited number of Pupils to prepare for Addiscombe, or direct appointments.

Instruction will be given in all the branches taught at Addiscombe, and the time devoted to each subject will be proportioned to its importance in the curriculum of study of that College.

Besides a Resident Tutor of experience and ability, Mr. K. has secured the services of F. RUMBLE, Esq., Grad. Inst. C.E., for Fortification and Civil and Military Drawing; and for Hindostanee, those of SYED ABDULLAH, who has acquired a high reputation as a Moonshiee and interpreter in India.

French and German will be severally taught by well-educated natives.

Terms, £120 per annum, or £14 per month.

To assist those Pupils who are desirous of passing the next examination in August, Mr. K. will be ready on the 6th July.

THE GROVE, BLACKHEATH.

TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.A MINISTER of the GOSPEL, who, after spending upwards of ten years as a Missionary in India, was compelled, by failure of health, to return to his native land, and who is now residing in a healthy suburb of London, without any pastoral charge, is desirous of receiving into his family a few YOUNG PEOPLE as BOARDERS,—either Boys or Girls,—to whose moral and mental culture he and his Wife would sedulously and prayerfully devote themselves. The Advertiser has received a first-rate classical and philosophical education, and has—as also his Partner—had much experience in Tuition.

For terms, and other particulars, reference may be made to the Rev. R. B. BOSWELL, and the Rev. THOMAS SMITH (F.C.M.), Calcutta; or to Rev. H. KENNEDY, Benares; or to Messrs. W. H. ALLEN and Co., 7, Leadenhall Street, London; and to Rev. JONATHAN WATSON, 1, Danube Street, Stockbridge, Edinburgh.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES.—A GENTLEMAN, accustomed to tuition, who has recently returned from India, where he spent upwards of ten years, and was in the constant habit of conversing with the natives in several of the vernaculars, will be happy to give PRIVATE INSTRUCTION, either at his own house or at the residence of pupils, in any of the following languages:—Hebrew, Arabic, Persian, Oordec, Hindi, and Bengalee.

The Advertiser's address and terms may be learned at Messrs. W. H. ALLEN and Co.'s, 7, Leadenhall Street.

SUPERIOR BOARD and LODGING, on the plan of a small and select family circle, are offered to Ladies and Gentlemen from India, by a Lady of high Oriental connections, who has resided many years in various parts of the Continent, moving in the best foreign society. Her house is pleasantly situated in the immediate vicinity of Hyde Park North and Kensington Gardens, and a footman is kept. High testimonials of respectability will be given and required.

Address, A. M. D., BARNHAM's Library, Albion Street, Hyde Park Square.

116, Jermyn Street, St. James's, London.
THE public are hereby informed that the business of Mr. SAMUEL NOCK, GUN-MAKER, has been removed from Regent Circus, Piccadilly, to 116, Jermyn Street, a few doors from Regent Street, Waterloo Place, where it will be carried on as heretofore, and solicit a continuance of that liberal support so long enjoyed.

Their branch house at Calcutta, Messrs. MANTON and Co., have always on hand a large assortment of their Guns, Rifles, &c., and will be carried on in future in connection with each other.

Gentlemen proceeding to India are respectfully solicited to an inspection of their stock, which will be found replete with every article in the sporting line necessary for their equipment, and at reasonable prices. Superior Tiger Rifles always on hand, and good Double Guns from £25 and upwards.

EAST-INDIA LAW AGENCY, No. 27, SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

This Agency has been established for conducting Appeals in the Privy Council; for the Recovery of Debts, and other Money and Property from parties residing in India; for effecting Compromises of Debts with Indian Creditors; for the preparation of Deeds, and the general management of all Indian matters in which the professional services of a solicitor are desirable.

The London Branch is conducted, as above, by Mr. W. D. H. OEHME, Solicitor, and a Member of the Incorporated Law Society.

GUTTA PERCHA TUBING.

Many inquiries having been made as to the DURABILITY of GUTTA PERCHA TUBING, the GUTTA PERCHA COMPANY beg to call attention to the following Extracts of Letters from parties who have used it for a considerable length of time.

From SIR RAYMOND JARVIS, Bart.

"VENTNOR, ISLE OF WIGHT,
March 10th, 1852.

"In reply to your letter respecting the Gutta Percha Tubing for Pump Service, I can state with much satisfaction, it answers perfectly. Many Builders and other persons have lately examined it, and there is not the least apparent difference since the first laying down, now several years; and I am informed that it is to be adopted generally in the houses that are being erected here."

From C. HACKER, Esq., Surveyor to

HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF BEDFORD.

"OFFICE OF WORKS, WOBURN PARK,
January 10th, 1852.

"In answer to your inquiries respecting the Gutta Percha Tubing for Pump Sections, I find that the water has not affected it in the least, although it will eat lead through in two years; we have adopted it largely, being cheaper than lead, much easier fixed, and a more perfect job."

Tubing of any required length, of every size up to six inches in diameter.

MANUFACTURED BY THE

GUTTA PERCHA COMPANY, Patentees,

10, Wharf Road, City Road, London;

AND SOLD BY THEIR WHOLESALE DEALERS IN TOWN AND COUNTRY.

ESTABLISHED 60 YEARS.

PEAKOME'S SADDLERY, &c. for all parts of the world.—Noblemen, gentlemen, and emigrants, are solicited to purchase at fair remunerating prices, and compare them with extortionate prices charged by others.—Best hogskin saddles complete, four guineas; ditto second quality, 70s.; best double bridles, 18s.; best patent carriage collars, 15s.; best pair-horse carriage harness, 18 guineas; round double reins, 40s.; best single harness, £7.

7, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, and 8, Edwards Street, Portman Square.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS A MOST EFFECTUAL CURE FOR DROPSY.—Extract of a letter from Edward Rowley, Esq., of the Indian Walk Estate, Tobago, dated April 8, 1852:—"To Professor Holloway, Sir,—I deem it a duty I owe to you and the public at large to inform you of a most miraculous recovery from that dreadful disease, dropsy, and which, under God, was effected by the use of your Pills. I was tapped five times in the course of eight months, and skillfully treated by two medical practitioners. Notwithstanding which, I got worse, and my strength failed so much as to leave no hopes of recovery. I then tried your Pills, which in six months perfectly cured me."

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 944, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, &c. &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKING, KNEE-CAPS, ANKLETS, &c., which have been tested in the hottest climates, and proved invaluable in all cases where support is necessary. They are drawn on with ease, as an ordinary stocking, and perfectly porous. They produce a pressure equal and permanent in every part, and not a muscle of the limb is impeded in its free and healthy action. They are now recommended by every London practitioner of eminence, and may be ordered through Messrs. JOHN WOOLER and Co., Bombay (of whom prospectuses may be obtained); Messrs. GRINDLAY and Co.; and 5, Vere Street, London.

A MARRIED CLERGYMAN, residing on his benefice, in a beautiful and healthy part of Hert, desires to receive and EDUCATE FOUR BOYS, from nine to twelve years of age. References of the highest character. Terms moderate. Address, Rev. M. A., Mr. THOMSON'S, Bookseller, Upper King Street, Holborn.

GREAT EXHIBITION, Class 3, No. 22,—a Case of INDIAN CONDIMENTS, CURRIES, CHUTNEE, SAUCES, SEEDS, &c., by PAYNE and SON, 394 and 398, Regent Street, London, which obtained "THE HONOURABLE MENTION" of the Royal Commissioners.

THE BEST INDIAN CURRY POWDER, in 1 lb. bottles 2s. 6d.; ½ lb., 2s. 3d.; and ¼ lb., 1s. 6d.; or 7 lb. bottles for 21s.

INDIAN CURRY and MULLIGATAWNY PASTE, in bottles 2s. 3d. and 2s. 6d. each.

THE DELHI CHUTNEE, 1s. 6d. per bottle.

THE INDIAN CURRY SAUCE, of superior quality, in antique bottles.—This hot and piquant Sauce is peculiarly adapted for Steaks, Chops, Game, Fish, Cold Meat, Soups, &c. The addition of a little of this Sauce, in cases where a curry cannot be procured, will prove a valuable accompaniment to connoisseurs.

All Indian Condiments, Mangoes, Sauces, &c., from Calcutta direct.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE

MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of CROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

DECAYED TEETH and TOOTH-ACHE.—Price 2s. 6d.

—Patronized by Her Majesty and H.R.H. Prince Albert. Mr. HOWARD'S WHITE SUCCEEDANUM for stopping decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and immediately HARDENS INTO A WHITE ENAMEL; in will remain in the tooth many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, and arresting the further progress of decay, and is far superior to anything ever before used, as it will NEVER BECOME DISCOLOURED in the tooth. All persons use it themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Prepared only by Mr. Howard, Surgeon-Dentist, 17, George Street, Hanover Square, who will send it into the country free by post. Sold by Savory, 220, Regent Street; Sanger, 150, and Hanny, 63, Oxford Street; Butler, 4, Chesham; Johnston, 69, Cornhill; and all medicine vendors in the kingdom. Price 2s. 6d. Mr. Howard continues to supply the loss of teeth on his NEW SYSTEM OF SALP-ABSORPTION, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. 17, George Street, Hanover Square. At home from 10 till 4.

SUMMER.—The recurrence of the summer solstice invites the full display of female beauty—adorning the fashionable mode, the ride, and drive; in all its concomitant dust, materials, and... producing sunburn, tan, freckles, and discolourations, of an almost indelible character. To obviate and eradicate these baneful results, recourse may with confidence be had to ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, a preparation of vital importance to the sustenance of female beauty. It imparts a refreshing coolness to the skin, allays heat and irritability, purifies it from all eruptions, and realises a clear and fair complexion. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its selection by royalty, and the several courts throughout Europe, together with the élite of the aristocracy.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

The new and beautiful Perfume, ROWLAND'S AQUA D'ORO, is an essence of the subtlest and most durable pungency, the aroma and bouquet of which are the most refreshing known, and have caused it to be patronized by the élite of the aristocracy, whose judgment and good taste are never at fault. Its odorousness, its revivifying effect, its refreshing properties, and its choice perfume applied to the delicate mouchoir of the belle of fashion render it an essential accompaniment to places of public amusement and crowded assemblies. In all cases of over-excitement or fatigue it will prove gratefully refreshing, if taken as a cooling beverage, diluted with water.—Price 3s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the growth, and for preserving, improving, and beautifying the Human Hair.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s. 1 family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for preserving and beautifying the Teeth, strengthening the Gums, and for rendering the Breath sweet and pure.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

Beware of SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS," preceding that of the article, on the wrapper or label. Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London; and by chemists and perfumers.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

ANOTHER step has been made, we trust, towards the termination of hostilities with Burmah, by the capture of Bassein, which was taken in the last war without opposition, —the governor having abandoned and burnt the town, on the approach of our forces,—but has not been won upon the present occasion without a struggle. On the 17th May, General Godwin and Commodore Lambert, with 400 men of H.M.'s 51st Regiment, 300 men of the 9th Madras N.I., 60 Sappers and Miners, the Royal Marines, some seamen of H.M.S. Fox, and a few Artillerymen, embarked at Rangoon on board the steamers Tenasserim, Sesostrie, and Mozuffer, which ascended the Bassein river; and, after being joined by the Pluto on the 19th, the squadron anchored abreast of Bassein. The troops were landed immediately. The Pagoda was first carried, and then a strong mud fort was, after an obstinate defence, gallantly stormed by the detachment of H.M.'s 51st, accompanied by Lieutenant Rice, R.N., Lieutenant Ford, with the Sappers and Miners, and joined by Lieutenant Ansley, with a detachment of the 9th Madras N.I., the whole commanded by Major Errington. On the opposite bank of the river, a stockade was carried by a party commanded by Captain Campbell, of the Sesostrie. The enemy suffered, it is stated, very severely. Our loss was 3 men killed; 7 officers and 24 men wounded. After leaving a detachment at Bassein, General Godwin returned to Rangoon.

The intelligence from this place is to the 26th May, at which period no further engagement had taken place, the Burmese having made no attempt to disturb the force. The Governor of Rangoon and his family narrowly escaped falling into our hands. An expedition was sent against him, consisting of two companies of the 18th Royal Irish, and two companies of the 35th Madras N.I., under Lieut.-Col. Apthorp, of the latter corps. After a trip by water of twenty-five miles, and a march of seven through a very hot, close jungle, the force came upon the Governor; but although he had 1,500 men with him, he fled when our force got within three-quarters of a mile of the enemy. A number of hackeries, containing powder, muskets, swords, &c., fell into the hands of our troops. The Governor of Dalla had not been quite so fortunate. The Phlegethon, while going up the Irrawaddy on a surveying expedition, to ascertain the state of the channel, &c., fell in with him and his family on their way to Ava. The passengers escaped, but treasure to the amount of Rs. 11,000, with much valuable property, was taken.

Several expeditions had been undertaken to ascertain the depths of the numerous branches of the Irrawaddy river, but without finding a navigable channel for any but flat-bottomed vessels. It is expected, however, that these streams will deepen in the rains, and then our vessels will be able to steam right up to Prome.

The Phlegethon returned on the 25th May to Rangoon, from a trip up the river; she went twenty miles above Donobew, and no fortifications were found there, merely the town, and the remains of the works destroyed in the last war. The people flocked in hundreds to the steamer, begging to know if the country is to be annexed by the British: about 300 of them came down in boats with the steamer. The Burmese inhabitants were returning to Rangoon in great numbers, and their earnest request is, that we would not again give them over to the tyrannical government of Ava.

The cruelties inflicted upon the wretched people by the native authorities are described as frightful. "Were we to describe even a small portion of the atrocities inflicted on defenceless women and children, for the adhesion of their husbands and fathers to our cause," says the Friend of India, "we should be met with a smile of incredulity."

"These cruelties have at length created a reaction. At a place five miles from Rangoon, in a village of about a thousand houses, the villagers armed themselves with a hundred muskets and two hundred spears, and having dressed themselves up to resemble foreigners, drove off 300 of the viceroy's marauders. In another district, the Peguers rose upon his troops, and thoroughly expelled them, after three days of severe fighting. The leader of this successful rising was Moung Loong, a Talein. Soon after, a cluster of villages between Rangoon and Mow-bee combined together and beat off their oppressors. Other villages are rising in various directions, and the Peguers are universally declaring themselves the partisans of the English. Thousands of families have flocked to Rangoon, and obtained our protection. Those who have the best opportunities of knowing the popular feeling throughout the Delta feel the most perfect conviction that, if the Governor-General were at liberty at once to declare Pegu British, the people would rise en masse and expel the Burmese, leaving little for our troops to do. The inhabitants of Pegu, whose ancestors were once lords of the ascendant in Burmah, have a whole century of wrongs to avenge; and they have most readily taken advantage of the present humiliation of their oppressors to inflict the most signal retribution on them. We believe that in no country which we have ever entered before have the inhabitants been so ready to receive us, and so eager to transfer their allegiance to us, and to obtain our protection. Our mild and equitable rule in the adjacent provinces of Moulmein and Arracan, has prepared the people of the intermediate districts to hail our advent with the most heartfelt joy, and to form the largest expectations from it. The question which we have now, therefore, to decide is, whether we shall a second time repel their advances, and hand them over again to the tender mercies of their remorseless and exasperated oppressors, or receive them under our protection, and give them British institutions."

It would, indeed, appear as if the Burmese empire were on the eve of dissolution. The army which our forces encountered at Rangoon is said to have been greatly overestimated. We are now told that it consisted of peasantry, impressed for the occasion, who could be kept together only by success and the hope of plunder, and who deserted in large bodies on the first reverse. From deserters who had come in, it appeared that the viceroy had only 3,000 men under his own standard at Mow-bee, and two small bodies of 1,000 each at two other posts; there was also a report that another body of about 3,000 men were employed in stockading another position. Eight thousand men, therefore, constituted the entire number of our opponents.

A report was in circulation upon our eastern frontier, that the king was dead; but it is supposed that a change in the royal councils had given rise to this rumour. According to Mr. Crawford, the Burman form of government is an absolute despotism; but the sovereign is assisted by two councils: one, a public council, consists of four woongees, each of whom has a woondok, or deputy; the other, a privy council, composed of four atwen-wons, or inside officers, who are the king's private advisers.

The news from Arracan was satisfactory. No attack had been made even on the most exposed of the districts—that of Sandoway, and there appears to be little danger of any invasion. The apprehensions which were at one time entertained, from the assemblage of Burmese troops on their own side of Arracan, have entirely disappeared since we attacked Rangoon.

The little war on the far north-west frontier seems to be increasing in its dimensions. After a succession of petty encounters, in which little or no damage was suffered on either side, on the 13th May the hill fort of Praumgurrh was attacked and destroyed. It is described as a very strong village. The heights were covered with the enemy's skirmishers, who kept the Guide Corps, the 66th Goorkahs, and Coke's infantry, pretty well employed in returning their fire. A considerable number of the enemy were slain by the guns. Our loss is said to amount to twenty-three killed and wounded; there were no casualties amongst the officers. A correspondent of the Lahore Chronicle writes:—

"The ground in advance of Praumgurrh was especially suited to light infantry movements, being terraced in the ordinary manner of the hills for facilitating irrigation. The whole force had advanced steadily to within some seven or eight hundred yards of the place, the infantry of the guides skirmishing in front; the guns had been placed in position, and were about to open, when the sepoys of the 1st Punjab infantry (Sir C. Napier's undisciplined rabble) could be held back no longer. They rushed forward in the most impetuous manner up to the village, which was found surrounded by a wall, effected an almost immediate entrance, poured through the streets, and followed the enemy up the hill, beyond it, in a manner that was the admiration of all who witnessed the boldness, suddenness, and success of the attack; the Guides emulating them in their exertions. So rapid was their advance, that some shells from the guns fell amongst them, fortunately without doing them any harm."

Subsequently to this affair, the Punjab Guide Corps had a skirmish with a party of the enemy, in which Lieutenant Hardinge, commanding the cavalry, was wounded, and Major S. Brown, of the 66th Goorkahs, died soon after, of a coup de soleil. On the 17th, Sir Colin Campbell heard that a large body of Swattees had come down into the Raneezaie valley, and were at Skarkote, the first village at the mouth of the valley; accordingly, on the following morning, he moved down towards them, and whilst reconnoitering at the head of a troop of the Guide Cavalry, a volley was sent into the force, by which six of our men were knocked over. Sir Colin immediately brought up the Guides, Goorkahs, and H.M.'s 32nd. The enemy stood their ground well for some time, but at length gave way, leaving 130 dead bodies on the field. The Swat cavalry was pursued by ours to the very foot of the Kohat hills. We had nine men killed, and some twenty or thirty wounded; no officer touched.

A private letter says:—

"Sir Colin Campbell led the Guides himself; the Swattees showed a bold front; but after one charge they broke and fled in all directions. The guides under Lumsdaine have suffered severely,—twelve killed and twenty-one wounded; he (Lumsdaine) had a narrow escape. The Swatees will not again try the valley as a battle-field, but they will most decidedly show themselves not wanting in pluck if we go into their hills, a move which seems to have been pretty nearly decided on."

Sir C. Campbell had made arrangements for entering the Swat hills on the 23rd May. The Delhi Gazette says: "We have every reason to believe that a large force will take the field early in the ensuing cold weather, for the purpose of effectually checking the depredations of the hill tribes. Lalpoorah will, it is said, be the direction in which this force will, in the first instance, march."

The intelligence from Afghanistan, if it can be relied upon, is of some importance. According to the advices received by the Delhi paper, Gholam Hyder Khan and Mahomed Ameen Khan, sons of Dost Mahomed, with eight thousand troops, cavalry and infantry, and twelve guns, marched from Cabul for Herat, as stated in our last Summary, and, at the date of the latest accounts, they were encamped near the fort of Kazee, whence they were to move on to Herat. It appears, however, by intelligence received from Herat, that a pitched battle had been fought between the Candaharee sirdars, with a large number of troops, and the troops of Yar Mahomed's son, under Shere Mahomed Khan Huzara, numbering between twelve and thirteen thousand men of all arms. The engagement lasted eight hours, during which it is said about two thousand men were killed. Among the Candaharees, the son of Kohundil Khan was killed. The Candaharees ultimately took to flight, the Heratees pursuing them as far as Furrab. The Candaharees, being unable to remain longer at Furrab, were obliged to march direct to Candahar, which they reached after suffering great privation. The Heratees returned to Herat in triumph. Gholam Hyder had been ordered by Dost Mahomed Khan to halt.

News had arrived from Toorkistan, to the effect that the ringleaders of the revolt at Nimluck, against the son of Ukram Khan, had come to terms, after paying a fine of seven thousand rupees. The son of Ukram Khan has, it is said, appointed a new ruler at Nimluck.

The Indian public was somewhat startled by a statement that the King of Oude was preparing for war with the British Government. It since appears that the demonstration was the result of a temporary fit of insanity.

Calcutta and the southern and eastern parts of Bengal have been visited by a violent hurricane, which has done immense damage to property. The shipping escaped with less injury than might have been anticipated. The principal sufferers are the owners of houses, both natives and Europeans. In Calcutta alone, according to the Chief Magistrate's returns, 2,657 thatched huts, 526 tiled huts, and 40 pukka buildings, were destroyed during the hurricane; eleven persons were killed and two wounded. At Dum-Dum the monumental pillar to the officers and men of the troop of horse-artillery killed at Cabul was blown down, the riding-school levelled with the ground, together with the officers' fives-court, the Golundaze lines, and part of the bazar.

An unfortunate misunderstanding, leading to an actual collision and loss of life, occurred between the 6th and 64th regiments of Bengal Native Infantry at Agra.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN THE COURT OF AVA AND THE INDIAN GOVERNMENT.

THE BURMESE MINISTERS TO THE ENGLISH GOVERNMENT, THROUGH THE GOVERNOR OF MARTABAN.

The Egga Maha Tanadee Patee, and the great officers and ministers of state, who are ever prostrate at the royal feet of the Meng Tarahgyee Phoooya, who is all powerful, Lord of the Universe, Master of the Tsat-tang Elephant, and all White Elephants in the Burman Dominion, Lord of Life, who is like unto the Lotus Flower, declare that—

Commodore Lambert, the officer in command of the war-vessels of the Queen of England, came to Rangoon, in the Burmese dominions, with a letter requesting that certain merchants who had been unjustly oppressed by the Governor of Rangoon, should have reparation made them, and suggesting the propriety of the dismissal of the Governor. In accordance, therefore, with the great friendship existing between the two countries, the Atwengdaw-mre (perpetual privy councillor), Mahameng Gyam, and the Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Menggyee Menteng Raza, were deputed with letters to the officer in command of the war-vessels, Commodore Lambert, and with a despatch to be transmitted by him to the English Government, to the effect that the Governor of Rangoon would be recalled, and a fit person appointed in his room. On the 2nd January, 1852, the officer in command, Commodore Lambert, wrote and delivered a letter to the Deputy Governor of Rangoon, urging that equal promptitude should be shown in the final settlement as had attended the dismissal of those officers who had been the cause of the misunderstanding between the two countries.

While thus the original business was in a fair way of adjustment, there came from the Commodore Lambert, the interpreter Edwards, and some superior officers, with a letter, but in consequence of their not immediately finding the Ayaboing of Hantawadee Pyee Shewedoung Myowoon Thado Mengyee Maha Mengtha Meng Goung Gyo (the present Governor of Rangoon), the Yewoon (deputy governor) and other officers requested them, as they were about to return, to leave the letter with them; this they refused to do, and after they had gone back, they made a report so calculated to breed discord, that the Commodore, saying that he felt angered and insulted, took possession of the King's ship. The Governor of Dallah was then sent to wait upon the Commodore, who informed him that he desired that the sum of Rs. 9,948, which Captains Lewis and Sheppard had been required to disburse to the former Governor of Rangoon, should be repaid, when the ship might be returned. To this a reply was made, that, to prevent any misunderstanding arising between the two countries, the sum of Rs. 9,948 should be repaid, but that his Majesty's ship must be brought back to the place whence she was removed.

Intimation was then given that the negotiation would be proceeded with, upon the Ayaboin Pyee Shewe Doung Myowoon repairing in person on board the [Commodore's] vessel, which was met by a proposition to provide temporary accommodation at some place half-way (between the Viceroy's house and the Commodore's vessel), where the two plenipotentiaries might confer together; but the officer in command of the war-vessels, Commander Lambert, making no reply whatever, and persisting in silence, a subsequent message was sent to him on the 10th January, 1852, begging him not to take away the vessel; to which he replied, that he would not carry her off, and that she might be sent for and taken back; but before the persons sent to take her could arrive, the Commodore went off with her in tow, and, being opposed by the military posts on the way, a conflict ensued.

This communication is now made with the view of eliciting, in reply, the intentions of the English Government; and it cannot be determined whether it has deputed Commodore Lambert simply to dispose of the question relating to the merchants, or whether he has been sent to begin by an attack, which should have the effect of bringing on hostilities between the two countries.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL TO THE KING OF AVA.

Fort William, Feb. 18, 1852.

I have received the letter which your Majesty caused to be addressed to me, relative to the events which have recently taken place at Rangoon, and which was transmitted through the hands of the Governor of Martaban.

Your Majesty desires to elicit a declaration of the intentions of the British Government, and inquires whether Commodore Lambert was deputed simply to dispose of the question relating to the merchants, or whether he has been sent to begin an attack which should have the effect of bringing on hostilities between the two countries. If your Majesty's servants at Rangoon had been faithful to your Majesty's interests, and had conveyed to you a truthful report of all that passed between them and the British officers on the occasion to which reference is made, your Majesty would have seen no cause to inquire what were the intentions of the Government of India, or to doubt the pacific character of its mission. Your Majesty's officers have not correctly represented to you the events which occurred, but have concealed from your knowledge their own misconduct, which has compelled the British Government to change its language, and to prepare for compelling, by force of arms, the reparation it sought by a friendly representation.

The reply which your Majesty addressed to the letter from the Government of India was, in all respects, worthy of a just and sagacious ruler. It admitted the justice of the claims which had been advanced, directed the removal of the Governor of Rangoon, and promised redress by the hands of a new governor, fully armed with powers to afford it. That redress has not been granted by your Majesty's servant at Rangoon; on the contrary, gross and repeated insults have since been offered by him to the British Government, in the person of its officers, and every amende has been evaded or refused.

When Commodore Lambert, on the arrival of the new Governor, proposed to renew negotiations relative to the merchants who had been oppressed, the Governor intimated his readiness to receive, at any time, a communication from Commodore Lambert upon the subject. On the following day, a letter, written on behalf of the British Government, was addressed by the Commodore to the Governor of Rangoon. Although the present Governor and his predecessor had not observed the respect which was due, nor the custom of their own country, and had sent their letters by the hands of men of no rank or consideration whatever, yet those persons were not rejected by the Commodore. And when he despatched his letter to the Governor of Rangoon, it was sent, not by the hands of any such inconsiderable persons, but by the officer next in rank to himself, accompanied by officers of the army and of the fleet. Yet the Governor of Rangoon presumed to refuse all admittance to these officers, bearing a letter to him on the part of the British Government. He not only presumed to refuse to them admittance, but he offered to them insult and indignity. The Deputy-Governor did not approach them, as your servants have falsely reported to your Majesty. No officer was deputed to them. They were approached only by the lowest; they were compelled to remain beyond the door; and were publicly subjected to disrespect and insolence, such as would have been regarded as ignominious by the meanest subordinate in your servant's durbar. The Governor of Rangoon aggravated the injury he thus offered to the British Government, by the audacious and offensive assertion that British officers, thus deputed on an important duty to a high officer, at noon-day, presented themselves at his residence in a state of intoxication. A deliberate insult can never be offered with impunity to the British Government, or to its servants.

The Governor of Rangoon having persisted in refusing to express his regret for the conduct of which he had been guilty, Commodore Lambert rightly considered that the negotiations were at an end, that the demands of the British Government had been refused, and he proceeded (as your Majesty had been informed he would do, if the demands of this Government should not be complied with) to take such measures as should enforce the rights conferred by treaties, should effectually protect the interests of the subjects of the British Government, and should fully vindicate its honour and power.

This Government would thereafter have been justified in rejecting all communication with the Governor of Rangoon; but having no secret intentions, and seeking no pretext for war or conquest, it once more endeavoured to effect an adjustment of the differences that had arisen. The Government of India added nothing to its demands. It required only the reparation it originally specified, together with the indispensable condition that the Governor of Rangoon should express his deep regret for the insult he had put upon the officers of this Government. These most moderate and just demands have been rejected by your Majesty's servant, whom you deputed with power to settle the differences between the states.

Its demand having thus been rejected by your Majesty's servant on your behalf, the Government of India resolved at once to enforce its rights, and to vindicate its power. For that purpose, large preparations were at once commenced, and are now in progress. The receipt of your Majesty's letter has not interfered with, and will not delay or diminish these preparations.

It is still within your Majesty's power to avert from your kingdom the disasters of war; but this can only now be done by a prompt disavowal of the acts of your Majesty's servant at Rangoon, and by a full compliance with the several demands, which are hereinafter enumerated:

1. Your Majesty, disavowing the acts of the present Governor of Rangoon, shall, by the hands of your Ministers, express regret that Captain Fishbourne and the British officers who accompanied him were exposed to insult at the hand of your servants at Rangoon, on the 6th of January last.

2. In satisfaction of the claims of the two captains who suffered exactions from the late Governor of Rangoon; in compensation for the loss of property which British merchants may have suffered in the burning of that city by the acts of the present Governor; and in consideration of the expenses of preparation for war, your Majesty will agree to pay, and will pay at once, ten lacs of rupees to the Government of India.

3. Your Majesty will direct that an accredited agent, to be appointed in conformity with the 7th article of the treaty of Yandaboo, and to reside at Rangoon, shall be received by your Majesty's servants there; and shall, at all times, be treated with the respect due to the representative of the British Government.

4. Your Majesty will direct the removal of the present Governor of Rangoon, whose conduct renders it impossible that the Government of India should consent to any official intercourse with him.

If, without further delay, negotiation, or correspondence, these conditions shall be consented to, and shall be fulfilled on or before the 1st day of April next, hostile operations shall be stayed, peace between the States shall be renewed, and the King's ship shall be restored. But if—untaught by former experience; forgetful of the irresistible power of the British arms in India; and heedless of the many additional proofs that have been given of its might, in the successful fall of the powerful sovereigns of Bhurtpore, of Scinde, of the Sikhs, and of many other princes, since last the Burman rulers vainly attempted to resist the British troops in war—the King of Ava shall unwisely refuse the just and lenient conditions which are now set before him, the British Government will have no alternative but immediate war.

The guilt and the consequences of war will rest upon the head of the ruler of Ava.

BURMAH.

TRANSACTIONS AT RANGOON.

No overtures had been made by the Burmese court, and our demonstration, which was intended "to strike a blow, which should strike terror into the Burmese," had failed to produce that effect. It is stated in some of the reports which have been received, that the king was dead, but from other statements which have reached us, and appear more entitled to belief, we learn that the report is premature, and that there has only been a ministerial revolution at Ava, which has ended in placing the war party in the ascendant. This may be the origin of the report given by the correspondent of the Hurkaru, that a very "bellicose" message had been sent to General Godwin. It will be a very remarkable circumstance, indeed, if any pacific proposals upon which dependence can be placed, should be made to us before we begin our march in good earnest towards the capital. The Woongee, who fled from the pagoda, on the 15th of April, was reported to have established his headquarters at a place called Mow-bee, about forty miles from Rangoon, and seven miles from the banks of the Irrawaddy, on the great military road leading to Promé. A secret expedition under Col. Apthorp, of the Madras army, consisting of about 700 men, was sent up the Irrawaddy in the steamers on the 8th of May, in the hope of capturing him, though he was reported to have an army of 20,000 men with him. In the east, the final cypher is generally redundant. The smoke of the steamers, which the Burmese consider as the angel of death, was seen from his encampment, and he prepared himself for flight. But before he decamped he is reported to have sent to Col. Apthorp to say that he would fight him, man to man, on the plain. The Colonel again is said to have replied that he was ready to meet him, ten to one. The Viceroy or Woon had a ragamuffin rabble of between 2,000 and 3,000 men with him, but not a single gun; his last gun he bequeathed to us on his flight from Rangoon. Our troops disembarked from the steamers and marched off to the encampment seven miles through a broiling sun, but when they were yet three quarters of a mile off, the Woon and his army fled leaving their food in the flesh-pots, and so Col. Apthorp returned with his troops to Rangoon, without actual success, but still with the important intelligence that the viceroy's army had been so reduced in numbers and courage, that the appearance of a single British regiment was sufficient to put them to flight. On this side of Promé, therefore, there is no hostile army. It is reported that a high officer is coming down with 8,000 men from the capital to drive us into the sea. Our only fear is, that he may be coming down to cajole us with hollow offers of peace, which it will require no ordinary degree of moral courage to reject, after the declarations made by the prime minister in the House of Lords.

The Muhanuddy steamer, in endeavouring to move up the river, got aground and broke her back. The 67th Bengal N. I. under the command of Col. Sturt, had been relieved from duty in Arracan, by the 5th Madras N. I. and proceeded to Rangoon. The health of the troops was improving at Rangoon; skeleton timber houses had been sent round from Moulmein, through the indefatigable exertions of Col. Bogle, and were in course of erection at Rangoon, where the troops will now be carefully housed for the monsoon. The steamers in the river had captured the state boat of the viceroy, and also fallen in with the vessels containing the Governor of Dalla and his wives. The governor himself contrived to make his escape, but some of the ladies, and Rs. 11,000—according to others Rs. 13,000—in money, fell into the hands of the captors. The natives had been flocking back by thousands to Rangoon, and erecting huts and opening bazars, which presented a singular and most gratifying contrast to the scene which was exhibited on the last occupation of the town in 1823.

It is evident that the Burmese are unable to collect any force which can give us any disquietude. The strength of the kingdom is broken, and the remains of the army which met us at Rangoon are now employed only in preventing the return of the inhabitants to that town, and in plundering and oppressing all those who manifest any disposition to join us. The circumstances which have occurred in the interior of the country, since we took possession of the town, have completely altered all the anticipations which had been previously formed of the character of the war, and the labours it may impose on us, but this is too large a subject for us to enter upon this week, and we propose, therefore, to discuss it in our next issue.

There has been a painful suspicion abroad for some time, that Captain Impey, formerly assistant to the Commissioner at Moulmein, whose name was recently struck off the roll of the army, was among the Burmese, and had been assisting them with his military knowledge. The rumour is repeated by the correspondent of the Hurkaru, who says: "The report is gaining strength daily that ill-starred fellow Impey is with the enemy, and has been at great pains in disciplining the Burmese soldiers, and that it was only owing to the superior training introduced by him that the Burmese have been able to fight so well." The rumour, however, is altogether without foundation. Captain Impey has been for some time living at Bankok under the assumed name of George Aylmer, drilling the king's troops. He recently wrote to a friend of ours at Singapore for some clothes and furniture, and hoped to be appointed agent to the Singapore merchants, at the capital of Siam. The missionaries at Bankok also allude in their letters to his being there under a different name.—Friend of India, May 27.

CAPTURE OF BASSEIN.

The following epitome was kindly furnished to us by the secretary to Government:—

"General Godwin and Commodore Lambert, with 400 men of H.M.'s 51st regt., 300 men of the 9th M.N.I., 60 sappers and miners, the royal marines, some seamen of H. M. S. Fox, and a few artillerymen, embarked at Rangoon on board the steamers Tenasserim, Sesostria, and Mozuffer, on the 17th of May. They proceeded to the Bassein River, which they ascended after being joined by the Pluto on the 19th. On the afternoon of the same day, the squadron anchored abreast of Bassein without a single accident. There were large stockades on both sides of the river. The troops were landed immediately. The pagoda was first carried, and after that a strong mud fort was, after an obstinate defence, gallantly stormed by the detachment of H. M.'s 51st, accompanied by Lieut. Rice, R.N., Lieut. Ford, with the sappers and miners, and joined by Lieut. Ansley, with a detachment of the 9th M.N.I., the whole commanded by Major Errington. On the opposite bank of the river a stockade was carried by a party commanded by Capt. Campbell, of the Sesostria. The enemy in the mud fort suffered very severely in the contest.

"Total killed and wounded:—3 men killed, 7 officers and 24 men wounded.

"Names of officers wounded:—Lieut. George Rice, R.N., severely; Lieut. John Elliot, royal marines, slightly; Major Errington, H.M.'s 51st, slightly; Capt. Darroch, H.M.'s 51st, slightly; Capt. Rice, H.M.'s 51st, very severely; Lieut. Carter, H.M.'s 51st, severely; Lieut. Ansley, M.N.I. 9th, severely.

"Crowds of natives are daily coming in with their families. The health of the troops is improving daily since the rains set in.

"General Godwin, after leaving a detachment at Bassein, returned to Rangoon."—Englishman, June 2.

Rangoon, 24th May.—Last night the General with part of the force returned from Bassein, I proceed to give you all the particulars I have gathered on the subject, and, as far as they go, they may be relied on.

"The fleet, consisting of the Sesostria, Mozuffer and Tenasserim, left this at 2 p.m., on the 17th, the Pluto having proceeded some thirty-six hours before to get soundings. Bassein, which is some sixty miles above Negrais, was reached by the fleet on the afternoon of the 19th. The Pluto had intercepted a boat which was on its way down to give warning, and on taking the crew on board, nothing could be got of them but that it didn't matter much whether news reached the governor of Bassein or not that a force was coming up against him, as everything was in a perfect state of readiness there to blow us out of the water. The steamers passed close under some works to their right, when suddenly some bindings were cut, some tatties or screens fell down, and a masked battery discovered itself, but strange to say, did not open fire. A little higher up, the troops were landed on the same side of the river. Capt. Latter, advancing some paces ahead with a corporal of the 51st, began to parley with the Burmese behind their works, saying, that if they would not fire on us, we would not fire on them; the reply was, that if our force advanced one step further on, they would fire on us. Capt. Latter said, in that case, we would turn them out root and branch. Hereupon, our gallant interpreter had a brickbat, or clod of earth, thrown at him, which struck him in the face and knocked him over; at the same moment a heavy discharge of musketry and jingals and round shot was poured into us. The corporal accompanying Capt. Latter was killed on the spot, and fell over him whom every one supposed to have been killed. A large mud fort bothered our troops, which, however, was taken from the upper right angle, a considerable détour having to be made to get to it, and here our chief loss was sustained; the place was, however, soon gained. No scaling ladders were required, our fellows getting round by gateway and traversing the place. The Burmese went helter-skelter through the place till they were brought up by a large tank, and here many of them were bayoneted and shot. The Burmese bravely resisted us, not leaving their guns till we had mounted their defences, and many were cut down, Lieut. Ford, the officer commanding the sappers, himself shivering with his sword the skull of a Burman who was below, and in the act of thrusting a spear at him. The whole affair occupied fifty minutes, and a gallant one it was; 5,000 of the king of Ava's picked soldiers were there, and 2,000 men of Bassein. A fair-faced, dark-whiskered man was plainly seen on the works directing the artillery; but whether he was an European or Armenian could not be discerned. The number of Burmese bayoneted shows how bravely the Burmese remained at their posts. Their loss is calculated at 800. The gunnery from the ships was terrific and most effectual; considering our small numbers, our loss is considerable too. Three officers of the 51st wounded, Major Errington, commanding the whole party, was struck in the thigh by a spent round shot. Capt. Rice and Lieut. Carty wounded, the latter severely, having the ball still in his thigh. Two men of the 51st killed, and about twenty-five wounded. Lieut. Ansley, of the 9th N.I., was wounded in the hand, the ball flying up into his arm where it remained; one naick of that regiment was killed and 11 wounded; of the little body of eighteen gallant sappers under Lieut. Ford, though they were in the thick of it, not one was touched. A gallant captain of the 51st had the greater part of one of his whiskers carried away by the roots, as he rejoiced in a large pair of black bushy ones. Fifty-eight pieces of cannon, ranging from 3 to 24-pounders, and upwards of 20 jingals, were taken; an immense number of war boats were sunk and burnt. While the military were at work on the right, the naval brigade landed on the left, and took a strong work there, in which Lieut. Rice of the Fox was wounded. The four companies of the 9th were left there, and two companies of the 51st. The remainder of the 9th are to be sent from this to garrison Bassein immediately. This will leave us very weak; as it is, the 35th N.I. have so few officers (only two subalterns fit for duty) five or six being on the sick list, the rest away on sick certificate, that they have lent the services of a subaltern officer of the 9th to relieve them in the nightly picquets.

An expedition starts for Pegue in a week, we hear. If that is taken, and troops have to be left there, we shall be very short of them here. From the last specimen at Bassein, the Burmese shew themselves determined to withstand us to the last, and every inch of ground will be contested. Depend on it, no place will fall so easily into our hands as Rangoon has done. No loot of any value was taken at Bassein. I hear of some thousands pound, and the usual number of gold umbrellas, glass, crockery, clothing, &c.—Ibid.

"The work that is being thrown up from the west gateway of the pagoda to the opposite angle of the west side of the stockade, with the view of disconnecting the long arm of stockade that projects to the west, is progressing, and will be completed probably in a month. The ground selected for the site of the barracks for our European troops, is where part of the new town (burnt down by the firing from the shipping) stood. The ground has been cleared away, but not a plank is yet erected, so that there is not a chance of the barracks being completed before a month, if then. The site is towards the S.W. angle of the stockade, about midway between the line of stockade on the south, and the wall of the Pagoda. The native corps have been left to make their own arrangements, they will be better off than the Europeans. In front of the lines of the 40th were a row of skeleton houses, the uprights and raised floors, and bamboos forming the roof, being alone left; leaves and mats have been taken off the houses in the vicinity; and with the help of Burmese workmen, who are to be had in abundance, the men have housed themselves very comfortably. There is fortunately a fine large house in rear of the left of the 40th lines, in which the majority of the officers live. This house, from its having been formerly the residence of the Phoenigies (priests) who officiated at a neighbouring temple (the said temple makes an excellent mess-house), has been named, perhaps not quite appropriately, the 'Convent.' There are two smaller houses near, in which the rest of the officers are ensconced. The Dagon pagoda, or Tree Pagoda, I may tell you, stands in the centre of a raised terrace; its form is that of an inverted speaking trumpet; the gilding is greatly effaced, but the open bell-shaped lantern-like work on the top is said to be of pure gold, and still retains its original brightness; this gives the otherwise clumsy-looking mass below it an airy and elegant appearance. The upper terrace, which is square, and whose sides are about 400 yards in length, is raised above the second terrace, say 25 feet; the third or lowest terrace is an equal distance below that again. There are four flights of steps up the centre of each, three of which are covered, the east, south, and west. The 18th royal Irish are at present lodged in the south steps, and the 80th in the west steps. In a former part I have alluded to the opening of the idols—then it had just commenced; for a week after that, the work of delving into every image in the place, of which there are hundreds, was perseveringly carried on, but apparently not with the knowledge of the prize agents, as the European artillery sold in great numbers the silver images, and bottles of rubies that were found inside—out of one image eight artillery men sold 120 rupees worth of curiosities. Very few of these images are of solid silver, and the rubies are very small, and uncut: one or two valuable ones cut and handsomely set have been found. I have seen a sapphire or two, and some cat's-eyes, and lots of crystal. The bells that hung from the open lantern-like things in the tops of the pagodahs (there are hundreds of smaller pagodahs all over the place), and sent forth such a pleasant tinkling sound when the wind blew, have been pulled down by these uncouth Europeans." "To give one an idea of the strength of their stockades, conceive a row of upright timbers extending for miles, as they do round the entire place, except in parts of the north and east sides, each timber fit to be part of the mainmast of a ship, these timbers three deep, and so close to each other that a walking stick could not be passed behind; behind these upright timbers is a row of horizontal ones laid one above another, and behind all is a bank of earth twenty-four feet broad on the top, and at the base forty-five feet. The height of the tops of the uprights from the bottom of the ditch in which they are deeply planted is generally fourteen feet, the upper part of the ditch and that nearest the stockade is filled with a most formidable chevaux de frise in the shape of the pointed branches of trees stuck firmly into the earth, and pointing outwards; beyond this is the deep part of the ditch, which in the rains is of course filled with water. The upright timbers are strengthened by connecting planks, the ends of which are inserted on the tops, the other end of the planks being similarly secured by strong wooden pins in the band inside."

LAW.

SUPREME COURT, MAY 4.

Dwarkanauth Bural and another v. John Lyall and others.—This was a case of great mercantile importance, as it raised the question of the liability of a house of business to pay a bazaar dealer for goods purchased for them by their banian according to the custom of Calcutta. The plaintiffs are bazaar dealers, and the defendants are partners in the firm of James Lyall and company. They had directed their banian to procure for them various goods to the value of Rs. 50,000 to be shipped to Sydney; and amongst other articles a quantity of log line, which the banian had ordered from the plaintiff, who delivered it at the defendants' godowns. The plaintiffs alleged that they had given credit to the defendants, who on their part stated that they had purchased from the banian, and had paid for the articles by crediting him in his account for their value. The banian had made some payments to the plaintiffs, and then became insolvent, and put the plaintiffs in his schedule as his creditors for the balance. This was repudiated by the plaintiffs, who brought their action against the defendants. The plaintiffs endeavoured to prove a special contract with the defendants, but the evidence was not credited by the court, and the point therefore turned on the custom of Calcutta.

Messrs. Prinsep and Peterson, for the plaintiffs.Messrs. Clarke and Hogg, for the defendants.

Judgment.—Peel, C. J.—The action is brought to recover the balance of a sum due for goods sold. To establish the right of a suit, a contract must be established between the plaintiff and these defendants. The sale was not immediately from the plaintiffs to the defendants, but if at all to them, it was immediately through a person who was a banian of the house of the defendants. The sole question is whether the goods were sold on the credit of the defendants. There was no doubt that the goods were the goods of the plaintiffs, that they were sold for the price stated, and that they ultimately came into the hands of the defendants, and that the plaintiffs have not been fully paid for them. They had therefore a right of suit against somebody. If the banian was the agent of the defendants in making the purchase, then the defendants are primarily liable on the general law of principal and agent; and that is the first point to be considered, because there has been some evidence offered for the defendants which seems intended to throw doubt on the existence of that relation between a mercantile firm and its banian. In all commercial cases the evidence of merchants as to the usages of trade is important. We should give the same effect to it that would be given by a special jury of merchants at Guildhall deciding on the facts of a case. But these witnesses are nearly of the same nature as those who are in the penal law termed "experti" on points within their peculiar cognizance. They are not required to instruct us on the general law of principal and agent, but merely to inform us as to facts which may authorize a finding contrary to the general law, by reason of an exception usage varying it. There is a discrepancy between the evidence of the witnesses for the defendants on this point. Two gentlemen, Mr. Haworth and Mr. Mackinlay, gave their evidence to the effect that it is an agency relation; and this we think is a correct view of the subject. Two other gentlemen, apparently speaking with less reflection, and rather speaking as to a legal result than as to a fact, consider that the banian is not in the relation of an agent to a principal, but is, as to purchases made by him in the bazaar for the house, rather to be considered as a buyer on his own account, and a new seller to the house. If this were so, many important variations on the previously understood law, and much to the prejudice of the mercantile community, would result from it. Treated as agents, and their post evidently a fiduciary one, they are liable to the civil and criminal responsibility which attaches to breaches of an important fiduciary relation. If, for instance, bills or other documents within the factor and agent's Act are misapplied, they are brought under the operation of that Act. They are subject also to those important restrictions which prohibit an agent from gaining an advantage at the expense of his principal, and are accountable for profits made, which should be the principal's. But if the relation be viewed merely as one on contract of buyer and seller, the benefit of those securities against fraud and wrong is lost to the principal; property in the hands of the banian might then, in certain cases, be viewed as subject to the clause as to reputed ownership in the Insolvent Act, and on a sudden and unforeseen insolvency of the banian, the goods of a house actually in advance to its banian might be swept away into the hands of the official assignee for the benefit of the banian's general creditors, though in fact paid for with the money of the house. None of these mischiefs can result if the relation be viewed as it has been hitherto understood, as that of an agent to a principal. And as it is not pretended that any contract has established any difference, as between the banian and the house employing him as such, between his purchases for the house and his sales for it, we can see no ground for establishing a one-sided relation, including the latter and not extending to the former. We are therefore clearly of opinion that the purchase of these goods was a purchase for the house by an agent of theirs for the purchase. Still it by no means follows that credit was not given exclusively to the banian. It is not a consequence of showing that a known relation of principal and agent exists in a given transaction, that the principal must therefore necessarily be liable to the claims of the party dealing with the agent, whether the principal be known or unknown. The ordinary law of principal and agent is, that the principal may sue or be sued on a contract made with his agent, though the other party knew nothing of the principal. But the agent may so contract as to be exclusively liable; as for instance, where the form of the instrument leaves no legal resort to any but himself, or where his principal is a foreign one, or where the credit is given exclusively to the agent, as when the seller says in effect, "Though this purchase is made for your principal, I will know you only as my debtor." The fiduciary relation there exists, but the legal remedy of the seller is not co-extensive with it. Now the usage of trade may be most important as evidence to show with whom the contract was made, because, prima facie, it is reasonable to conclude, that parties contracted with reference to it. We have an instance of this exclusive credit established by usage of trade in the case of policies of insurance in London, where by a very long course of trade it has been the practice for the underwriter's right to the payment of the premium to be limited to the insurance broker, though the latter is the avowed agent of a known principal in effecting an insurance for him. So in like manner the usage of trade is cogent evidence to show that such an exclusive credit is given here on purchases by a native banian for his house, in the bazaar, of native dealers. This has been deposed to by many respectable witnesses in this cause, speaking to a mercantile experience in this place for many years past. Their evidence is confirmed by at least one witness for the plaintiff himself, who deposes to the same effect. There are some circumstances which may tend to explain the origin of such a custom and its reasonableness. The evidence would certainly have been stronger had it been confirmed by more native testimony, because the testimony, although that of very respectable gentlemen, is in its nature open to the objection of being that of men interested to avoid a liability, not in this case, but in general cases. But though it is not so strong as it might have been, it is far too strong to be set at nought, and it would be to set it at nought to say it is not sufficient to show the usage, as being the evidence of many most respectable witnesses, and nothing in fact opposed to it, which can in the least avail against it in this cause, and it being in fact supported by some evidence for the plaintiffs. It is stated by Mr. Prinsep that formerly banians were much more opulent than now. If so, this may explain the rise of what appears on the evidence to have been a long-continued usage, that the native sellers looked to the native banian as the buyer from them. Another reason may be, that the laws of the Hindoo seller and the European purchaser are different; and that if they had to deal with the latter, and to look to him exclusively as the buyer from them, their contracts would be governed, if they had to sue for their money, by the English and not by the Hindoo law, one less known to them, and the provisions of which they might, so far as they understood them, not like so well. If this were not so, then if the banian were considered merely as the known agent acting for a known principal on the spot, who was a British subject, then it would follow that the native dealer in the bazaar could not resort at all to the banian, but must resort to the principal, because an agent who discloses himself or is known as an agent in the transaction for a principal who is not a foreigner but on the spot, cannot, unless by express contract he make himself so, be rendered liable on the contract which he makes for his principal. On the whole, therefore, there are circumstances connected with the state of the place and the parties dealing in it, which support the probability of such a custom growing up. No custom should be established except on clear and strong evidence, such as this case supplies. We therefore think that it is established prima facie that the contract was between the plaintiffs and the banian, and not between them and the defendants. No doubt parties may contract themselves out of any law, whether general or exceptional, and if the parties did not take the credit of the banian, they might have declined to deal with him, and have said, "We will look to the merchants, and not to you;" but that should have been communicated, otherwise the principals may be misled in settling with their own banian. An attempt to show this was made by attempting to prove a direct resort to a member of the firm; this we thought improbable at the time; it is certainly not the practice, where there is a banian and a native establishment, and it received the most direct contradiction from the gentleman himself, one of the defendants. Reliance is placed on the receipt, but there is nothing in that inconsistent with the case of the defendants. It is not like an invoice debiting a particular party, and that party one who might not be debited. We should expect a return and repudiation of that inconsistent document. But if the agent buys on his own credit exclusively goods for his principal, he may consistently direct the delivery to be made to his principal, and his principal's signing such a receipt is no acknowledgment, either expressed or implied, that he is to be debited for the goods by the seller who delivers them. We should deem that the evidence fails to show that in this instance a deviation was made with the defendants' sanction from the ordinary course of looking to the banian for such purchases by him as the sole party liable.

The plea of payment is not established. It is true that it is shown that the defendants have paid their own banian for these goods; but he was not the agent for the plaintiff to receive payment, and that payment would not bind them. As the case presents many important questions, and we may not have fully estimated the weight of all the evidence, the plaintiffs have liberty to move, if they think fit to avail themselves of it.

Mr. Prinsep elected to be nonsuited, with leave to move to enter a verdict for the defendant, or for a new trial.

THE LONDON MAIL of the 24th of April arrived at Calcutta on the 29th of May, per the Oriental steamer. The subsequent Mail of May the 24th left Aden on June 11th for Madras and Calcutta, per the Pottinger.

DISTURBANCE BETWEEN NATIVE CORPS.—The Agra Messenger gives an account of a disturbance between the 6th and 64th regiments of N.I. stationed in Agra, which might have proved serious but for the presence of mind displayed by an officer of the former. A bad feeling had for some time been manifest between the two regiments, which broke out into open violence on the 14th. Stones and other missiles were freely thrown, and more dangerous weapons might have been employed but for the officer, who ordered the roll-call to sound, relying on the instinct of discipline to bring back the sepoys to their ranks. The men fell back, but not till several sepoys had been severely wounded, and it will be necessary to move them to another station. The Hurkaru says that the contest recommenced on the following day, and the artillery were called out; the men, however, separated in time. The Morning Chronicle adds that, in consequence of the disturbances, the brigadier had deemed it necessary to remove both the corps from their lines, the 6th being sent to Secundra, and the 64th some miles from their lines. A station Court of Inquiry was being held to investigate all the circumstances connected with the disturbance.

COURTS-MARTIAL.—The judge-advocates are likely to have plenty to do in the Upper Provinces this hot weather. Only a few days ago we recorded a batch of courts-martial ordered at Agra (p. 383), and now we learn with sorrow that several officers are about to be tried at Lucknow, for being concerned in a duel, which was fought with one pistol, and no seconds, either at Goruckpore or Lucknow, we know not which. The names of the officers have been given us, but we refrain from publishing them at present.—Englishman, May 20.

THE "BLACK ACTS."—The Englishman says, that the order of the home authorities to pass the Black Acts has been received in Calcutta.

CURIOUS CASE.—The Englishman publishes a report of a very curious case recently decided by the Sudder Adawlut. The plaintiff, a "purohit," or father confessor, had been discharged by the defendant, a Hindoo gentleman, and demanded to be restored. The moonsiff and principal sudder ameen of Sylhet decided in favour of the claim, upon which the defendant appealed to the Sudder Court. The question to be considered was really whether the civil courts could take cognizance of matters of this description, and four of the Sudder judges decided that they had no jurisdiction, the case being purely a case of conscience, which the court could not hope to decide aright. Mr. Mills, however, differed from the other judges, holding that the former precedents of the court which allowed such cases to be entertained, should be upheld. The suit was dismissed, and the decisions of the lower courts reversed, both parties paying their own costs.

THE MARCH OF INTELLIGENCE in Calcutta is singularly rapid, at least if we may judge from the correspondence columns of our contemporaries. Two native mango-sellers, owners apparently of "The Grand Mango Fair," at the Exchange, have addressed a letter to the Englishman, declaring that they have been greatly injured by an article in his paper. They were accused of demanding exorbitant prices, and rebut the charge with a degree of indignation only to be compared with that of some of the London shopkeepers who find their wares shown up in the Lancet. They ask whether it is possible that they can be guilty of such an imposition as to sell their fruit at a profit of 500 per cent., and finish the epistle by a sly advertisement of their goods, "which are seen on tables of the first class of people."

Violent Storm.—The great event of this part of India is a storm of fearful violence, which passed over Calcutta in the night of the 14th ult. It was equal, some think more than equal, in strength, to the one of June 2nd, 1842,—ten years ago this day—which did so much damage among the shipping. Furious as was the recent hurricane, however, we did not get the strongest part of it here, the centre having passed to the eastward. The damage done afloat was more among the small river craft than the shipping. The shore along the whole front of Calcutta was one mass of tangled wreck, the remains of boats and their cargoes. None of the larger vessels off town received any severe injury, though a few of them were driven ashore for a short time. The most noticeable shipwreck is that of the Nereides, at the Sandheads, with the loss of the greater part of her crew. Her pilot, chief mate, and three or four of the men, have been picked up in the Sunderbunds. Two of the sailors who were thrown on those desolate islands, were, it has been stated, so nearly reduced to starvation, that they were fain to satisfy the cravings of hunger on the putrifying body of a shipmate who died soon after they got on shore! The damage done on land in Calcutta and the adjacent country was very great. Hardly a house in town escaped injury, while, according to a police return, above three thousand huts and above forty brick buildings were blown down. According to the same official statement eleven lives were lost in the town. Perhaps the most remarkable circumstance connected with the storm, and the best evidence of its fury, is the fact that (by police computation) about thirty-five thousand crows and kites lay dead in the streets, beaten down from the trees which had been their roosting-places! The atmospheric convulsion appears to have been felt more or less over nearly the whole of India. Since its occurrence we have had extremely hot weather. —Hurkaru, June 2.

The 74th N.I.—We regret to state, that a letter dated the 19th May, on the river, twenty miles below Barripore, Beaulah, gives distressing accounts of the voyage of the 74th N.I. from Dacca. Their first misfortune was cholera, which still continues, and upwards of twenty men have already fallen victims to its ravages. On the night of the 14th, and morning of the 15th, the Cyclone burst upon them, six boats were completely destroyed, several blown high and dry inland, amongst which were three of the officers' boats, one of which had to be abandoned, it had taken such a long inland journey. On the 18th, they lost another large boat. —Englishman.

Mr. Herklots.—We have this week the melancholy duty of recording the death, on the 26th of May, of Mr. Gregory Herklots, of Chinsurah, the last relic of the old Dutch establishments in India, which, when he entered the service, comprised a body of more than fifty civilians. Mr. Herklots was born at Bremen, at the beginning of 1768, and came out to India in 1789, when he was appointed a member of the Dutch service at Chinsurah. The highest office he attained in it was that of magistrate; but this was only owing to the confusion consequent on the hostilities in which the Dutch were twice involved with England. Had the Dutch power remained unbroken, he would have risen to the highest post in the service. In 1791, Mr. Herklots was married to a young widow, who proved to be a most excellent wife, and the union continued to be a source of the highest conjugal and family happiness to both, during the long period of fifty-five years it subsisted. They had a large family of sixteen children, four of whom only survive them. At the time of his death, Mr. Herklots had also thirty-seven grand-children, thirty-nine great grand-children, and one great-great grand-child, in all, a patriarchal family of eighty-one descendants, a most extraordinary sight in a country so remarkable for the fluctuations of society and the rapid extinction of families. —Friend of India, June 3.

Fraudulent Transaction.—It was some time ago rumoured, and we believe the Englishman mentioned it, that the London agent of a Mofussil Bank had made large advances to a branch house at home on shipments of certain goods which, on arrival here, turned out just half the quantity invoiced. We have since ascertained that these shipments consisted of copper, and that, although the boxes were in appearance of the customary five-hundredweight size, they never could have contained more than half that quantity. Unfortunately, this transaction has not been confined to one shipment, but consisted of a succession of consignments, on each of which advances were made by several banks and banks' agents in London, on the hypothecation of the usual shipping documents. As the consignors and drawers of the bills have failed in England, and the consignees here have likewise gone through the Insolvent Court, the shipments in question had to be landed and disposed of by the holders of the documents. An idea may be formed of the extent of the loss, by the fact, that one of the shipments on which Rs. 20,000 had been advanced, hardly realized Rs. 10,000. As far as we have been able to learn, the total loss falling upon the parties who made advances, will amount to somewhere near two lakhs of rupees; and as the estates of the insolvents hold out no prospect of a dividend of more than five per cent. it will take rather a long time to make good the loss by exchange operations. This is the result of making advances on the "pig in the poke." We hope, for the sake of the parties concerned, that the difference in the quantity will be "satisfactorily explained;" because we cannot believe that any shipper would have the temerity knowingly to be a party to such a disreputable transaction. —Hurkaru, May 25.

European Officers with the Burmese.—Some rumours have been afloat in Calcutta, stating that certain French officers had proceeded to Rangoon for the purpose of joining the Burmese. From information that has reached us, we are disposed to believe the following account to be strictly correct. Two Frenchmen, one of them a cavalry officer, formerly in the Spanish service, took their passage in the ship Emperor, under the disguise of Spanish Jews, and although suspicion had been excited that they were other than they represented themselves to be, the facts were not fully elicited until the vessel had sailed, when a report of the circumstance, giving the real name (Captain Dugency) of one of them was made to the proper authorities. We know not what steps the authorities may deem fit to take in the matter, but the best plan in our opinion would be to send a despatch by the Berenice which will start immediately, and will reach Rangoon before the Emperor, desiring the commodore to deem these French visitors as contraband, and to return them by the first steamer. —Englishman, June 2.

Public Works by Private Persons.—The list of the public works executed by private individuals, which is published annually in the Calcutta Gazette, seems to grow every year "small by degrees and beautifully less." We trust we yield to none in our admiration of disinterested benevolence, but it is impossible to avoid a smile at the contrast between the length of the pompous official list, and the meagre deeds it is intended to celebrate. There is one heavy item in the catalogue, which is important, not only from its magnitude, but from its connection with a peculiar feature in native society. Radhamoney Dassee—popularly called Rassmoney—a Hindoo lady, is set down as having erected a temple at Dukhinsur, at an expense of Rs. 50,000. This Rassmoney Dassee is the widow of Rajchunder Mar, a man of very low caste, who inherited an immense fortune from his father in Calcutta, and died nearly twenty years since, leaving his widow one of the richest dowagers in the country. All Hindoo widows left in independent circumstances, fall of necessity into the power of the Bramhuns, and a very large proportion of the finest temples in the country owe their origin and endowments to their piety or superstition. Steeped to the lips in ignorance, and utterly destitute of occupation, the priest obtains over them a power equal to that exercised by a father confessor over a Parisian devotée, and, as a matter of course, employs it to the advantage of his creed, and his own order. This is the reason why, in this country, female liberality invariably takes the shape of massive temples with splendid endowments, the former watched over and the latter enjoyed by the priests, who suggested both. In the present instance, the temple at Dukhinsur is merely one of a series of great works executed by this native lady, who has been for years the greatest benefactor of the Bramhuns in Bengal. —Friend of India, May 27.

The Screw War Steamer "Rattler." is a perfect puzzle to the Burmese: it is a contrivance they cannot understand—a mystery they are unable to solve. They gape and wonder and are lost in amazement; in short, they can make nothing of it. They see a large ship move, without a rag of canvas and independent of wind and tide, where she likes and how she likes; and all this with no visible machinery to impel her through the water. They see a funnel, it is true, and smoke issuing from it, but there are no paddles, nothing that agitates and ruffles the water through which and in spite of which she works her way by some silent and secret agency. Numbers of them have paddled round and round her in their canoes to discover, if possible, the unknown cause of motion; but it is of no use—they can detect nothing. They return baffled and confounded, and I dare say by this time their minds are so far made up on the subject, that the Rattler is put in motion by an agency nothing short of infernal. —Letter from Rangoon.

Volunteering for Foreign Service.—A number of native regiments, including two or three Sikh corps, have volunteered for service in Burma.

Jotee Persaud.—The application to the Supreme Court on behalf of Isoreepersaud, for an injunction to restrain Lalla Joteepersaud from receiving any further advances from Government, has been rejected.

THE RAILWAY.—The process of ballasting and laying down the rails has been commenced at Bali Khal.

CIRCULATION OF THE SCRIPTURES.—The "Fifth Report of Operations in Translating, Printing, and Circulating the Sacred Scriptures in the Languages of India, by the Calcutta Baptist Missionaries," informs us that, between the years 1847 and 1851, no fewer than 222,761 copies of the Bible were distributed amongst the natives of this country.

MONEY is said to be so plentiful in the Calcutta bazaar, that loans on deposit of Company's paper may be obtained from the shroffs at the rate of 3½ per annum.

AN INDIAN COMMISSION.—Under every point of view, the deputation of a parliamentary commission to this country, even if there was sufficient time left for its labours, appears to be unadvisable. All the information which the parliamentary committee can require, relative to the nature and operation of the institutions we have given to India, is to be obtained in England, from the various retired officers of Government, and from private individuals unconnected with the state, who have passed their lives in India. As the object of the committee is to investigate and report on the efficiency of our measures, not the personal character of our public men, the committee might, moreover, summon from India any of those members of Government who were likely to furnish them with the most valuable data for the compilation of their report. Such a course was freely adopted in the case of Ceylon, when a committee was appointed with the view of annoying an obnoxious Governor, and there could be no impropriety in pursuing the same plan, for the accomplishment of a nobler object, which affected the welfare of many millions of our Indian subjects. It is also a matter of great importance that the opinion of intelligent natives regarding the present character and ulterior improvement of Government measures in India, should be submitted to the committee at home, and receive all due consideration. And this cannot be more effectually accomplished than by the transmission of Memorials from the various native communities at each of the Presidencies, embodying their views and wishes. — Friend of India.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

MEDICAL OFFICERS.

Notification.—Fort St. George, May 13, 1852.—The Most Noble the Governor of Bengal has been pleased to resolve that, in the event of a medical officer posted at the sudder station of a district being required to attend professionally a public officer on duty in the interior of the district, he will be entitled to draw eight annas per mile as travelling allowance, and five rupees per diem during the period of his necessary absence from the sudder station.

Fort William, May 14, 1852.—The Most Noble the Governor-General of India in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the following extract of a military letter from the Hon. Court of Directors to the Governor of presidency of Fort William in Bengal, No. 32, of the 17th March, 1852.

"Para 16. By the G. O of 19th July, 1822, it is declared 'that the attendance of the medical officers in their professional capacity on the families of the officers of the corps to which they are attached is an imperative part of the duty to be performed by them,' and that this order 'is applicable to medical attendance by presidency surgeons, garrison surgeons and staff surgeons of stations, on the officers of the army, and their families, who may make application to them for professional advice.' Your decision, that the principle of this order is applicable to all cases in which a military officer requires aid for himself and family, has our full approval."

VOLUNTEER REGIMENTS FOR BURMAH.

Fort William, May 21, 1852.—The Governor-General of India in Council has the greatest satisfaction in publicly announcing that the 3rd and 4th regiments of Sikh local infantry, and the Ramghurh light infantry battalion, together with the cavalry and artillery attached to it, have come forward voluntarily and entirely of their own accord, to proffer their services for employment beyond sea, in Burmah.

It has afforded the Governor-General in Council the highest gratification to observe the soldierly feeling displayed by these regiments, in thus volunteering for foreign service; and considering that these are local regiments, engaged to serve within certain assigned limits, his Lordship in Council recognizes as doubly meritorious the spirit which has led them to ask leave to pass, not their own limits only, but those also of the Company's territories, and to proceed by sea to the seat of war.

Should the war with Burmah be prolonged, and should distance and other considerations not prove to be impediments, the Governor-General in Council will very gladly employ these regiments, and with the most entire confidence in the gallantry and efficiency with which they will discharge their duty in the field.

Fort William, Foreign Department, May 27, 1852.—The Governor-General in Council, having learned by a despatch from Lieutenant-General Godwin, C. B., commanding the forces in Ava, Arracan, and the Tenneserim provinces, that the name of Brevet-major Boulderson, deputy judge advocate general of the force, who had also acted as deputy assistant quartermaster-general, and was commended by the lieutenant-general, was omitted in G. G. O., dated April 28th, and having further been informed that Captain Rundall had been erroneously mentioned in the despatch as commanding the Madras sappers and miners, instead of Lieutenant Ford; his Lordship in Council desires to correct the omission and the error, and to offer to Major Boulderson and to Lieutenant Ford the thanks which are their due.

These regiments have been thus prominently mentioned, because the offers of their services were the earliest received by government. But it is with the most cordial satisfaction that the Governor-General in Council is further enabled to notify for public information, that the 33rd, the 37th, and the 10th regiments of native infantry, as well as the regiment of Loodianah, have all come forward in the most creditable and soldier-like manner, eager to be the first to request that they may be employed in foreign service, and sent by land or by sea to Burmah.

These four regiments have set an honourable example to their comrades of the line; and while accepting their loyal offer of service, the Governor-General in Council assures them, that, should occasion arise, they shall have afforded to them the opportunity of evincing in Burmah that spirit and devotion to their duty, which their coming forward in the way they have done abundantly proves them to possess.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

ENSIGN DOUGLAS REID, 2ND (GRENADEER) N. I.

Head-Quarters Simla, May 8th, 1852.—At a general court-martial, re-assembled at Cawnpore on Tuesday, Apr. 27th, 1852, Ens. D. Reid, 2nd (grenadier) N. I., was arraigned upon the following charge:—

For conduct disgraceful to an officer and a gentleman, in having been in a shameful state of intoxication, at Umballa, on Feb. 10, 1852; he having been found in broad day-light, on the afternoon of that day, lying in one of the public roads in the cantonment, insensible from drunkenness, and exposed to the gaze of a crowd of natives who surrounded him.

Finding.—Not guilty, and is acquitted.

Approved and confirmed.

W. M. GOMM, General, C-in-C., East Indies.

Ensign Reid is to be released from arrest, and directed to return to his duty.

CAPT. AND BREV. MAJ. RICHARD OUSELEY, 50TH N. I.

Head-Quarters, Simla, May 11, 1852.—At a general court-martial, assembled at Dinapore, on Thursday, March 4, 1852, Capt. and Brev. maj. R. Ouseley, 50th N. I., was arraigned on the following charges:—

First. For having, about the month of November, 1846, in wilful disobedience of the standing G. O. by Gov., dated Nov. 7, 1821, sold a house and its furniture, at Chota Nagpore, to the Rajah of Patchyt, for Rs. 10,000, or thereabouts, without the permission of Government.

Second. For conduct disgraceful to an officer and a gentleman, in the following instances:

1st. In having, when senior assist. to the Gov. Gen.'s agent, south-west frontier, at Chota Nagpore, on or about Oct. 15, 1848, fraudulently misapplied to his own use Government money, under his charge, to the amount of Rs. 19,945, or thereabouts.

2nd. In having, at Chota Nagpore, on or about Oct. 15, 1848, in a letter addressed to the Assist. acc. gen. to the Government of Bengal, and in a certificate bearing the same date, falsely certified that the sum of Rs. 81,219-7-1 had been on that day delivered over in cash to his successor, Capt. J. C. Hannington, he, Capt. Ouseley, well knowing that, instead of that sum being in the treasury, there was an actual deficiency of Rs. 19,945, or thereabouts.

Finding.—Guilty of the first charge. On the first instance of the second charge, not guilty, and the Court acquit him thereof; guilty of the second instance of the second charge.

As regards the preamble of the second charge, the Court acquit the prisoner of conduct disgraceful to the character of an officer and a gentleman, but find him guilty of unbecoming conduct.

Sentence.—To be severely reprimanded in such manner as his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief may be pleased to direct.

Revised finding.—The Court, after attentively considering the letter No. 25, dated Head-quarters, Camp, Phillour, April 9, 1852, from Maj. J. M. Drake, dep. judge adv. gen., and after a reconsideration of the evidence bearing upon the first instance of the second charge, do respectfully adhere to their former finding thereupon.

Confirmed.

(Signed) W. M. GOMM, General,
Head-Quarters, Simla, C.-in-C., East Indies.
May 5, 1852.

Remarks by his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief.—The Commander-in-Chief, not having approved of the sentence of the Court, deems it inexpedient to inflict any further reprimand than will be conveyed by the promulgation of the case in orders.

Brev. maj. Ouseley is to be released from arrest, and directed to return to his duty.

MADRAS.

THE MADRAS ARMY.

In our own presidency the arrangements of the government of India for the prosecution of the Burmese war have occasioned extensive discontent. The army of Madras has been most unfairly used, and although its high feelings of loyalty and the restraints of military discipline preclude any outward show of dissatisfaction, the slight which has been put upon it is not the less keenly felt. During the wars in Scinde, Afghanistan, and the Punjab, the Madras army was called upon to do garrison duty for the armies of Bengal and Bombay, that they might be present in the field; and this duty, harassing as it was, the Madras soldiers cheerfully and efficiently discharged. On the present occasion, therefore, they had a right to expect that from their contiguity to the scene of action they would be allowed to furnish exclusively the force to Burmah and take the share, so obviously marked out to them by local and other circumstances, of the renown and profit of successful soldiership. But what is the fact? Although every single day's delay was of the utmost importance, on account of the near approach of the wet season in Burmah, and although there were at least ten regiments of Madras Native Infantry and four European corps, all ready for service, and all stationed on, or within a few hours' march of the sea-coast of the Madras Presidency, the general Government of India appear to have delayed the embarkation of the force in order to allow of European and native regiments of the Bengal presidency being brought down many hundred miles from the interior, and thus enable the Bengal army to share in the operations; instead of leaving the whole business to the Madras Government, who, if invested with full power to make the necessary arrangements, would have been able to evince far more promptitude and efficiency in the despatch of the requisite force, and it is not saying too much, might by this time have brought the war to a successful issue.

The flagrant treatment of the 5th M.N.I. has especially awakened indignation. This corps was stationed on the sea-coast at Vizianagrum, and was under orders for foreign service. Two steamers were despatched from Rangoon, as the 5th hoped to transport them to the scene of war, but, as it turned out, to carry them to Khyook Phyoo, a post in Arracan, to relieve the 67th Bengal Native Infantry, doing duty there, who were the favoured corps destined by the Supreme Government for the honour of active service. The course pursued towards the 5th regiment is felt to be the most severe blow that the Madras army have yet had to sustain. It is altogether new in kind, and unless those who have the power now interfere, it may be only the commencement of a system which would reduce the Madras army to the position of a militia for garrison duties, as it has already been invidiously styled by a Bengal officer of rank. The Madras troops are most readily available for transport to the scene of action, whilst those of Bengal must be brought from a great distance at a large sacrifice of time and money; and yet, under these circumstances, a Madras regiment, after being warned for active service at Rangoon, is diverted from that destination, and sent to a Bengal station to take the garrison duty of a Bengal regiment, which then proceeds to the scene of war. And although the 5th M.N.I. embarked at Vizagapatam with cheers in order to show their readiness to obey the orders of Government, yet we can more easily imagine than describe the feelings of disappointment and depression of this old and distinguished corps, which retains the tradition that they crossed bayonets with French troops (one of the rare instances on record), and the sympathy felt for them throughout all ranks and classes of this presidency; and the feelings of pain excited in 70,000 manly breasts are sufficient proof that the corps is deemed deserving of better treatment.—Athenæum, Jan. 9.

MR. STAINES.—We regret to hear of a melancholy accident that happened on the Neilgherry hills, on the 8th inst., by which there is every reason to believe Mr. J. R. Staines, a coffee-planter, has lost his life. The unfortunate gentleman having occasion to leave Ootacamund on business, reached the bungalow at Calhutti, on the evening of the 7th, where he rested during the night. Before proceeding on his journey the following morning, Mr. Staines went to take a bath at the waterfall below the bungalow, which he had often done before. His servants having waited a considerable time in expectation of their master's return, becoming alarmed went down to the waterfall; they found Mr. Staines's clothes lying on the side of the fall, but no other traces of him could be discovered in any direction. A report was at once sent in to the magistrate at Ootacamund, who immediately ordered the tahsildar with a number of peons to make a search; but every effort has proved unsuccessful, the body of Mr. Staines not having been found up to the time our correspondent wrote. The general supposition is, that it must have got wedged into some of the openings between the rocks that lie in the course of the current.—Athenæum, May 15.—[The body was subsequently found.]

ON-DIRS.—It is rumoured in military circles, that Brevet-Major Marshall, 33rd regt. N.I., is likely to succeed Major Forbes, deputy secretary to Government in the Military department, about to retire from the service in the early part of next month, and that Brevet-Major Gabbet, of the artillery, has been offered the appointment of inspector of ordnance on the works, and commanding the artillery in Fort St. George.—Spectator, May 14.

DELAY OF THE MADRAS DIVISION.—It is rumoured that unpleasant interrogatories have been addressed from Bengal to the Government of Fort St. George, asking for an explanation of the tardy despatch of the Burmese expedition from this port. That the Governor-General was disposed to be ejaculatory when informed of the late departure of the Madras division, has been known for more than a month past to everybody here; which may account for the anomaly noticed by the Spectator, who observes that the apologists of the local Government have been at the pains to forward their assurances that everything was quite satisfactory, to journals at a distance from Madras, rather than to those on the spot. The Mofussilite at Meerut and the Times and Telegraph at Bombay, having not the same means of knowing the truth as those at Madras, were not likely to receive the communications irreverently; they have consequently obligingly assured the public that the story set afloat by the Madras papers was "all nonsense." The Madras papers may bide the event without fear for their character. In the mean time, if the secretary to Government is anxious to do us a favour, he may let us have a peep at Sir Henry Pottinger's reply to the Governor-General. What can he possibly say?—Athenæum, May 25.—That Lord Dalhousie may have been vexed, to find that the Madras expedition did not reach the rendezvous so early as was desirable, is very probable; as likewise that he should have called upon Sir Henry Pottinger to afford an explanation; but we have heard—and se non è vero, è ben trovato—that the explanation was such as became an older and a better soldier and politician to afford him, accompanied with the request that it might be brought to the special notice of the high authorities at home. Lord Dalhousie possesses strong interest, not only in the Duke of Wellington, but with the existent ministry, his party being just now in the ascendant: but a man of Sir Henry's mark and recognised capacity will not want friends in Parliament, to see that fair play is dealt out to him, and that the saddle of censure is buckled to the back of the right horse.—Crescent, June 2.

BUTCHERS v. TROOPERS.—On the 20th inst. a row, which would not have disgraced Donnybrook in the olden time, occurred in the General Bazaar between the mutton butchers and a number of troopers of the 2nd Light Cavalry. The butchers, we understand, got the worst of it, and one of them is now lying in the Civil Hospital in a dangerous state, from a severe wound about half an inch above the left eyebrow. We understand that both the butchers and troopers are Mussulmans, and some dispute which originated on the last Mohorum festival, was the cause of the row. We are informed that high words arose between a trooper and one of the butchers, when the former took off his slipper and struck his opponent on the mouth with it; the friends of each party closed in, and the fight became general. A man of the Hussars got into the midst of the crowd, no doubt better to enjoy what he considered capital sport, but he found it easier to approach the combatants than to make his escape, and got severely pounded, both parties very likely trying their hands on him; the affair is now under investigation of the police court.—Bangalore Herald, May 25.

THE MOPLAHS, we are assured, are perfectly quiet at the present time; but parties whose local knowledge gives weight to their opinion, think it most probable that there will be another outbreak before the close of the monsoon. They appear (says our correspondent) to have formed the resolution of driving the Nairs from those localities which they chiefly inhabit. Though more wealthy, the Nairs are not so numerous as the Moplahs, live frequently on farms detached from each other, and withal, are less energetic, fierce, and determined than their Mussulman rivals. We have not yet heard of the conclusion of the trial of the Moplah Abdoolah, at Tellicherry, for participation in the last outbreaks.—Ibid.

RELIEFS.—We are told that the 2nd, 3rd, 5th, and 8th Madras cavalry are this year to stand fast where they are, and that the 1st, 4th, 6th, and 7th, are to move,—the 4th from Kamptee to relieve the 7th at Jubbulpore, and the 6th the 1st: the reliefs to take place in November.—Bombay Times, June 5.

CAPTAIN G. H. S. YATES, 8th M.N.I., has retired from the army.

BUYING OUT.—A letter from Bangalore says,—“Lieut. Col. Bullock (Madras Cavalry) has been purchased: this promotes Anderson of the 4th. Lieut. Colonels Litchfield and Munsey are said to be in the market. Likely to be more sellers than buyers if there be any truth in the report from home that the regular cavalry of India is to be broken up in 1854, and irregular corps raised in their place (a move which would sweep away our troop and saddle contracts and off-reckonings), and 3-4ths of the officers offered pensions of the rank immediately above that they may then hold. This is mere gossip, and as such I give it you.”

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

OFF-RECKONINGS.

Fort St. George, May 18, 1852.—In consequence of the demise of Col. (Lieut. General) Thomas Stewart, of the Infantry, the following addition to the list of officers entitled to off-reckonings is authorized:—

LAW.

SUPREME COURT, 31st May.

In the matter of Sayee.—This woman, or girl, Sayee, who is between fourteen and fifteen years of age, is the daughter of a Marathi schoolmaster, employed by the mission of the Free Kirk of Scotland. She has till lately been residing with her father, and was one of his pupils, but her relations, who feared that she might participate in her father's leaning to Christianity, took her away by force from his house, and she was afterwards rescued from them by her father and the Rev. Hormusjee Pestonjee, assisted by the police. Her grandmother and caste people obtained from Sir Erskine Perry, on the 29th, a writ of habeas corpus on the Rev. Dr. Wilson, calling upon him to produce the girl in court, as it was alleged she was detained by him contrary to her wish.

The following affidavit was read:—

"We, Guzabae, of Bombay, Hindoo, widow of Sutwajee Amrutrow; Govind Nurrayen Bhut, of Bombay, Hindoo priest, and Suddoo Ramjee, of Bombay, Hindoo inhabitant, make oath and say; and first I, Guzabae, of Bombay, Hindoo, widow of Sutwajee, say that I am the grandmother of Sayee, who is the daughter of my son Wittoo Sutwajee, an assistant in a Marathi school at Colabi; that the said Sayee is now of the age of fourteen years, and that the said Wittoo has ceased to observe many of the customs of his caste and religion, and has also, by force and threats, prevented her from adopting the usual signs of a Hindoo girl of her class, and, notwithstanding her age, has not allowed her to be married, of all of which she has often complained to him; that several of her caste people, having heard that her father and others wished to compel her to adopt the profession of the Christian religion, went for her on the 26th of May to her father's house and accompanied her to the house of one Bappoo Surder, a distant relation of hers and mine, that I was with her at the house, and she said she did not want to remain any longer with her father, because he was trying to force her to become a Christian, and that she would not be one, and that he ill-treated her in consequence; that about five o'clock on the same day, her father came, accompanied by a Parsee, who professes Christianity, and whose name I am informed is Hormusjee Pestonjee, and by several police peons and one European constable, and her said father and the said Parsee, took away Sayee, in my presence, by force and against her will, and put her, weeping and striking her forehead, into the buggy of the Parsee; that, before she left, she informed me that she believed it was the intention of her father and the Parsee to compel her to turn Christian on the following Sunday, and for that reason she had sent word to her caste people to take her from her father's house; and I, Govind Nurrayen Bhut, for myself say, that I am a priest, and well know the said Guzabae Wittoo and Sayee; that I was present at the house of Bappoo Sinda on the occasion mentioned in the deposition of Guzabae, and then and there saw Sayee taken away forcibly by her father and Hormusjee Pestonjee, in the buggy of Hormusjee Pestonjee; that Sayee told me that, while at the house of Bappoo Sinda, she was afraid to remain with her father, because he ill-treated her and wished to compel her to profess the Christian religion; and I, Suddoo Ramjee, of Bombay, Hindoo inhabitant, for myself say that I am of the same caste as Sayee and Guzabae; that, on the 26th of May, I was told that Sayee had been taken away, as mentioned in the deposition of Guzabae, and was informed that she had been taken to the house of Hormusjee Pestonjee; I therefore went the next day to the house of Dr. Wilson, wherewith said Hormusjee Pestonjee besides, and was informed by the neighbours that he had the day previously brought there a Hindoo girl in his buggy; and thereupon I went to the gate of the bungalow, and found at the entrance four private sepoys, who, when I asked them to let me see Sayee, refused, saying they had not their master's orders; and notwithstanding that I remained there more than half an hour, they would not let me enter, although they confessed that a girl of the name and description of Sayee had been brought there the day before."

The Return to the writ was then read as follows:—

"I, John Wilson, do certify, That, from about or near 1840, Sai, or Sayee, in the writ named, has been brought up in schools under my general superintendence, of which her father, Vithu Satwaji, was the teacher; that on the 26th of May, 1852, the said Sai was forcibly taken away from a house in Colaba, where Vithu Satwaji lives, and conducts a Marathi school, and that Vithu Satwaji, having with the assistance of the Rev. Hormusjee Pestonjee and the police, rescued Sai from the persons who had so illegally and forcibly seized her, of her own free will and consent, and with the free will and consent of Sai, placed her in the Native Girls' Boarding School in Girgaum, Bombay, of the Mission of the Free Church of Scotland, under the immediate care of Mrs. Mary Anne Rosa Seitz, but of which I am first superintendent; and I further certify that I have never in any manner detained the said Sai against her will or otherwise, but on the contrary, Sai is at perfect liberty to quit the said boarding-school and to live elsewhere; and I further certify that, since the present writ has been served upon me, I have acquainted Sai with the purport thereof, and requested Sai to attend at the place in the writ named, at the return there, according to the exigencies of the same writ; and she having consented thereto, I have the body of the said Sai here, and ready as by the said writ I am commanded."

Mr. Dickinson was proceeding with the affidavit of Dr. Wilson, but Sir E. Perry remarked that the girl was in court, and the question was, whether or not she was detained by her father against her will, and this could be most readily decided by putting the question to her.

Mr. Dickinson thought that, in fairness to his client, his affidavit should be read, to prevent any imputation being thrown upon the course adopted by Dr. Wilson, who would not shrink from the strictest investigation into the affair.

His Lordship did not see that any imputation was sought to be cast on Dr. Wilson; his name was not even mentioned in the previous affidavit. It was not at all probable that the father ill-treated his child and that a missionary took part in such conduct.

Mr. Dickinson having remarked on the impropriety of examining a Hindoo female in open court, before so large an assemblage of strangers,

Mr. Holland suggested that the girl should be questioned in the judge's chambers, in the presence of the attorneys on either side, with the father, grandmother, and interpreter of the court; and this, having been approved of, was acted on.

The judge retired to his private chambers with the girl, her father, grandmother, and friends, and the counsel on both sides. He then proposed that the girl should still further retire with her grandmother and the Hindu interpreter, who was to report to him on the subject of the interview; but, on Mr. Dickinson's objecting, and saying that the father was the party above all entitled to a private interview, he did not insist on this point. On the girl certifying, in reply to the queries of the judge himself, that she had never been ill-used by her father, and that it was her own wish to embrace Christianity, he put the question, "Do you wish to go with your father or your grandmother?" On the girl saying, "With my father," she was committed to his care, and forthwith sent by him to the Mission Boarding School.

The order recorded by his lordship was—"That she, Sayee, be at liberty to go where she pleases."

The LONDON MAIL of May the 8th arrived at Bombay on June the 4th, per the steamer Achar. The subsequent Mail of May the 24th left Aden June 11th, per Queen steamer.

MORMONISM has at last reached Bombay. An elder of the Latter Day Saints arrived here some time ago as a missionary, and is busily engaged in writing, lecturing, and disseminating tracts. He has baptized one convert, an Eurasian, and has several "Inquirers" among the lower class of Christians.—Telegraph, June 5.

PASSING IN NATIVE LANGUAGES.—The following is a correct list of the successful candidates who lately passed in the native languages:—

BURNING OF RECORDS.—The Poona Observer states that the burning of the Peshwa's records is creating the greatest excitement among all the landowners whose claims have not been settled by the "Enam" Commissioners. Many of them rest their claims entirely upon documents to be discovered among the papers belonging to the old dynasty, their own grants, and "sunnuds" having been lost in the lapse of years. These papers are now being destroyed in the Shunwar Wara, at the rate of fifteen cart-loads a day, and the people are suspicious of foul play being intended towards them.

MORTALITY DURING MAY.—The return of mortality in the town and islands of Bombay and Colaba, for the month of May, shows that the total number of deaths during the month was 1508, or on an average 48,645 daily. The deaths were 93 less than in April.

DR. WESTON.—We regret to have to announce the death of Assistant-Surgeon C. T. Weston, M.D., Surgeon to the Governor, which occurred at Mahabuleswar on the morning of the 27th May. Dr. Weston was not an ordinary man. He had talent and abilities which commanded respect, kindness and amiability, which won esteem. Of a quiet unobtruding disposition, refined and delicate taste, gentlemanly manners, and fondly devoted to his profession, he was selected as the personal medical attendant upon the Governor. A choice not made from interest, or connection, or any personal knowledge, but simply from the fact that Dr. Weston was the best medical man available.—Bombay Times.

MR. JOHN WARDEN'S appointment to act as Member of Council, until the arrival of the Commander-in-Chief, has been disallowed by the Court of Directors, and we begin to augur from this the impending extinction of Councils at the lesser presidencies altogether. They are seldom of any use, and permit the Board of Control to job in inefficient Governors on the plea of the existence of councils which cost about 20,000*l.* a piece.—Bombay Times.

THE CHARTER DISCUSSIONS.—We have all been deeply chagrined by the indifference manifested towards the East on the Charter discussions; we still have some hopes, though they are but feeble, from the assistance of Lancashire. Fully disposed to admit the merits of the East India Company, and the evils of extending a larger share of the administration to Her Majesty's Ministers, the Government, though good as it is, might be made infinitely better, and if not greatly improved, cheapened, and vivified, will not long continue to serve the purposes it ought to answer, as our merchants will feel to their cost. Mr. Chisholm Anstey has been most indiscreet in the way in which he has handled Barado affairs: not only was it perfectly well known that Colonel Outram had never charged any member of the Bombay Government with corruption, but that he had maintained their integrity. Nor were any imputations to this effect cast by any one worthy of being listened to on any of the members of the services. Sir J. W. Hogg says truly that the wretches by whom the atrocious oppression and unparalleled wrongs of the Barado Settancee were brought about were denounced by Colonel Outram; but he is in error in supposing that they have been punished as they deserve.—Bombay Times, June 4.

BARADO AFFAIRS.—Government have, we believe, instructed the Resident at Barado to intimate to the Guicowar the expediency of dismissing Blow Tambekur and some dozen of other vagabonds, with the communications of whom the good manners of his highness were being corrupted. This is right at last: the pity is, that the advice was not given earlier, and enforced. The half-measure and temporizing system of Government has been the source of a large portion of the scandals that have gained circulation to their disadvantage. Why was the dismissal of Nursoo Punt, and his incapability for future employment, not published in the Gazette in the strongest terms official form permitted? That worthy, at the time of his dismissal, endeavoured to satisfy his friends that the whole was merely a bit of make-believe—that the misunderstanding was one of those pieces of pouting that will occasionally occur with the most ardent lovers—that short retirement insures sweet return—and that a visit to Bombay would sweep the little cloud from the winter of their discontent and make glorious summer for the restored delinquent. The length to which the Guicowar has been duped and deceived by the scoundrels around him, and the depths of degradation into which debauchery has plunged him, make the case more difficult to deal with than it was some time since. When we intimate our pleasure, we must not suffer our motives to be trifled with or our hints to be misunderstood; extremities are only resorted to when nothing else will serve. How true it is that an open, straightforward, and bold system of policy averts the necessity of proceeding further, and secures the very tranquillity which pusillanimity seeks, but misses.—Bombay Times, May 29.

CAPTAIN JAMES.—We regret to learn from a north-west contemporary that Captain James, of the Kotah Contingent, is so seriously ill that his life is despaired of. This gentleman is, we believe, the husband of the far-famed Lola Montes, from whom he has never been divorced.—Telegraph, June 5.

THE MONSOON is setting in early and mildly in Bombay. Its approach has been indicated here as yet merely by a few dust-storms, a slight equal or two, and some light showers moderately attended by thunder and lightning.—Ibid.

LIEUTENANT CRAWFORD, of the Artillery, we are sorry to hear, has again laid himself open to arrest at Ahmednuggur on a charge of drunkenness.—Times, May 26.

MR. E. C. JONES, collector of Poona, now on circuit in the districts, has been very successful in the field of late. A few days ago he stalked two noble elks (sambre), one having twelve tynes to his antlers, and next day killed, single-handed, a tiger, which had been committing much mischief amongst the cattle of the surrounding villages, and had wounded in a very severe manner two of the villagers.—Poona Obs. May 29.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL ROBERT RICH, colonel of the 6th Bengal N.I., commanding the Benares division of the army, whose death is announced as having occurred at Nainee Tal on the 25th ult., entered the service in 1803, and his various commissions bear date as follow:—Ensign, 17th March, 1805; Lieutenant, 22nd March, 1805; Captain, 1st Jan. 1819; Major, 11th Feb. 1826; Lieut.-Colonel, 21st Jan. 1831; Colonel, 19th December, 1842.—Bombay Times, June 5.

THE GARRISON OF MARTABAN.—The Maulmain Times tells us that the European artillery in garrison at Martaban were suffering severely from sickness, caused, as the men themselves alleged, by the badness of the provisions served out to them by the commissariat. This is a matter which should be looked into by General Godwin: there is scarcely a campaign on record during which complaints have not been made on the same subject; the villains under whose charge the provisions were placed, having on many occasions been known to sell a large portion of what was supplied to them by Government for the troops, and so adulterate the remainder as to render them almost totally unfit for use.—Ibid.

PRIZE ESSAYS ON RAILWAYS.—The Board of Education have offered, on behalf of a native gentleman, a prize of Rs. 150 for the best essay "On the advantages of Railways in a country, and of communication, by the aid of steam-power, between different countries, particularly in reference to the Bombay Presidency." The board will receive essays from all natives of the Presidency who may choose to send them, up to the 1st of November. They are to be written in the Goozeratte language, and accompanied by an English version, and are not to exceed twelve octavo pages. The prize will be awarded to the writer of the best of the essays sent in.

CEYLON.

A correspondent in Candy has kindly put us in possession of the following information. On Sunday morning, after the reading of the second lesson, a Kandian young lady was baptized by Mr. Oakley, of the Church Missionary Society. This lady is the grand-daughter of the great Kandian chief Kappitepolle, one of the most ancient of the Kandian families—whose name was so intimately connected with, and who in fact was the prime mover of, the rebellion of 1818—and for which he suffered decapitation for high treason. The young lady who was baptized is Kappitepolle's eldest son's daughter; she has been under the tuition of Mr. and Mrs. Oakley, and understands the tenets of the religion she has embraced sufficiently.

Mr. and Mrs. Buller and Mrs. Oakley were sponsors, or rather took the responsibility of acting as such. We are informed this is the second instance within the last four years in which the labours of the Church Missionaries have been crowned with success in the conversion of members of the most respectable chiefs' families. The ceremony was performed in the presence of a large congregation.—Ceylon Times, May 11.

CHINA.

The LONDON MAIL of March the 24th arrived at Hong Kong on May the 9th, per the steamer Malla.

We have had letters from Chinese correspondents, from which we learn that Tien-teh has left the hill country, where he has been so long encamped; that he recently gave battle to the imperial troops, who lost their positions, were routed, and fled in great disorder. Tien-teh has now formed his camp in the open country, a line of sentinels extending for more than ten le towards the south. It is added that there is now no obstacle in his way to a descent on Fatsan, and some of the high Mandarins in Canton believe that he is actually en route; whilst others are in hope that he has taken a northerly course. The following account of an interview between Tien-teh and some imperial ambassadors will have reference, we imagine, to a period antecedent to the grand movement:—

A private messenger has arrived in Canton with a letter from Kwangse, stating that Tsow, the Lieut.-Governor, had sent Hanhow, a man of the first literary degree, and Chang fang yeu, of the 2nd literary rank, with others, to ascend the Tsz-hing hill, and there confer with King Tien-teh, and endeavour to persuade him to surrender. Hanhow and his companions were at first afraid to proceed directly to the spot, and agreed that they should write a letter to Tien-teh, appointing a day when they would meet him, and wait for his answer before ascending the hill. A reply having been received, they immediately started forward, but before they reached the foot of the hill they were met by a number of persons who had come up to salute them, and guide them up the hill. When they had ascended about half way, they came to a pass, the gate of which was very high, and guarded by soldiers both within and without; but they were allowed to pass after their guides had informed the soldiers of their errand. They then passed three other gates, similarly defended, until they came to the fourth gate, where they were met by a party of more than ten officers, dressed after the style of the Ming dynasty, who, after their names and several ranks had been duly proclaimed, advanced in a polite manner, and invited the five men to the guests' house, where they were entertained in the most sumptuous manner. Their arrival was now reported to King Tien-teh, who gave orders that they should see him on the following day, and accordingly the next morning they were conducted by a high officer within the fifth gate, where they were met by an eunuch, with an order from the court that they should dress in the fashion of the Ming dynasty. Hanhow and his companions were afraid to disobey the king's orders, so, after having properly arrayed themselves in the dresses furnished them, they were brought by the eunuch to the steps of the court, where they were met by King Tien-teh, who came down the steps and then led them into the court, and invited them to be seated after the manner of guests when visiting a friend. Tien-teh now inquired upon what business they had come, and Hanhow and his companions told him that they had been sent by Tsow, the Lieut.-Governor, to endeavour, by fair words, to induce him to surrender, that peace might thereby be again restored to the people. When they had finished speaking, the king said, "Teachers! you are mistaken; how can the prince submit to his ministers? I am the eleventh descendant of the Emperor Tsung-ching,* of the great Ming dynasty, and I now raise my rightful troops with the hope of recovering the old territory. Formerly, because of the rebellion, the Tsing race were invited by Woo san-kwei, the minister of the Ming dynasty, to assist in cutting off the rebellious officers Chang and Le, but, not content, they took possession of the country, and my ancestors of the Ming dynasty, seeing that the Tsing race had merit in cutting off the rebels, dared not to drive them away instantly, but have allowed them and their descendants to sit on the throne for 200 years, as a reward for their trouble. Can you say that such a reward is not very great? And now, in my own right, I raise troops to recover the old property of my ancestors. The Tsing race ought to give up and return to its native place, and thereby let each man hold his own ground—by such means would the soldiers and people have rest. Teachers! you are still men of the middle kingdom, and thoroughly understand the doctrines of Confucius and Mencius; can you then forget altogether the rightful prince of the empire, and remain the subjects of foreigners?" After saying this he ordered Hanhow and his companions to be styled Ministers, and then invited them to a banquet and entertained them on the hill for five days. The entertainment over, the clothes they had worn on their arrival were burned, and Tien-teh accompanied them to the outskirts of the hill, where he took leave of them, and they returned home.

* Tsung-ching was the last of the Ming emperors; he died in 1643.

"On their arrival at the provincial city of Kwei-lin-foo, they related their story from beginning to end to the Lieutenant-Governor Tsow, who, upon hearing it, was so enraged that he instantly fell sick."

The latest intelligence states that Lo-ping-chang, the Lieutenant-Governor of Hoonan, headed an army of 5,000 men, and Seu-kwang-tsin, the Governor-General of Canton, headed one of 8,000 men from Kaon-chow; that, at the time of their arrival, the city was in great danger of being taken, but the rebels had to break up the arrangement of their force, in order to defend themselves against the troops which had come to save the city. The two armies were still engaged.—Friend of China, May 24.

There is but little local news. The health of the troops at Hong-Kong is generally good.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The latest intelligence from Cape Town is dated the 29th May.

The news from the frontier, which is to the 25th May, was unimportant. Lieut. gen. Cathcart had assumed the active command of the forces in Caffreland. He had established his head-quarters at Fort Beaufort, and was forming camps along the frontier: one at the Tamacha; the Rifles at Behr's Farm; the 74th and 91st, and Cape Mounted Rifles, under Col. Napier, at Balfour, and Cols. Eyre and Michell at Keishama's Hoek, where a fort was being erected. Nearly the whole of the forces were extended in a connected chain of columns across the territory intended to be cleared, provision being made for keeping open the communication between the different columns, while the 12th regiment, under Colonel Percival, was replaced in its former position at Collingham, for the protection of the Albany district. This corps had been previously engaged in the fruitless endeavour to drive the enemy from his fastnesses in the Amatola mountains. On their return, they swept through the country of Stock and Seyolo, which was found to be entirely deserted, those chiefs having either joined their forces to those of Macomo and Sandilli, or sent them, dispersed in marauding bands, into the colony. Not the slightest indication had been manifested of a disposition on the part of the Caffres to submit; but, on the contrary, their resistance was as determined as at any former period of the war, though they show more wariness in choosing their position, and carefully avoid encounters with the troops upon open ground.

Col. Michell, stationed at Fort Cox, had a severe engagement, in which twenty of the enemy were killed. The 6th regiment and 60th Rifles were both warmly engaged. The Caffres maintained the conflict with great determination, the troops being unable to make any impression upon them until the light company of the 6th, by a desperate charge, drove them from their position, when a party of the Rifles, in ambush, poured in a deadly fire, and put them to rout.

A gallant attack was made upon a portion of the Waterkloof by Col. Buller, with two companies of the 1st battalion Rifle brigade, under Capt. Lord A. Russell and Capt. Woodford, and a small detachment of the Cape Corps under Capt. Somerset. The Caffres, however, were found to be in such overwhelming force, and so screened by the nature of the ground, that, after a laborious march through the rugged jungle, and killing a considerable number of the enemy, the attacking party retired, under cover of a six-pounder. On this occasion, it is stated that "the peculiar whizz of the enemies' balls told of iron pot legs and angular pieces of iron, and not of musket balls," proving that the stringent measures taken to prevent them from obtaining ammunition are beginning to be felt among them. On the side of the troops, one officer and two privates were wounded, Lieut. Godfrey having the tip of his ear shot off.

On the 5th May, a detachment of the 12th regiment, under Capt. Helmsley, suddenly fell in with a party of about forty Caffres in the Fish River Bush, near Committee's Drift, when six of the enemy were killed; the others plunged into the bush and escaped.

Great consternation was excited among the inhabitants of Lower Albany by the discovery of the traces of a body of rebel Hottentots, estimated at from 100 to 150 men, having entered the Kowis Bush, which extends within a few miles of Graham's Town. About sixty of the neighbouring inhabitants, including a party of the Albany Rangers, under Capt. Stubbs, moved during the night in the direction of the marauders, whom they came up with about three o'clock in the morning, and found them sleeping round their fires in an open space in the centre of a dense bush. Owing to the precipitancy of some of the party, an alarm was given before an effectual attack could be made, and the rebels, starting up, dived scathless into the bush.

Early in May, at the Fish River mouth, two young men, named Clayton, sons of a farmer, and their servant Elliott, were murdered. On the 15th, near Fort Cox, an unarmed private of the Queen's 2nd regiment was killed, while cutting wood.

Andries Botha, a field-cornet (Hottentot), after a trial of eight days at Cape Town, had been convicted of high treason, and was sentenced to be hanged.

The nature of the Governor's plans, with regard to the hitherto neutral chiefs, has been partially disclosed. It appears that his Excellency proposes to subsidise them, under certain conditions, and that some of them have already been paid sums of money under the new arrangements. Much apprehension, however, is generally entertained of the intentions of the Slambie tribes, and strong symptoms of disaffection and a desire to join the enemy are said to have been of late manifested among them.

In the western portion of the colony, the most perfect tranquillity continues to exist. The excitement which the mutilation of the Constitution Ordinance by the Legislative Council occasioned had entirely subsided, the colonists feeling assured that her Majesty's Government will never violate the solemn promises held out to them, by sanctioning the measure in its present form.

The Natal Witness notices the great progress of the interior trade. A stranger, supposed to be a Portuguese, had arrived at Pietermaritzburg with ivory to the value of 900*l.*; the proceeds were laid out in the purchase of waggons and merchandize for a return load. From D'Urban, many traders were proceeding to the Zulu country. It is stated that a new route had been discovered, by which the distance between Lydenburg and Maritzburg will be shortened from some twenty days to nine, and the road itself will be much better.

According to the Natal Independent, the advices from the Trans-Vaal territory report a frightful mortality amongst the settlers in that district, from a contagion raging there, which is described in its first stage as having the appearance of measles and sore throat, resulting in almost immediate death. The illness is but short,—few survive forty-eight hours after its first appearance; in fact, instances have occurred of men following a relative to the grave, and being themselves carried there the following day. The contagion had overtaken several, who, while in health, endeavoured to flee from this district. What with the ravages of this contagion, and the trekking from fear of the plague, the hitherto prosperous and fruitful district of the Mareko was being fast depopulated. Scarcely had this epidemic spent itself on its victims, when a plague still more fearful and deadly broke out amongst them, hurrying its victims to their last home with a rapidity awful to contemplate. This disease had appeared in three instances at the Mooi River Drop, but in all the three cases on parties who had fled from the Mareko, the disease first making its appearance whilst they were on their way to Mooi River. The symptoms of the disease are yellow colour of the face, the teeth, eyes, nostrils, and lips turning black, and great pain in the head and neck.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

At a monthly meeting of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, held on the 13th May, a collection of human remains, bones of reptiles, and of a canine animal; pottery, a spear-head, and the remnants of an iron tripod; with other pieces of articles formed of the same metal, was presented by Captain Meadows Taylor, of the Nizam's service.

In a letter accompanying these articles, Captain Taylor states that they were taken from a cairn, at the village of Jivarji, near Ferozabad, on the Bhima. Two cists were in the cairn, one of which contained the skeleton of a child, which, judging from the teeth, must have been seven or eight years of age; the other, that of an adult, probably, from the little worn state of the teeth, about thirty-five years of age. The face of the latter was directed towards the end of the grave, as if the head had been detached before burial. What was remarkable also in this cairn was that, near the feet of the child, but outside the cist, was a little urn or pot, filled with small bones. These bones consist of two skeletons of the common ghorpat, a large lacertine reptile, which belongs to the monitors or veranaisa, and it will be curious to ascertain if the custom of burying reptiles with the dead should have prevailed among these people as well as among the ancient Egyptians. There were also two portions of the jaw of some canine animal, probably of a dog, which had been buried in the same cairn. The cist of the adult was 5 feet 6 inches long, and the skeleton about 5 feet 2, with the skull, like all the others which have been found in these cairns, remarkable for the low development of the frontal region. The remains of a spear-head and those of a little iron tripod, with other pieces of iron, and pottery, were also found in this cairn. In another cairn, a skeleton was found lying transversely over the lid of the cist, and the skull in the centre of the body, as if in this instance also it had been detached previous to burial.

A paper on the conflicting views of European scholars as to the races inhabiting Polynesia and the Indian Archipelago, and as to the languages spoken by them, by Sir Erskine Perry, president, was communicated.

Sir Erskine Perry alluded to the chief points of interest in his paper. The diffusion of two distinctly marked races, a brown race and a black race, with negro features, over a portion of the globe extending from Madagascar to Eastern Island, or nearly 190 degrees of longitude, and the traces of alliance between the languages spoken by them, had led philologists to conclude a unity of origin between all the tribes of the brown race at least. The late Baron William Humboldt, in his elaborate work on the Kavi language, has stated his grounds for concluding that the Malays are the race who have spread their colonies and language over this wide portion of the globe. Recent ethnographers have adopted all Baron Humboldt's conclusions as established facts. Mr. Crawford, whose work on the Indian Archipelago had given rise to many of the speculations on the subject, has now given to the world the result of his forty years' inquiries, in a dissertation prefixed to his dictionary of the Malay languages; and he contends, that many of the various languages spoken throughout these islands are wholly distinct from one another, as are many of the races, both brown and black, and he combats the usual tests, too often adopted by philologists to establish the identity of two different languages. He points out also, from evidence of contemporaneous facts, the mode in which great portions of these isles have become peopled and their languages intermingled.

The subject, however, still requires additional investigation, and the writer of the paper especially pointed out the necessity of Eastern philologists applying themselves to the examination of the languages spoken by the negro races, of which, hitherto, but very slender materials have been collected.

The Rev. Dr. Stevenson, one of the vice-presidents, communicated a paper containing a theory of the Great Elephant Cave, of which he gave a short summary.

The paper consisted of two parts, one of a popular nature, which might serve as a guide to persons visiting the caves, and the other consisting of notes and illustrations from the Linga Puran of the different subjects sculptured in the cave. He endeavours to show that the sculptures on the side farthest from the entrance, or southern side, were intended to portray the different transformations of the great god Siva, to whom the cave had been dedicated as a temple, in the creation of the world, and in originating the human race, while those on the side next to the entrance represented the different eras in the establishment of the Siva form of Hinduism, which at present prevails, and its victories first over the aboriginal tribes, then over the followers of the ritual of the Veda, and the followers of Vishnu. He especially remarked that the Linga chapel, half-way up the cave, on the visitor's right, was the principal subject of worship, and is still visited by the devotees from Bombay on the great festivals of Siva; that the three-faced image was Siva, in his threefold character of creator, preserver, and destroyer, ascribed especially to him in the commencement of the Linga Puran; and that the image at the door, which has often been mistaken for Buddha, was Siva, as a Mahayogi, or one of the highest orders of religious ascetics.

In a lecture before the Colombo Athenæum, Capt. Neill, R.A., gave a familiar exposition of the cause of winds:—

"You are aware," he said, "that heat has the general power of expanding bodies. Heat the air of this room by means of a furnace; its tendency is then to amplify in proportion to the heat. We shall suppose its bulk doubled—that is to say, that half a foot of air now exists where one foot existed before; but, the atmosphere outside not having been similarly affected, its dimensions remain constant and the same as those of the room before it was heated; a foot of its air is therefore double the weight of a foot of this room's air, and when these two airs are brought in contact, by the opening of doors for instance, the lighter air will ascend, the heavier air will descend, just in the manner of oil or water. This induces a downward rush of the heavy air, an upward rush of the light air. What is done in this room, as we have supposed, is done largely in nature. From this point of view, the sterile deserts and burning shores of the world,—the boundless Sahara itself,—appear before us as the great and the necessary ministers to our comfort, and even our existence. They are the vast laboratories of heat, where succeeding parts of wind, expanded by the burning rays of the sun and the fierce radiation of the earth, give place in their turn to other sheets of the atmosphere, which are likewise heated, and likewise displaced by colder and heavier currents. Now, as heat predominates mostly in the tropics, the air of those regions is proportionally expanded thereby, and were the earth perfectly stable, there would result from this circumstance winds of a very constant description. In the northern hemisphere, for instance, the hot and light air of the tropics would be displaced by the cold and heavy air of the pole. There would, therefore, be an under-current blowing from the pole to the equator called a north wind, while there would be an upper-current of polar air gliding from the equator to the pole, to be there rendered cold and dense, and fit for the purpose, in time, of relieving the thin air of the tropics. Similarly, we should have in the southern hemisphere the continual action of southerly winds; but as the earth has a motion peculiar to itself, viz., of rotation on its axis, from west to east, the winds are deflected, and, instead of coming direct from the poles, wander to us in a more oblique direction. In their passage, they obey local influences, which greatly modify both their strength and tendency, and, according to the character of the region which they traverse, they become the messengers of a genial heat, of grateful moisture, or of refreshing coolness. Not unfrequently they appear before us as more unwelcome and fatal visitants. Many winds, which have attained notoriety from the immemorial miseries they have inflicted upon our race, derive their dark name from the melancholy peculiarities which the progress of time and the improvements of man have as yet failed to mitigate—not to speak of the various land-winds of tropical countries, which, as they have passed over a rank, uncultured country, must necessarily hold suspended much that is deleterious. I may conclude my notices of the deadly winds by a few words of reference to the simoom. In it are concentrated all the evils which they undergo who suffer the most from the solano, the sirocco, the harmattan, and the khamsin, or those other winds which desolate the Llanos of the Orinoco, and the plains of Chili. The word simoom is derived from an Arabic word, which signifies poison. The origin of this wind is in the great desert of Arabia. It would appear to be rather a transparent cloud, loaded with all the deadly effluvia of surrounding nature, and propelled in that form by the winds, than a wind itself. It has the peculiarity of raising and bearing a monstrous proportion of the dust of the desert, and, on that account, its horrible front, looming into larger and larger proportion, as it broods slowly over the country, is visible in all its fine and varying outlines. As it passes, the voice of nature is silent; the camel falls on his knees, and thrusts his nostrils into the sand; the buffalo dashes into the Nile, and that gay assembly of living things that people the banks of the old river repair to these retreats where suffering is endured in silence, or close in death. Man, of all the victims of that dreadful torture, enjoys at times the greatest immunity, at others experiences the heaviest fate. The wind seldom lasts more than five minutes. Many Nubians have fronted its approach in the full vigour of health and strength, and, when it has passed, have arisen as drivelling maniacs."

Though the Bengali language has sprung from, and bears a close analogy to, the Sanskrit, it is, in several respects, better adapted than the original tongue as a vehicle for the interchange of thought. Being of comparatively modern origin, it has not undergone any of those deteriorating changes which have rendered the Sanskrit different from what it once was. With it the perverse ingenuity, which delights to invent difficulties where none exist, and to turn clearness itself into mystery, has not been at work. Neither has the jealousy of an ambitious priesthood endeavoured to counteract its diffusion. Spontaneous in its growth, it has branched out of the parent stock unrestrained and uncared for, possessing many of its beauties and few of its imperfections. Of all the derivative languages of the East, it is, perhaps, the most simple in its structure and lucid in its syntax. Its nomenclature, though not quite so full as that of the Sanskrit, is varied and precise. It is the spoken language of upwards of twenty-five millions of inhabitants, which is more than could have been said of the Sanskrit even in its most palmy days,—the days of Kalidas and Bar-ruchi.—Calcutta Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

SATURDAY, July 17, 1852.

THE home journals have lately insisted a good deal upon the disadvantages to which the dress of our troops exposes them in action, especially with an enemy like the Caffres or the Burmese, who carry on their operations as irregulars, and to whom the scarlet uniform of the British army offers a conspicuous mark. Whilst the dusky skins and sober costume of the former render them even in masses comparatively indistinct, our poor fellows are as obvious, though not so agile, as fire-flies are in the dark. Whatever be the hue of the background, they are sure to be seen, presenting objects which marksmen with the slightest skill cannot fail to hit. This is an objection to our national military dress which has been urged by British commanders over and over again. It has been very recently reiterated by General Godwin, in his despatch detailing the operations at Rangoon. The Burmese, he says, "are not only good shots, but bold in their operations, and clever in selecting their ground and covering themselves: our casualties will prove this, our dress exposing us, and their garb and colour concealing them."

Some show of argument in favour of maintaining the national dye of our military dress has been made, on the ground that it is necessary by way of distinction. But red is not the only distinguishing colour, and, in the mode in which modern warfare is carried on, such a distinction is unimportant: we never heard of an instance in which those portions of the British army that are clothed in blue or green were ever mistaken for enemies who wore those colours.

There is, however, an objection to our military dress in its essentials, without reference to colour, when our troops are employed in the East, to which one of the Calcutta papers has directed attention. "The European troops employed at Rangoon," says the Calcutta Morning Chronicle, "were landed and exposed to the sun for two days in red cloth jackets, which would be oppressive in a summer's day in England; in stocks stiff enough to give any man an apoplexy; and with shakos on their heads so ingeniously contrived as to yield the smallest possible protection from the sun. General Godwin himself wore his cocked hat and plume throughout the operations, and thus compelled his officers to do the same. The natural consequence was, that more men suffered from coup de soleil than from the enemy's fire, and the 'pause' of her Majesty's 51st may have been owing in no small degree to a run of nearly half a mile, under a burning sun, with a weight which would burthen a Canadian."

This evil, which appears to us more serious than the other, is susceptible of an easy remedy. There seems to be no objection whatever, saving that of expense, to the adapting the clothing of our troops to the climate and the temperature in which they are required to act; and, taking into consideration the enormous cost of replacing a European soldier in India, the additional outlay attending the equipment of our army serving there with a double wardrobe would probably prove a saving in the end. All medical writers agree that exemption from disease in warm climates is commensurate with a due attention to clothing and diet, according to seasons and vicissitudes of the weather; of these two essentials to the preservation of health, clothing, and diet, the former is alone within the absolute control of authority.

Independently of the weight and heat of the clothing with which our European troops are encumbered in India, its form is entirely unsuited to an Eastern climate, which requires that the utmost freedom should be afforded to the circulation and to the play of the limbs. If, in the arctic regions, our hardy mariners are permitted to adopt the garb which the experience of the Laplanders and Esquimaux has taught them to be the best calculated to protect the body from the rigour of extreme cold, why should it be deemed objectionable to imitate in an opposite clime the form of the vestments which the natives have found to neutralize the destructive effects of extreme heat?

A very acute observer of Eastern customs thus condemns the use of the European costume in the East, for European as well as Asiatic soldiers:—

"A person professing total ignorance of the causes which render the military authorities so anxious to make the outward appearance of the sepoy resemble that of the European soldier, as strongly as circumstances will admit, may be thought presumptuous in venturing to express a doubt of the advantage which is gained by it. The handsomest and finest men amongst the natives look mean and meagre in the European costume, which ought to be more convenient and useful than it is to compensate for its uncouth and barbarous stiffness. If the long and graceful vests of the Asiatics should be found to impede the movements, a well-cut jacket and wide trousers might have been substituted: anything rather than the hideous coatee and strait pantaloons, which (it has been observed) give to the soldier the appearance of a scraped carrot. The shako, or cap, is in keeping with the rest of the attire, and human ingenuity could devise nothing more offensive to the eye of taste than the whole habiliment. The sepoy divests himself of his uniform as quickly and as frequently as he can. The dress which the sepoys wear when off duty is extremely handsome and becoming, consisting of the dhotee, a large, oblong piece of muslin, folded round the loins, and falling in easy drapery down each leg to the ankle; a muslin shirt, with sleeves, and another long piece of drapery, which is disposed over one shoulder. The head is covered with a muslin scull-cap, placed a little on one side. Unencumbered with their uniforms, nothing can be more easy, active, and agile than their movements."

Some may ridicule a proposition for putting our soldiers into the light and loose raiment of Asiatics; but the ridicule really attaches to their present dress, which is neither ornamental nor useful in a hot climate, and to the absurdity and incongruity of which Orientals are alive. During the war in China, a paper was extensively circulated by the Chinese authorities amongst their troops, in which they were recommended to take advantage of the absurd dress of the European soldiers, whose nether habiliments, it was said, are so tight, that, if the wearers should happen to fall down, they cannot get up again without assistance. "All you have to do, therefore," the circular added, "is, by some means or other, to cause them to stumble and fall, and you may then kill them at your leisure."

MUCH confusion has arisen amongst controversialists, in discussing the condition of India and the means of improving it, from not properly discriminating betwixt those causes of its backward state which are to be attributed solely to the people, and those which are more or less within the control of the Government. It may be difficult, perhaps, to make an exact distribution, since some are of a mixed character; but in regard to the most obvious of these causes, a little attention will enable us to trace their true origin; and this is the first step towards devising suitable remedies.

With this view let us consider the agriculture of India,—the source whence the Government derives the largest amount of its revenue, and the people the chief means of their employment and subsistence.

Leaving out of the question the proportion of the produce drawn by the Government from the land,—because, whether this be moderate or excessive, there can be no dispute as to this point,—we will review the principal incidents of cultivation,—the processes whereby the soil is rendered productive,—beginning with its preparation; and first, with ploughing the land. All authorities agree that nothing can be more rude and operose than this process, as practised by the Indian husbandman, who has no idea of its true object. It is not only ineffectual, owing to the imperfection of the native plough, but the repetition of the operation, which the rudeness of the implement renders necessary, consumes so much more than the labour of ploughing in England, that, cheap as labour is in India, the cost is considerably greater.

Here, at the very outset, is an efficient cause of the backward condition of the country, which raises less produce than it might in a given area, of an inferior quality, and at a higher cost. As the Government claims a proportion of the crop, the tax which the cultivator pays is hereby enhanced. No one can deny that this cause is traceable directly to the ignorance, the indolence, and the improvidence of the people.

Another early process is that of manuring the land, which is practised upon so small a scale and so rarely in India, that it has been sometimes asserted that the native cultivators do not manure at all. Although the materials for manure abound, instead of attempting to renew the soil by the simple application of refuse matter, which is wasted, or consumed as fuel, the Indian cultivator abandons the land until nature, by her chemistry, imparts to it fresh productive properties. Here, again, the people themselves are in fault. It can scarcely be said that they are ignorant of the virtues of manure, or in want of supplies; what they need is energy. They prefer a slavish adherence to the lazy processes taught them by their forefathers, to improved methods which demand a little additional exertion.

Another early treatment of the land, indispensable in most parts of India, is irrigation, which is conducted upon so defective a plan, attended with such a waste of labour, and is consequently so costly, that many lands which would yield two crops in the season give only one, owing to the absence of artificial irrigation; and where this is obtained, at a high price, for want of deeper ploughing, the water is rapidly drawn from the surface by exhalation. This is another drawback which is mainly attributable to the cultivators themselves. "Until the processes for raising water for irrigation shall be improved in India," observes an authority to which we shall hereafter refer, "a great improvement in the condition of the labourers cannot be hoped for."

In ascribing these defects of Indian husbandry to the people, we do not mean that the Government is absolutely helpless in the matter,—that all attempts to teach the cultivators better modes of operation would be impracticable; what we are endeavouring to show is, that the Government is not to be charged, in the first instance, with the blame of a state of things which it is not in the power of a government by a mere fiat to remedy.

As we proceed, however, we find that there are causes, co-operating with the preceding, for which the Indian husbandmen must be exempted from responsibility. The peculiar climate of India exposes large tracts to permanent injury by heavy rains, which, where a level is not preserved, carries off, not the surface soil alone, but the very land itself. "In Upper India," observes the writer we have just quoted, "all the lands are scoured; their alluvium is annually carried away by torrents, whose collective body forms the vast waters of the Ganges, in the rainy season, loaded with the best riches of the country. Of these enough are bestowed upon certain low lands in Bengal, in a deposit of excellent soil, to tell of the value of the far larger portion carried off to the ocean. Few, perhaps, who look upon that volume of turbid waters, reflect that they are rendered yellow by treasure more valuable far than the gold of the richest stream." To preserve this precious soil, embankments are necessary, and these works, constructed upon a regular plan, seem to belong more properly to the province of the Government, which, accordingly, has made large outlays of the public money upon these and other objects of a similar character. But even here private apathy exhibits itself. Field embankments might be easily formed, where labour is so cheap, and the slight expense would be soon repaid; but, like every other undertaking of this kind, they are almost universally neglected.

The making of canals and roads,—works which in this country are commonly accomplished by private enterprise and capital,—must in India be undertaken by the Government, whose interest it is to multiply them; and where there is a deficiency of these important auxiliaries to agriculture, the cultivators are in no respect to blame. Canals not merely furnish a convenient mode of conveyance, but supply facilities for irrigation. Roads cheapen the transfer of produce from districts where it is abundant, to those where it is scarce and dear. Both these species of works tend not only to benefit the people, but to augment the public revenue. It is consolatory to know that the Indian Government has for some years past applied itself as actively as its means permit to these important works. We should rejoice to think that the system of labour in India, which is in the hands of the people, could make a corresponding progress in improvement, either by the introduction of European agency, or by the communication of some impulse to the Indian cultivators, which would induce them to exchange their slothful and negligent for active and enterprising habits.

This is a subject which, at this period especially, should engage the deep attention of every friend of India. We recommend those who desire to gain enlightened views respecting the agriculture of that country to read some very able papers by Mr. Julius Jeffreys, "On the Natural Resources of India," published some time back in the Asiatic Journal.*

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

This day, Parliament was prorogued by the Queen in person. The speech of her Majesty from the throne contained the following paragraph:—

"The refusal, on the part of the King of Ava, of redress justly demanded for insults and injuries offered to my subjects at Rangoon, has necessarily led to an interruption of friendly relations with that sovereign. The promptitude and vigour with which the Governor-General of India has taken the measures thus rendered unavoidable have merited my entire approbation; and I am confident that you will participate in the satisfaction with which I have observed the conduct of all the naval and military forces, European and Indian, by whose valour and discipline the important captures of Rangoon and Martaban have been accomplished, and in the hope which I entertain that these signal successes may lead to an early and honourable peace."

On the same day, the Parliament was dissolved by proclamation, which directed writs to issue for a new Parliament, returnable on the 20th August.

THE COORG PRINCESS GAUROMMA.—The ceremony of the baptism of the Princess Gauromma, daughter of his Highness Prince Vere Rajunder, ex-Rajah of Coorg, took place on the afternoon of the 30th June, in the private chapel of Buckingham Palace. The ceremony was performed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by the Rev. Lord Wriothlesley Russell, Deputy-Clerk of the Closet in Waiting, and the Hon. and Rev. Gerald Wellesley, Domestic Chaplain to her Majesty. The Queen was pleased to stand sponsor. The other sponsors were the Viscountess Hardinge, Mrs. Drummond, and Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., Chairman of the East-India Company. The Princess was named by her Majesty "Victoria." His Royal Highness Prince Albert, their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, Prince Alfred, and the Princess Alice, and his Highness Prince Vere Rajunder, were present at the ceremony. The Viscount Hardinge, the Right Hon. John C. Herries, President of the Board of Control for the Affairs of India, and Major Drummond, 3rd Bengal Light Cavalry, were honoured with invitations to attend the ceremony. After the christening the distinguished circle were conducted to the dinner-room, where luncheon was served. — Court Circular. The Princess Gauromma has, by an agreement between the ex-Rajah of Coorg, on the one hand, and the Board of Control and the Board of Directors of the East-India Company, on the other, been placed under her Majesty's protection, to be educated in the principles of the Church of England in this country, and that her Majesty has appointed Mrs. Drummond to take charge of her.

MISSION FROM SIAM TO FRANCE.—Monseigneur Pallegoix, member of the Congregation of Foreign Missions, has arrived at Paris from Siam, charged by the King of Siam with a friendly mission to the President of the Republic. When M. Pallegoix first went to Siam, there were only 1,500 Roman Catholics, and there are now upwards of 7,000. The number of priests composing his mission is fifteen, seven of them being natives.

NEW ZEALAND ARISTOCRACY.—Sir John Pakington, Secretary of State for the Colonies, at a Court on the 30th June, presented to her Majesty Te Rauparaha, chief of the Ngatitua and Ngatiraukaha tribes, New Zealand.

* For July, August, and October, 1835.

SHIPPING FROM AND TO THE EAST.—The East India and China Association, in their comparative statement of the number of ships, British and foreign, with their tonnage, entered inwards and cleared outwards with cargoes from and to places within the limits of the East-India Company's charter, from the 1st of January to the 30th of June, in the years 1851 and 1852, show, in the ships entered inwards, in the port of London, an increase of 22 vessels, 15,367 tons; and in Liverpool, a decrease of 59 vessels, 17,962 tons. The general result is a decrease, in the arrivals, of 38 vessels, 13,967 tons; the difference between 523 vessels, 254,659 tons, in 1851, and 485 vessels, 240,672 tons, in 1852. The chief decrease has occurred in connection with Madras, Bombay, Cape of Good Hope, and New South Wales. In the ships entered outwards, the port of London presents a decrease of 2 vessels, with an increase of 16,405 tonnage. In Liverpool the decrease is 12 vessels, with an increase of 3,278 tonnage. The result is, a decrease in vessels of 23, while there is an increase of 18,206 tonnage—the difference between 471 vessels, 232,078 tons, in 1851, and 448 vessels, 250,284 tons, in 1852. The chief decrease in departures has been for Calcutta, Bombay, China, Singapore, Mauritius, and the Cape of Good Hope.

NARROW ESCAPE OF BISHOPS SELWYN AND TYRRELL.—The marvellous escape from murder of the Bishops of New Zealand (Dr. Selwyn) and of Newcastle (Dr. Tyrrell) was mentioned lately at the meeting of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign parts. It appears that the two prelates were on a visit to one of the Polynesian islands, when they were set upon by the natives, and, becoming separated, were in the greatest possible danger. They and their crews were surrounded by the natives, who were full of ferocity, and who were eventually subdued by moral resolution rather than by physical strength. The Bishop of Newcastle stated that he had never experienced, during the course of his life, two hours of such extreme mental agony. — Bell's Weekly Messenger.

THE UNITED STATES AND BORNEO.—In the American Senate, on the 23rd of June, a commercial treaty with the Sultan of Borneo, negotiated by Mr. Baeltier, late special agent to the East-Indies, was confirmed.

BILLS ON INDIA.—The amount received at the treasury, East-India House, for bills on India, from the 8th to the 23rd of June, was 112,613*l.*, and from the 24th of June to the 7th of July it has been 25,974*l.*, making the total for the month 138,587*l.*

EXCHANGE ON INDIA.—The East-India Company reduced, on the 15th instant, the rate of exchange for bills at 60 days' sight, on Bengal and Madras, to 1*s.* 11*d.* the rupee, and on Bombay to 1*s.* 11*d.*

THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.—A letter from San Francisco states that the excitement prevailing in some of the mining districts against the Chinese population had subsided, and there was no longer any apprehension of trouble. It appears that the number of Chinamen in the country has been greatly overestimated.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS.—The Earl of Balcarras, for conveyance of troops to Bombay; the Earl of Hardwicke, and the Vernon, for freight of stores, to the same presidency.

BOOKS.

Memoir of the First Campaign in the Hills North of Cutchee, under Major Billamore, in 1839-40. By ONE OF HIS SURVIVING SUBALTERNs. W. H. Allen & Co.

The historian of Sir C. Napier's administration in Scinde has asserted that no troops had entered the Cutchee hills without disaster before the hero of his history. This little memoir, however, contains the narrative of an earlier successful campaign in these redoubtable recesses, by a small force of Bombay native troops, against Beejar Khan and the predatory tribes of Cutchee. The result was, according to the writer, that "every object was fully accomplished without serious loss or a shadow of a disaster; the mountaineers were thoroughly beaten whenever encountered; the robbers, who had fled for shelter amongst them, compelled to surrender; the mountains had been penetrated in every direction, and roads made in the very heart of them; in short, nothing could have been more complete than was in every way the success of this expedition."

The Oriental Pocket Companion: a New Guide for Travellers to India, China, &c. by the Overland Route, via Egypt. By G. W. WHEATLEY. Wheatley & Co.

"This work," says the Introduction, "has been compiled with a view to furnish the overland traveller to Egypt, India, and the East, with practical information during the journey, and to supply a brief account of the places and objects of interest that may be seen on the route. It is also intended to serve as a journal or diary, as well as a cash account of incidental expenses, and is of a size suited to be carried in the pocket for immediate reference."

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 12th of May, 1852, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
30	On or before 12th of May, 1847.	£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30		1,000	94 8 4	15 8 7
40		1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
60		1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

*a The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

GUTTA PERCHA TUBING.

Many inquiries having been made as to the DURABILITY of GUTTA PERCHA TUBING, the GUTTA PERCHA COMPANY beg to call attention to the following Extracts of Letters from parties who have used it for a considerable length of time.

From SIR RAYMOND JARVIS, Bart.

"VENTNOR, ISLE OF WIGHT,
March 10th, 1852.

"In reply to your letter respecting the Gutta Percha Tubing for Pump Service, I can state with much satisfaction, it answers perfectly. Many Builders and other persons have lately examined it, and there is not the least apparent difference since the first laying down, not several years; and I am informed that it is to be adopted generally in the houses that are being erected here."

From C. HACKER, Esq., Surveyor to

HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF BEDFORD.

"OFFICE OF WORKS, WOBURN PARK,
January 10th, 1852.

"In answer to your inquiries respecting the Gutta Percha Tubing for Pump Suctions, I find that the water has not affected it, in the least, although it will eat lead through in two years; we have adopted it largely, being cheaper than lead, much easier fixed, and a more perfect job."

Tubing of any required length, of every size up to six inches in diameter,

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.

NEW EDITION, WITH GREAT ADDITIONS.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5. 5s. in boards, SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH DICTIONARY, errata suppléments: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, entirely new.
 * To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fittest corresponding translations into Hindustani.

REVIEW IN "TIMES," Jan. 3.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." * * * "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 63,000 words and phrases explained, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." * * * "In India, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

5th Edition, 1 vol. royal 8vo. price 14s.

A GRAMMAR of the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE. To which is added, a short Grammar of the Dakhni.

1 vol. royal 8vo. price £1. 10s.

An INTRODUCTION to the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE. Designed especially for those who have no instructor.

In 2 vols. 4to. price £1. 16s.

MUNTAKHABAT-I-HINDI; OR, SELECTIONS IN HINDUSTANI. With a verbal translation and grammatical analysis of some parts, for the use of Students of that language.

LONDON: PHELAM RICHARDSON, 23, Cornhill.

TO INDIAN FAMILIES and others.—A well-known, experienced, and highly respectable lady, who has most successfully brought up a large family, is anxious to TAKE CHARGE of three or four CHILDREN, who may, for a time, be deprived of a mother's care. If at an age to require instruction, their education would be carefully and efficiently pursued under able governesses and talented masters. The house, which is elevated and spacious, is most healthfully and beautifully situated, replete with every domestic comfort, and the climate is peculiarly adapted for Indian children. References to medical men, clergymen, and families of the highest respectability.

Direct, pre-paid, to Mrs. PHELPS, care of Mr. FORBES, Bookseller, 143, High Street, Southampton.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES.—A GENTLEMAN, accustomed to tuition, who has recently returned from India, where he spent upwards of ten years, and was in the constant habit of conversing with the natives in several of the vernaculars, will be happy to give PRIVATE INSTRUCTION, either at his own house or at the residences of pupils, in any of the following languages:—Hebrew, Arabic, Persian, Oordoo, Hindi, and Bengalee.

The Advertiser's address and terms may be learned at Messrs. W. H. ALLEN and Co.'s, 7, Leadenhall Street.

116, Jermyn Street, St. James's, London.

THE public are hereby informed that the business of Mr. SAMUEL NOCK, GUN-MAKER, has been removed from Regent Circus, Piccadilly, to 116, Jermyn Street, a few doors from Regent Street, Waterloo Place, where it will be carried on as heretofore, and solicit a continuance of that liberal support so long enjoyed.

Their branch house at Calcutta, Messrs. MANTON and Co., have always on hand a large assortment of their Guns, Rifles, &c., and will be carried on in future in connection with each other.

Gentlemen proceeding to India are respectfully solicited to an inspection of their Stock, which will be found replete with every article in the sporting line necessary for their equipment, and at reasonable prices. Superior Tiger Rifles always on hand, and good Double Guns from £25 and upwards.

GREAT EXHIBITION, Class 3, No. 22.—A Case of INDIAN CONDIMENTS, CURRIES, CHUTNEE, SAUCES, SEEDS, &c., by PAYNE and SON, 324 and 326, Regent Street, London, which obtained "THE HONOURABLE MENTION" of the Royal Commissioners.

THE BEST INDIAN CURRY POWDER, in 1 lb. bottles, 3s. 6d.; ½ lb., 2s. 3d.; and ¼ lb., 1s. 6d.; or 7 lb. bottles for 21s.

INDIAN CURRY and MULLIGATAWNY PASTE, in bottles 2s. 3d. and 3s. 6d. each.

THE DELHI CHUTNEE, 1s. 6d. per bottle.

THE INDIAN CURRY SAUCE, of superior quality, in antique bottles.—This novel and piquant Sauce is peculiarly adapted for Steaks, Chops, Game, Fish, Cold Meats, Soups, &c. The addition of a little of this Sauce, in cases where a curry cannot be procured, will prove a valuable accompaniment to connoisseurs.

All Indian Condiments, Mangoes, Sauces, &c., from Calcutta direct. PAYNE and Co., Importers and Manufacturers, 324 and 326, Regent Street, London.—May be had of Messrs. DUNCAN MACLEAN and SONS, Princes Street, Edinburgh; BAXTER and SONS, Buchanan Street, Glasgow; or through any Italian Warehouse in the kingdom.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS A CERTAIN REMEDY FOR DEBILITATED CONSTITUTIONS, LOSS OF APPETITE, and LOWNESS OF SPIRITS.—Mr. Richard White, of No. 8, Albion Square, Manchester Road, Bradford, was afflicted for several months with a bodily weakness, loss of appetite, and lowness of spirits, and for a long time a patient at the Dispensary, but derived no benefit whatever, and was told by the medical attendant that he was in a deep decline, medicine being of no further use to him. About this time he was recommended to try Holloway's Pills, and this invaluable medicine speedily effected a perfect cure, and he has ever since enjoyed the best of health, now nearly ten years.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

Passages engaged, baggage shipped, insurances effected, and fullest information given. Circulars of the routes via Southampton, Marseilles, and Trieste, gratis.—GEO. W. WHEATLEY and Co. (late Waghorn and Co.), Oriental and General Agents, 156, Leadenhall Street, and Universal Office, Regent Circus.

OVERLAND AGENCY.—HICKIE, BORMAN, & Co., East-India and General Agents, forward packages for Overland Route to India, China, &c., to the 15th of every month, at reduced rates. They also ship goods, parcels, and baggage, and engage passages by steamers and sailing-vessels to all parts of the world; effect insurances, execute orders for supplies and outfitting, and transact every description of agency business with economy and despatch. Having offices at Southampton, every attention is paid to the requirements of passengers arriving or proceeding by the Overland Route.—Offices, 127, Leadenhall Street, London, and 4, Oriental Place, Southampton.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Veprey, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 6d. and upwards, which may be had of GROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, &c. &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKING, KNEE-CAPS, ANKLETS, &c., which have been tested in the hottest climates, and proved invaluable in all cases where support is necessary. They are drawn on with ease, as an ordinary stocking, and perfectly porous. They produce a pressure equal and permanent in every part, and not a muscle of the limb is impeded in its free and healthy action. They are now recommended by every London practitioner of eminence, and may be ordered through Messrs. JOHN WOOLLER and Co., Bombay (of whom prospectuses may be obtained); Messrs. GRINDLAY and Co.; and 5, Vere Street, London.

DECAYED TEETH and TOOTH-ACHE.—Price 2s. 6d.

—Patronized by Her Majesty and H.R.H. Prince Albert. Mr. HOWARD'S WHITE SUCCEDANEUM for stopping decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and immediately becomes into a WAXEN EMERALD; in will remain in the tooth many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, and arresting the further progress of decay, and is far superior to anything ever before used, as it will NEVER become discoloured in the tooth. All persons use it themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Prepared only by Mr. Howard, Surgeon-Dentist, 17, George Street, Hanover Square, who will send it into the country free by post. Sold by Savory, 220, Regent Street; Sanger, 150, and Hannay, 63, Oxford Street; Butler, 4, Cheapside; Johnston, 68, Cornhill; and all medicine vendors in the kingdom. Price 2s. 6d. Mr. Howard continues to supply the loss of teeth on his NEW SYSTEM of SELF-ADHESION, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. 17, George Street, Hanover Square. At home from 10 till 4.

SUMMER.—The recurrence of the summer solstice invites the full display of female beauty—adorning the fashionable promenade, the ride, and drive; in all cases, fervid heat, and its concomitant, dust, materially injure the skin, producing sunburn, tan, freckles, and discolourations, of an almost indelible character. To obviate and eradicate these baneful results, recourse may with confidence be had to ROWLANDS' KALYDOR, a preparation of vital importance to the sustenance of female beauty. It imparts a refreshing coolness to the skin, allays heat and irritability, purifies it from all eruptions, and realizes a clear and fair complexion. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its selection by royalty, and the several courts throughout Europe, together with the élite of the aristocracy.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

The new and beautiful Perfume, ROWLANDS' AQUA D'ORO, is an essence of the subtlest and most durable pungency, the aroma and bouquet of which are the most refreshing known, and have caused it to be patronized by the élite of the aristocracy, whose judgment and good taste are never at fault. Its odoriferous, its revivifying effect, its refreshing properties, and its choice perfume applied to the delicate mouchoir of the belle of fashion render it an essential accompaniment to places of public amusement and crowded assemblies. In all cases of over-excitement or fatigue it will prove gratefully refreshing, if taken as a cooling beverage, diluted with water.—Price 3s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, for the growth, and for preserving, improving, and beautifying the Human Hair.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for preserving and beautifying the Teeth, strengthening the Gums, and for rendering the Breath sweet and pure.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

Beware of SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS", preceding that of the article, on the wrapper or label. Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London; and by chemists and perfumers.

ESTABLISHED 60 YEARS.

PEAKOME'S SADDLERY, &c. for all parts of the world.—Noblemen, gentlemen, and emigrants, are solicited to purchase at fair remunerating prices, and compare them with extortionate prices charged by others.—Best hogskin saddles complete, four guineas; ditto second quality, 70s.; best double bridles, 18s.; best patent carriage collars, 15s.; best pair-horse carriage harness, 18 guineas; round double reins, 40s.; best single harness, £7.

LONDON:—Printed by CHARLES WYMAN, of 13, Hunter Street, Brunswick Square, in the Parish of St. George, Bloomsbury, Printer, at the Printing-Office of COX (Brothers) & WYMAN, 74 & 76, Great Queen Street, Lincoln's-Inn Fields, in the Parish of St. Giles-in-the-Fields; and published by LANCELOT WILD, at 13, Catherine Street, Strand, in the Parish of St. Mary-le-Strand, all in the County of Middlesex.—July 17, 1852.

steamer Phlegethon, and proceeded up the river. The party was intended to have been double this strength, but the country boats proposed to have been employed proved unsuitable, and its strength was reduced. At two o'clock next morning (4th June) the troops left the steamer in the men-of-war and other boats, ready to start with the turn of the tide. After a hard pull of three hours, some firing was heard on the west bank of the river. The troops were immediately landed, and skirmishing commenced. Captain Tarlton, of the Fox, landed with his seamen, and drove the Burmese before them, when the enemy got into their rear, and plundered the boats: the return of the crew prevented any serious damage. The boats crossed over to the right bank of the river, nearly opposite the great pagoda, in which the enemy were established. The Burmese now moved boldly down, with the view of attacking us. Major Cotton very prudently restrained the ardour of the men, and forbade any return of their fire till the enemy were close upon him, when Europeans and natives were at once let slip, and drove the Burmese back in an instant, chasing them into and through the pagoda. No resistance whatever was offered, and their last man had escaped before our troops had well entered. A considerable quantity of arms and grain were captured. The grain was made over to the citizens, who complained that their families were starving in the jungles hard by, and a supply of arms and ammunition was placed at their disposal. On the 5th the whole force re-embarked and returned to Rangoon.

The native population had returned to Rangoon; the market was abundantly supplied, and the people were peaceable and respectful. The troops were healthy, for the season, and everything seemed to be progressing as auspiciously as the most sanguine could desire.

No communication had been received from the court of Ava, which, it is reported, has determined to protract the war. So far, therefore, our demonstration has failed of effect. The policy of the measure has, nevertheless, been approved in most quarters. "If we had commenced operations in November," observes the Friend of India, "there would have been no time for any communication with Ava.

"We could not have consented to any procrastinated negotiations, when the season for operations had commenced, but must have proceeded on our march to Ava, immediately after the capture of Rangoon. Nothing was more effectually calculated to bring the Burmese court to its senses than to strike a blow at once at the most important port in the kingdom, to occupy the maritime provinces, and to close up all external communications. Before this attempt had been made and had failed, Lord Dalhousie would, we think, have incurred the censure of England and Europe, if he had at once marched an army to the conquest of the capital, and shaken the Burmese Government to pieces, even to avenge the accumulated injuries we had received."

The advocates of annexation of part of the Burmese empire are numerous and urgent. It is argued that we have no alternative; that if we do not annex Pegu, the United States will occupy it, and that the Tenasserim provinces, ceded at the close of the last war, are almost the only acquisitions which have proved remunerative to the Indian exchequer.

There has been a lull on the north-western frontier. Sir Colin Campbell's force marched into Peshawur on the 1st June, leaving the hill tribes to their own devices. It was stated positively that the Brigadier, reinforced to 6,000 men, was to go forth again, and to deal with the Swattees in their own valleys; but our troops remained quietly in cantonments. Sir Colin Campbell has resigned the command on account of ill health; but some of the journals allege that it has something to do with the disapprobation said to be expressed by the head of the Government respecting his operations in the hill country.

The Delhi Gazette of June 26 mentions a report contained in a native letter, dated the 18th, that there was some skirmishing between our troops and the people of Tungee, Mohmunds, and Swattees, said to be twelve thousand strong, on the 16th. "Twelve men of the infantry are said to have been killed and nine wounded, while seven troopers of the cavalry were killed and three wounded, before the enemy was put to flight, a considerable number of whom are reported to have fallen; but, as usual, the majority escaped to the hills." The editor does not place much reliance upon this information.

A correspondent of the Mofussilite writing from Peshawur states, that the wild mountaineers inhabiting the hills around the great salt-mines at Buhadoor Khel, have made a desperate attack upon the small force in garrison at that post. A body of local police employed on the spot, went over to the enemy, and Lieut. Wilde, the officer in command of the force, was compelled to send to Kohat for reinforcements, who speedily drove the enemy back to their hills. The cause of the foray was a report which had spread along the mountains, that the British troops had been destroyed at Ranezaie by the Swattees. The writer subjoins a translation of a letter written by Saadut Khan, the Momund chief, to the commissioner of this district:—

"You have deprived us of those lands in the Dooab which we looked upon as our life—the sinews by which we were enabled to exist; these you have wantonly taken from us, neither can you plead aught in justification of your conduct. You know that we have held these grants rent-free from time immemorial, and that in gratitude for the privileges we enjoyed we lived in perfect amity with our more potent neighbours, the former rulers of this country; you were the first to burden us with heavy taxes, and when we found ourselves unable to pay these, you attacked and expelled us from our very birthright. Was this consistent with the justice and liberality of that glorious government of which you boast being a member? Was it in keeping with the honour and dignity of so great and powerful a nation as you are? You are a great and mighty people; we a band of poor hill people; by placing yourselves on a level with us, you lose much of that lustre which adorns your name. As for ourselves, since you are determined to force us to die of starvation, we have adopted the more manly method of dying with our swords in our hands."

According to the Lahore Chronicle, June 23rd, the British Yoozoofzaie districts continued quiet. "The very efficient measures taken by Lieut. Lumsden, at Goojur Guree, and Lieut. Miller, at Toorunzaie, both in command of parties of respectable strength, to protect the frontier, have had their effect. Not an enemy has been seen within the boundary since the return of Sir Colin Campbell to Peshawur on the 1st of June, while Ojain Khan, who is believed to have been in a village near Pranghur, named Bhairamdheree, with some fifty men at his heels, about the commencement of June, has been obliged to go into Swat, with his friends and adherents, and was still there, according to the latest accounts."

The Cabul news-writers inform us that Dost Mahomed has been again seriously ill, and that his dominions had been enlivened by more than the usual allowance of anarchy.

The following intelligence from Herat, given in the Delhi Gazette, June 19th, would have been at one time deemed of the highest importance:—

"We learn from Herat that, after the Khandaharees were defeated, Yar Mahomed's son wrote to the king of Persia to send some troops to Herat. Accordingly the king of Persia despatched a force of ten thousand men from Mashed, under a chief named Sum-Sam. The Persian troops duly arrived at Herat, and three days after their arrival, Yar Mahomed's son proclaimed Herat as part of the possessions of the king of Persia, and that he, the son of Yar Mahomed, was appointed the ruler. On the fourth day he pointed out eight chieftains of Herat, and under the plea of their having joined the Kandaharees, he had them imprisoned. On the fifth day the Persian troops marched from Herat for Mashed, with the prisoners, and left only one thousand Sawars, called Surbaz, with the new ruler."

British India throughout was tranquil. The rains in Western India had been heavy and abundant, and the tidings from all quarters are most gratifying.

From the native courts of Lucknow and Hyderabad we have no intelligence by this mail, except that, at the former, the King was continuing his retrenchments, and that the Nujeebs will most probably be all dismissed. The great case of Rugbar Deal and Kuniah Lall had been decided by the Darbar in favour of the latter. The Englishman's Lucknow correspondent says his Majesty's caprices had taken another turn: "He affects to be a faqueer, and while he wanders about his garden, he sits under a solitary tree; his purrees and memials, also in the habits of dervishes, are vainly searching for him."

The Marquess of Dalhousie continued at Calcutta, and Sir Henry Pottinger at Madras. The Commanders-in-Chief of India and Madras were at Simla and the Neilgherries respectively. The Governor and Commander of the Forces of Bombay, with the presidency and personal staff, were at Poona.

Accounts from Siam mention that great preparations were being made for burning the body of the late King. Cholera was stated to be committing great ravages at Bangkok.

BOMBAY.—Capt. G. Aitken, 20th N.I., at Bombay, June 6; Surg. R. Kirk, 2nd L.C., at Rajpote, May 31; Capt. C. P. Leeson, inv. estab. at Poona, July 1; Lieut. A. Lloyd, 27th N.I., at Bombay, June 13; Ens. G. Murray, 11th N.I., drowned in the river Moosa, near Malligaum, June 16; Capt. John R. F. Willoughby, 25th N.I., at the Mauritius, June 3.

BENGAL.

BURMAH.

H. M.'s steamer Sphinx has brought despatches from Rangoon; the following summary of the news has been supplied to the press:—

"Martaban was attacked on the 26th of May by a Burmese force of 1,000 or 1,200 men, who were gallantly beaten back by the 49th M. N. I., in garrison there, under the command of Major Hall. Our loss was 1 sepoy killed, 4 soobahdar, 1 naikh and 11 sepoys wounded.

"An expedition of 290 troops, viz., 100 men of H. M.'s 80th regt. under the command of Capt. Ormsby, 100 men of the 67th N. I. under the command of Capt. Hicks, and 30 sappers and miners, Madras Army, under Lieut. Mackintosh, with Lieut. Mayne, field engineer, left Rangoon on the 3rd of June to attack the city of Pegu. They embarked on board the H. C. S. V. Phlegathon, and were accompanied by the boats of H. M. S. Fox, under the command of Captain Tarleton. They stormed the pagoda at Pegu, after some heavy skirmishing on the 4th, with a loss of one seaman killed, three seamen, two sepoys, and one camp follower wounded. The force, after destroying the fortifications, returned to Rangoon on the 5th.

"Everything quiet round Bassien. The enemy had left the neighbourhood, and the inhabitants were coming in numbers to seek protection under our rule. The troops were all very healthy."

Further particulars have since been obtained.

At the earnest request of the Peguere or Taleins, a small detachment of British troops was sent up the river, to expel their oppressors, the Burmese, from the town of Pegu. The steamer was unable to approach the town for want of water, and the troops were obliged to move up in the boats which had been towed by it. The expedition was not so successful as could have been wished. While the two companies were advancing against the Burmese, leaving only a few men to guard the boats, the Burmese got round to them, and before our commander could come to their rescue, plundered them of everything they contained, killing and wounding two or three of the sailors. The Burmese were subsequently dispersed, and the old town captured, together with a few guns which were found there. It was made over to the Taleins, and our troops returned to Rangoon. Our retirement will be the signal for the Burmese to re-occupy the town in greater force, and it is very doubtful whether the Taleins, whose national spirit has been cowed by a century of oppression, will be able to maintain their ground. Any retrograde movement on our part, more especially after a degree of success which was only partial, is to be deprecated, because it will serve to inflate the Burmese with an idea of their own importance and valour.

About the same time, the old governor of Martaban, and a chief said to be a bandit, brought down a body of three thousand men, with the hope of recapturing that town. It is supposed that they intended to wait till nightfall for the assault, but they were discovered by our pickets, and obliged to precipitate their movement. Though they appear to have met us with much resolution, they soon broke and fled, and great was the slaughter made in their ranks. The lesson which they have received, however, will effectually prevent a second attempt on our position.

The Proserpine steamer has been sent up the Irrawaddy, and has made good her way without opposition to the point where that river divides itself like the two prongs of a fork. All that portion of the river which lies below this point, has now been surveyed. Prome lies about eighty miles above it, and there can be no doubt that the Burmese are diligently employed in fortifying it, and have resolved to make a stand at that position, and resist our upward progress. Of course, all idea of attacking the town during the rains, and with our present limited armament, is altogether out of the question. Neither is it so much to be regretted that we have not occupied it before. One argument for the occupation of this town was, that it would give us the command of all the country below it, and clear Pegu of the Burmese. The chief ground, however, on which the acquisition of it was recommended, was that it would afford a healthful station for our troops during the rains. But the extraordinary efforts which have been made, and chiefly by Col. Bogle, to provide suitable accommodation for our troops at Rangoon, have been so successful, that there is every probability of that station proving as healthy to our troops in the present year as it proved fatally insalubrious twenty-eight years ago. Though the rains had set in for a month when the last accounts were despatched, the soldiers and officers were as healthy as they would have been in Fort William. Houses have been erected upon sound principles, provisions are plentiful, and from all accounts, the whole town wears an appearance of as much plenty and tranquillity as if it had been for many years in our possession. On the former occasion, our troops found themselves located in a desert, as well as in a swamp; they now appear to be fully protected against the humidity of the climate, and they are living in the midst of a confident and contented population. The provision which has been made for the immediate removal of the sick, whenever it may be necessary, to a convalescent depot by means of steamers, serves also to remove one great source of anxiety. Although the occupation of Prome before the rains may have been in the original programme of the expedition, we have little cause to regret that circumstances have prevented the execution of the design. Whenever it may be deemed necessary to take possession of it after the rains, it may reasonably be expected that one expedition will be sent across the Aeng pass into the basin of the Irrawaddy, while another moves up from Rangoon. All communication between Prome and the capital will thus be cut off, and all succour intercepted.—Friend of India, June 24.

The matter, in our opinion, of most importance in a force situated as ours at Rangoon, is the health of the troops, and we are glad to find that this is satisfactory, that is to say, the sickness is greatly decreasing, the hospital returns of the Bengal troops, on the 21st June, the date of the despatch of our informant's letter, being, as far as he could learn (and he adds, that the authorities are so ridiculously mysterious that he could only obtain this information with great difficulty), as follows:—

H.M.'s 18th R.I.	97
" 80th regt.	46
40th N.I.	103
67th N.I.	84 = 330

Now this is not very excessive when we consider the exposure which the troops must necessarily have been subjected to.

The duties though constant are not very severe, averaging about 22 per cent. for the Europeans, and 28 per cent. for Native troops. The deaths between the middle of May and middle of June amongst the Bengal troops have been nearly as follows:—

	Numbers of men.	Deaths.
H.M.'s 18th.....	805	8
" 80th (Wing)	425	7
40th N.I.	1,060	6
67th N.I.	990	1

The deaths have been principally from cholera, we believe, but the sickness now prevailing is dysentery.

The 18th N.I. were to move into their new barracks on the 23rd, and much deserved praise is dealt out to Major Fraser for the energy, industry, and skill with which he has pushed forward his work.—Englishman, July 3.

The following is the latest news from Munipore, dated 28th May:—

"The Burmese have commenced stockading the Kubboo valley, and large bodies of armed men are collecting to invade us, and if successful, to push on to Cachar. There will be a good fight before we are beaten, as Raja Keertee Sing and his adherents are determined to hold their country with their life's blood! Woongees and Keewons have been sent from Ava to the northern Shan country, where they are collecting men to invade Assam also. Several Shan chiefs have gone to Ava to receive mandates direct from the king, to commence attacking the English in Assam.

"All these preparations are going on with energy and quietness on our frontiers by the Burmese, whilst the Company Bahadur appears to be unprepared for even defensive measures, both at Cachar and in Assam. The first news you will receive from this of the Burmese will be, either that we have thrashed them, and they are retreating on their stockades in the Kubboo valley, or that we are beaten, and the Burmese after us into Cachar. The political agent here on the part of the British has a guard only of one havildar and 12 sepoahs. If fate decide against us, he will have to retreat also with the Raja to the Company's territories, instead of being prepared to assist us, which would in the end save the British a large expense, for if the Sylhet Light Infantry were here now to back us, we might defy any force that the Burmese could send into Munipore."—Ibid.

We have news from Rangoon to the 21st ult., at which time all was quiet, the weather moderately fine, and the troops in good health. The common belief is that General Godwin cannot now prudently attempt any movement beyond holding his present position till reinforced.—Hurkaru, July 2.

THE MILITARY FUND.

The Directors of the Military Fund are showing remarkable signs of activity, if we are to judge from the number of circulars which they have issued to the army within the past few weeks. Their last achievement consisting of a series of tabular statements explanatory of the annual accounts of the year 1851. At the last half-yearly meeting it was stated that the receipts of the past year had fallen short of the disbursements by nearly forty thousand rupees, and the directors were then unable to state how this alarming deficit had occurred. After a great deal of bewildering discussion, it was resolved that the accounts should not be passed until the directors should ascertain the cause of the deficit, and communicate it to the army. It is to this resolution that we are indebted for the circular before us.

The directors have drawn up a detailed statement of receipts and disbursements for the past ten years, from which we learn plainly enough the whole secret of the deficit. In 1842 the receipts of the fund were nine lakhs and twenty-eight thousand—the disbursements only seven lakhs and forty-three thousand. This comfortable surplus has been annually diminishing; for though the revenue of the fund has, during these ten years past, risen to nearly twelve lakhs, the disbursements have increased at a more rapid ratio, until in 1851 the disbursements amounted to twelve lakhs and thirty-eight thousands. The reason of this is obvious enough.

In 1842 there were 2,732 subscribers to 340 widows—while in 1851, there were only 3,248 subscribers to 521 widows. In other words, while the widows have increased eighteen per cent. the subscribers have only increased five per cent. Let us present in an abridged form the tabular statement which gives this information:—

Years.	Widows admitted.	Subscribers.	Widows incumbent.	Receipts.	Disbursements.
1842	34	2732	340	9,28,699	7,43,491
1843	41	2833	373	9,86,861	8,28,610
1844	32	2937	385	10,45,640	9,77,875
1845	25	3063	394	10,54,940	9,14,476
1846	44	3122	430	9,82,117	7,79,697
1847	37	3138	459	11,12,214	9,70,443
1848	34	3128	483	11,37,101	10,50,691
1849	42	3151	511	11,39,521	10,99,263
1850	31	3203	531	11,48,833	9,25,678
1851	27	3248	521	11,99,699	12,38,727

These figures are startling enough, and justify all the alarm that has been felt for the stability of the fund. It is true that the directors attribute the increase of widows to the wars in which we have been so recently engaged. Nineteen incumbents were brought on the fund by the disasters in Cabul alone; and sixteen more by the Sutlej and Punjab campaigns. From these causes alone then the number of widows has been increased by ten per cent.

The directors "do not put forth these facts as any criterion of the present or future state of the fund, which is dependent on the value of the pensions, together with the value of the subscriptions, donations, &c." The state of the fund is, as the army is aware, being fully investigated by its actuary, Mr. Neison; whose calculations, if they have made any progress, are likely to be considerably unsettled by the present additional data.—Delhi Gazette, June 19.

THE LONDON MAIL of May 24th arrived at Calcutta on June 27th, per Pottinger.

A SERIOUS MISUNDERSTANDING is said to have occurred between a gentleman in the civil service, employed in one of the Zillah Courts, and a judge of the Sudder Adawlut. The cause of it is asserted to be a difference of opinion on some judicial decision, but though the subordinate judge appears to be in the right, it is feared that he has no chance of holding his own against the overpowering influence of the Sudder, which, in the case in question, expects to be strongly backed by one of the secretaries to Government.—Hurkaru.

ENSIGN A. DE C. COMYN, 6th Bengal N.I., has resigned the service.

SAVAGE TREATMENT OF A BRITISH OFFICER.—During the gale of the 15th May, Lieut. L. Clarke, with his family, were on the Ganges, when his budgerow was swamped near Ishapore, on the Barrackpore side of the river, and he was obliged to escape through the window, carrying his wife and infant through deep water to the shore. With the usual callousness of the native population, Lieut. Clarke and his wife were refused shelter in the numerous houses round, and were compelled to remain, during the greater part of the night, exposed to the fury of the gale, till they reached an empty house just after dawn. Meanwhile, the villagers seized and plundered every article saved from the boat, broke open every box and parcel, and even smashed a piano. At last a darogah made his appearance, but he was unable to obtain the restoration of any portion of the property.

RUTH JATTA.—The ruth, or car procession, took place on Saturday last, and never did we witness a greater falling off in the number and the pomp and magnificence of these processions than on the present occasion: where thousands of ruths with music, flags, and all the tom-foolery of an eastern superstition were observed before, scarcely fifty could now be seen, and then the votaries were either crest-fallen, or wanting in that enthusiasm in the cause of their religion that they were once wont to display. It is wonderful that what neither the missionaries, nor all the educational establishments could achieve in a hundred years, one single act of the legislature has done in a few days; and if our rulers are really disposed to pull down the fabric of Hindoo superstition, they need only pass another act of a few lines, making it penal for a Hindoo to worship an idol, and they will at once give idolatry and its tom-fooleries its death-blow.—Morning Chronicle, June 21.

FIRE IN A STEAMER.—This morning it was discovered by one of the officers on board the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's screw steam ship Shanghai, which was to have left Garden Reach at a quarter past six, that smoke was issuing from her lazaretto, situated under the saloon, in the afterpart of the ship, where about eighty chests of opium had been stowed. The alarm was immediately given, and at half-past six the smouldering fire had been extinguished. The Shanghai is an iron steamer, built with water-tight compartments. The origin of the fire is at present unknown.—Hurkaru, June 17.

PUBLIC PROSECUTOR.—The Englishman reports that the arrangements for the appointment of a pleader to conduct criminal prosecutions on behalf of Government in the Sudder Adawlut, have been completed. Mr. Trevor, the legal remembrancer, will, it is said, be appointed advocate general in the Sudder, with two pleaders to assist him, of whom Ramapersaud Roy will be one. On the other hand, the court has the power of appointing a pleader to defend the prisoner, whenever he has not engaged one for himself; but his remuneration must not exceed Rs. 200, to be paid out of the public purse.

DELICATE SCRUFFLES.—The Lahore Chronicle states positively, that the Maharajah Golab Singh has offered to furnish the timber and lime for the church now building at Sealkote, as a free present to the residents of the station. Our contemporary seems to think, that the propriety of accepting the offer is doubtful on religious grounds, and endeavours to fortify the consciences of the scrupulous by referring to the fact, that Solomon accepted contributions to the temple from heathen princes. He might have found a more modern instance. The chaplain who is to preach in the church, and the bishop who appoints him, are both paid from revenues contributed by the heathen, and surely a free will offering is not less acceptable than a tax.—Friend of India.

THE RELIEF.—The Calcutta Morning Chronicle says, that the relief this year will be very extensive, nearly all the Punjab regiments moving into the provinces, and being replaced by the regiments at Dinapore and Benares. The 11th, 42nd, and 74th at Barrackpore, will, it is said, be succeeded by the 2nd Grenadiers, 25th, and 68th regiments N.I.

THE "CENTAUR."—It is with extreme regret that we have to announce the total loss of the ship Centaur, of Calcutta, Cap. W. T. Salmon, on the coast of Arabia, about 120 miles from Muscat. The vessel was proceeding to the port named, and had made out the land, when, during a fog at midnight of the 13th-14th ult., the current carried her on to a reef near Ras-el-Kubba. As she hung by the bows only, she would probably have been got off, but the Arabs came on board in great numbers, compelled the crew to desist from their endeavours to extricate her, plundered the ship and all on board her, of course, and finally, it appears, set her on fire. Capt. Salmon is a steady and intelligent young man, a careful navigator, and well acquainted with the coast, so that we feel assured no blame attaches to him. The Centaur had a valuable cargo on board, including about 1600 chests of indigo, for Muscat, Bushire, and Bussorah. We trust that the British Indian Government will not allow this outrage committed by the rascally Bedouins to pass unnoticed. One or two of the war vessels of the Indian navy might be very usefully employed in improving their views on the rights of property. If the Imam of Muscat has no influence over them, he cannot object to his allies inflicting the chastisement which they deserve. Capt. Salmon with his officers and crew proceeded in the Imam's ship Artemise towards the scene of the wreck, but the Arabian man-of-war made such little progress against strong head winds that the commander deemed it expedient to bear up and return to Muscat. While proceeding down the coast information was received that the pirates had burnt the wrecked vessel, and this intelligence subsequently received official confirmation.—Hurkaru, Jan 22.

THE 6TH REGIMENT N.I., at Agra, received orders on the 12th to proceed to Cawnpore, to take the place of the 68th N.I., who go to Agra; so that this corps will not see service as was expected in Burmah: though it is expected this is only a temporary arrangement, as they will move again, when the relief is published. We hear that the men of the 68th killed three Europeans of the 70th regt. at Cawnpore, in their quarrel.—Morning Chronicle.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE ARMY.—Arrangements have been in contemplation for some time for altering the distribution of the army. A new division is to be created, of which Jhelum is to be the head quarters. It will extend from Wuzerabad to the Indus; and we have heard it rumoured that Brig.-general Palmer has been offered the command. The change will take place immediately, and Jhelum has been selected as head quarters on account of its central position, Sealkote being considered too far one way, and Rawul Pindee too far for the other.—Delhi Gaz., June 17.

THE GANGES STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY has declared, for the first time, a dividend of ten per cent.

DISARMING OF NATIVES.—The Government has at last made an effort to disarm Bengal, as the Punjab has already been disarmed. In several districts, and particularly in Howrah, the magistrates have issued notices, prohibiting the carrying of weapons of every description, and every person found carrying them is to be sent into the Sudder station.

COMMUNICATIONS.—Our letters from the Punjab mention the rapid progress which has been made in the construction of roads and canals, under the able and energetic superintendence of Lieut. col. Napier. According to present calculations, the grand trunk road will be open to Peshawur in three years, and a canal from Umritsur to Mooltan in five. There are also six or seven officers engaged on canals of irrigation in different parts of Mooltan and the Derajat, and not less than fifteen hundred miles of good cutcha road have been opened, including the road from Lahore to Mooltan, which is shortly, as we hear, to be metalled. We suppose that, when the grand trunk road reaches Peshawur, it will stop there, unless, indeed, Shubgudr be chosen as a more appropriate terminus. With this magnificent highway, 1,600 miles in length, we may laugh at Aurungzebe's boasted line of post-houses from Delhi to Samarcand. We are rapidly beating the Mussulman emperors on their own ground. Their vaunted public works will soon be thrown far into the shade by our roads and canals, to say nothing of the railways and electric telegraphs, which a few more years of our rule will bestow upon the people.—Delhi Gazette, June 10.

MOVEMENTS OF CORPS.—The 1st European Bengal Fusiliers are to proceed down to the Presidency, shortly, to embark for services for Burmah. We congratulate this fine corps on thus being chosen, and have no doubt they will have the opportunity of placing 'Burmah' on the colors, "already bending 'neath trophies they have gained." We may expect them here during December or November.—Citizen.

HEALTH AT LAHORE.—As a remarkable circumstance in connection with the extraordinary season all over India, we may mention that, while there has been upwards of one hundred men of the 96th Regiment sick in hospital monthly at Meeran Meer, there has only been one man sick in the company on guard at the citadel of Lahore.—Ibid., June 19.

WORKS BY PRIVATE INDIVIDUALS.—We perceive from the Agra Government Gazette that the total value of the public works, executed by private individuals, in the North-West Presidency, during the year 1850-51, is Rs. 33,308. It is impossible, however, to compare the statement with that published in Bengal; for in the North-West, a temple of Seeva or a Musjeed, is not considered a work of public utility. The greater number of erections are pukka wells, and the maximum amount expended is Rs. 5,000 by a widow. A tank or two, a few ghauts, a dhurmussala here and there, one serai, and one house and garden for travellers, complete the melancholy list, which speaks little either for the wealth or the liberality of the North-West landlords.—Friend of India, July 1.

INAGNIOUS FRAUD.—The Delhi Gazette gives an amusing story of an attempted fraud at Hooshearpore. One of the servants of the settlement officer dressed himself up as a European, coloured his face, and passed himself off for his master in the district. Of course, he accepted douceurs to no inconsiderable extent, and although the zemindars were a little surprised to find a European asking for bribes, they fell easily into the snare, until the deception was detected, and the swindler arrested by the thannadar. The story looks a little apocryphal.

We have just received a letter from Nusseerabad, which informs us that a sad loss of life has taken place, in consequence of a quarrel between the men of the 3rd Cavalry and the 21st regt. N.I. (Bombay.) The men fought with tulwars, and even did not fail to make use of their own weapons, the sabre and musket, and it was with great difficulty that Brigadier Stalker, C.L., quelled this disgraceful mélée. The Bombay regiments keep their arms in their huts, the same as our European troops, and not like our sepoy, in the Bells of Arms; this may account for the loss of life; some 20 or 30 of both regiments being killed or wounded. This, and the late disgraceful occurrence at Agra, prove that the natives of the armies of both Presidencies are alike in disposition.—Agra Messenger.

COMMUTATION OF LEGAL FEES.—The Englishman stated on the authority of the returns annually compiled by the taxing officer of the Supreme Court, that the fees of that tribunal had diminished to the extent of a lakh of rupees. This statement is denied by the Citizen, who publishes a table shewing the gain to Government from the commutation of the fees into fixed salaries. The profits last year accruing to Government from the new system amounted to Rs. 1,32,613, and the net profits since 1838, have been, in round numbers, eight lakhs of rupees.

THE AGRA BANK.—The Delhi Gazette states that the directors of the Agra Bank have called a special meeting of the subscribers to consider the expediency of suspending pro tem. the operation of clause 43 of the deed, which provides that directors shall be elected annually. This is intended to meet and to counteract the orders of Government, which forbid the election in future of any Government servant to a seat in the direction of any bank, or commercial institution. The Delhi Gazette says, "should the shareholders consent, as we do not believe they will, to become parties to this manoeuvre, we sincerely hope Lord Dalhousie will show his sense of the proceeding by peremptorily ordering all directors of the Agra Bank who belong to the public service, to resign their directorship at once." Mr. Neilson, in a letter to the Gazette, states the object to be merely "to enable the bank to retain the services of the direction, until the new arrangements are fully matured, there not being sufficient time for this previous to the half-yearly general meeting, at which it has been usual to elect the directors."

LIEUT. ANSTRUTHER, of the 36th N.I., has had a narrow escape of his life, from a villainous attack of his own bearer. He was heard to utter loud screams about two in the morning, when his brother officers, who were sleeping in the house, ran to his assistance, and found him weltering in his blood, from a cut in his side made by a sword. They bound up the wound and called in surgical aid, and it was happily found that the wound was not mortal. A man was seen running from the house with a sword in his hand, and was pursued and overtaken. He was Lieut. Anstruther's own bearer.

CHAPLAINS.—The Lahore Chronicle has heard a rumour of a plan for detaching twenty chaplains from civil duties, and placing one with each of the twenty European regiments in Bengal. The Delhi Gazette tells the same tale.

ON DIRS.—Consequent on the order of the Court of Directors, deciding that Lieut.-Generals shall not remain on the staff, General Vincent must vacate the Cawnpore Division. Brig. Shaw, now commanding at the Presidency, will succeed to the vacancy, retaining his present position, pro tem.—Capt. F. J. Harriott, Deputy Judge Advocate General at Peshawur, is likely to be transferred to the Meerut Division, in the room of Major Wiggins.—H. M.'s 87th Royal Irish Fusiliers march to Sealkote, and remain there for one year; they then move on to Peshawur. H. M.'s 75th Regiment remains at Umballa at any rate a year longer.—The 10th Regiment of Irregular Cavalry, now stationed at Segowlee, have been selected for service in Burmah.

THE UNION BANK.—Public attention and the public prints have been much occupied lately with the revived discussion on the affairs of the unfortunate and not-to-be-forgotten Union Bank. The report of the committee of inquiry appeared soon after the departure of the mail. The executive committee called a meeting to receive that report and the reply from Mr. Morton, which had already appeared in print. A stormy affair was anticipated, and consequently the attendance was large. But the thing went off in three quarters of an hour in the quietest way imaginable, not a hand being raised against a vote of confidence in the executive committee and its president.—Harkara, July 2.

THE SECRETARIAT.—Mr. Secretary Halliday goes home on furlough. He is succeeded in the home department by Mr. J. P. Grant, whose place in the Bengal secretariat is taken by Mr. Cecil Beadon. Who will be junior secretary to the board of revenue? We suppose Mr. Grote.—Ibid.

EDUCATION.—A contemporary lately informed us, that Government was "at a stand still, if not absolutely retrograde," on the subject of education. How far this is true, may be inferred from a notification which appeared in the last Agra Gazette. It is little more than two years since anything that could be called a system for the promotion of vernacular education, was established in these provinces. And yet we find that in the districts of Bareilly, Shahjehanpore, Furruckabad, Allygurh, Muttra, Mynpoorie, Agra, and Etawah, the Tehsildaree schools have proved so efficient, that the authorities are in a position to prohibit the employment, under Government, of any person who, after the expiration of six months, is not able to read, write, and understand ordinary accounts. This prohibition will not, of course, exclude from office present incumbents, who cannot read and write; but all future candidates must possess the required qualification. And in the districts where vernacular education has not made headway, the spirit of this notification is to be observed; that is, a preference is to be given to the candidates who can read and write over those who cannot. Instead of inaction, or retrogression, we thus have something which possesses very much the appearance of progress; and unless it can be shown that the notification has been issued prematurely, we maintain that the progress has been very remarkable and encouraging.—Delhi Gazette.

LIEUTENANT TOTTENHAM, of the 7th Light Cavalry, is to be brought to a court-martial, upon charges arising out of the late affair at Shubqudr.—Mofussilite.

CONNECTION OF PUBLIC SERVANTS WITH TRADING COMPANIES.—It is now upwards of a year since the Government republished an old order from the Court of Directors, prohibiting their servants from being concerned in the management of Joint Stock Companies. To show that they are really in earnest in their determination to put down a system which has brought no little reproach on one branch at least of the public service, the Directors have instructed the Governor-General to issue injunctions, which are worded more stringently than the preceding one. The Governor-General notifies that, under instructions from the Hon. the Court of Directors, all servants of the East India Company, whether civil or military, covenanted or uncovenanted, are strictly prohibited from taking any part in the management of banks in India, or from being connected with banks, or any other trading companies, except as simple shareholders; the only exception to this rule being in favour of ex-officio directors or secretaries of the Government banks at the three presidencies. To obviate any possible injury to existing institutions from the immediate withdrawal of all the Company's servants at present engaged in their management, the Court do not insist that those of their servants now so engaged should at once retire from that occupation, but the prohibition is distinct and positive as regards fresh acceptance of office from the date of the receipt of the Court's despatch, viz. the 14th May, 1852. It is too late to ask how far the Court of Directors is justified in prohibiting their public servants from being concerned in the management of their own property. It is perfectly clear that the Court has the power to issue such a prohibition, and that it has been issued under great provocation. As a matter of course, the Mofussil banks will now have to learn to do without directors, for it is not to be imagined that shareholders will be content to make shift with the materials to be found out of the services. They must recense themselves at once to the new state of things, and, following the example of the Oriental and North-West Banks, entrust their money to the charge of responsible managers, whose integrity is ensured by heavy security.—Delhi Gaz. June 17.

ANOTHER MILITARY DISTURBANCE is reported to have taken place at Nusserabad, and this time it is between a regiment of cavalry and another of infantry. The troopers of the 21st B.N.I. and the 3rd Cavalry turned out for a pitched battle, and the latter told two officers of the 23rd, who endeavoured to separate them, that "if they did not take themselves off" they would serve them as they were serving the men. The officers immediately proceeded to their bungalows, and having put on their uniforms, returned to the scene of disturbance, and succeeded with the assistance of a cavalry officer in separating the rioters. These scenes are becoming a little too frequent; within the last three months, there have been disturbances at Agra, Cawnpore, Nusserabad, and Bangalore, and it will, we fear, be necessary to do something more than order a court of inquiry, which never comes to anything.—Friend of India.

ABSENCE OF OFFICERS FROM CORPS.—Brevet-major E. Wiggins, of the 52nd regiment, N.I., and officiating deputy-judge advocate general in the Meerut division, has been ordered to rejoin his regiment the Court of Directors having declined to confirm his appointment, consequent on there being already three captains on detached employ from the corps to which he belongs. We hear that Capt. Gowan, of the 27th N.I., who is acting for Major Cotton in the judge advocate general's department at Dinapore, has also been remanded to his regiment for the same reason, there being already seven officers absent from that corps. We can scarcely wonder at this, with other instances before our eyes, and in our immediate neighbourhood. It only a few months ago that an officer of the 50th, from which regiment there are only two captains absent, was refused a staff appointment, in which he had already acted for a year and a half. We are only surprised that the authorities should recommend either of the cases to be made special. On looking over the Army List, we find only twenty-two officers available for staff employ in the whole army! It therefore seems somewhat doubtful whether the authorities will be able to restrict the number to six officers of all ranks from each regiment, especially with the probability of an additional number being required to fill appointments vacated by officers on service at Burmah; and as to the Ganges Canal and Roorkee College works, we fear they will suffer considerably.—Delhi Gazette, June 23.

A TRAVELLER has lately arrived in Delhi with a number of valuable horses and two fine giraffes. The latter have been inspected by his Majesty the King of Delhi. One of the horses, of the Kattiawar breed, is, we hear, priced at 10,000 rupees!—Ibid.

THE RAILWAY.—The Englishman describes the progress made in railway works. "There are yet," he says, "about eighty lakhs of cubic feet of cuttings and fifty lakhs of cubic feet of embankments to be done yet, which it is expected will be accomplished by the end of July; and by January, 1851, it is anticipated carriages will commence running on the line."

MADAME PFLEFFER has reached Pontianak in safety, after a very unpleasant overland journey from Sarawak.

CAPTAIN IMPRY, as the Friend of India has learnt, is really and truly at Bangkok, and has never, since the unfortunate and misguided step he had taken, gone beyond Martaban into the Burmese dominions. Whatever opinion the Calcutta correspondents may entertain of this gentleman, we can assure them that they are wrong in the belief that he has lost that nice keen sense of honour for which he has ever been remarkable, and of loyalty to his queen and country. He has exiled himself from his friends, relations, and country, having being compelled to it by ill-treatment and persecution, from which the Government would not protect him. He has never meditated engaging in the service of any native state, and is not drilling the king of Siam's troops, though he is at Bangkok in the peaceful capacity of a merchant. And we hope he will do well in the profession he has chosen, and rise above the envy and jealousy of his enemies, and protected from their "hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness."—Moulmein Times.

DEATHS FROM SNAKE-BITES.—The sister of a missionary gentleman at Kishnaghur, just from England, was walking one evening at that station, in company with a couple of native girls, when a snake flew at her, and settled on her arm, she jerked it off, and the animal fell upon the two girls, and instantly bit both of them. They died immediately.—Morning Chron. June 23.

REPORTED MURDERS.—A correspondent at Baitool gives the following startling intelligence:—"The family of Dr. Davidson, consisting of the mother, two daughters, and two sons, residing in a bungalow in the cantonments of Baitool, were found by the officer commanding the station brutally murdered." We have not received any further particulars, and our correspondent has omitted to insert the date on which the catastrophe was discovered.—Delhi Gaz. June 17.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

DUTIES OF MAJORS OF ARTILLERY.

Head-Quarters, Simla, May 22, 1852.—With reference to paragraph 3, section 3, of the Pay Code of 1849, it is announced for general information, that the Most Noble the Governor-General in Council has been pleased to decide that when a major of the artillery regiment may be appointed to the mounted branch and to the command of an artillery division, and one or more troops of the brigade to which he may belong forms a part of the division, he shall not be obliged to join and do duty with the head-quarters of the brigade, before he can draw horse-artillery pay and allowances.

But if the artillery division which the major commands does not comprise a troop of the brigade to which he is posted, he must, as at present, join and do duty with the head-quarters of his brigade before he can claim the superior allowances.

This decision is not to have any retrospective effect.

REWARDS FOR PROFICIENCY IN NATIVE LANGUAGES.

Head-Quarters, Simla, May 22.—His Exc. the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to announce, that the Government of India have decided that officers of the medical department are entitled, on passing the prescribed examination in two or more of the native languages mentioned in the Government notification published in G. G. O. No. 190, of the 19th of March last, to the reward of Rs. 1,000, granted by the 1st paragraph of that notification.

ALLOWANCES OF MAJOR-GENERALS INADMISSIBLE ON PROMOTION TO LIEUT.-GENERALS.

Fort William, June 18th, 1852.—The following paras. of a military despatch from the Hon. the Court of Directors, dated May 5, 1852, are published for general information:—

1. Under the instructions given in our letter of the 16th February, 1814, a rule was established, that "the allowances of a major-general on the staff after the notification in general order of his promotion to the rank of lieutenant-general, are inadmissible from the date of his receipt of such order."

Reply to Military Letter, dated March 5, 1852, No. 33.—Questions relating to the continuance of major-generals of the Company's service in divisional commands after promotion to the rank of lieutenant-general, and to the grant, by the Commander-in-Chief in India, of local brevets of lieutenant-general to Her Majesty's major-generals on the staff.

2. Since this rule was adopted, there has, until the brevet of November, 1851, been only one major-general of the Company's service who held a divisional command at the time he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-general, viz., Major-general Welsh, of the Madras army; and this officer was forthwith relieved from his command, as shown by the general order dated February 16, 1847, of which an extract is given in the margin.*

3. A similar course has been taken when Her Majesty's major-generals on the divisional staff in India have been promoted to be lieutenant-generals, including one promoted in November, 1851; such being the general rule of the service.

6. We now desire that the regulation of 1814, as republished by authority in 1845 and 1849, be duly enforced from the date of your receipt of this despatch.

BRIGADE COMMANDS.

Fort William, June 26.—Of the fifteen brigade commands in the presidency of Bengal, four are at present held by officers of Her Majesty's service.

2. The Hon. the Court of Directors, in their military despatches, noted in the margin,† state that up to the year 1847, the recognised number of brigade commands under this presidency assigned to Her Majesty's officers was two, and that the two additional brigade commands held by officers of Her Majesty's service in the Punjab, were conferred upon them under temporary and special circumstances; the Hon. Court decided that, in consequence of the addition to the royal troops serving under this presidency, one of the brigade commands in the Punjab might be recognised as appertaining to officers of Her Majesty's service, subject, however, to withdrawal hereafter, should the strength of Her Majesty's forces in this presidency be reduced. The number of brigade commands prospectively to be held by officers of Her Majesty's army, was thus fixed at three.

3. Brigadier Sir Colin Campbell, k.c.a., Her Majesty's 98th Foot, having been permitted, at his own request, to resign his command, being compelled by the state of his health to proceed on leave, on medical certificate, an opportunity of carrying out the desire of the Hon. the Court of Directors has occurred.

4. Col. Alexander Carnegie, c.a., 42nd regiment Native (light) Infantry, is therefore appointed a brigadier of the 2nd class, to complete the establishment.

MADRAS.

THE LONDON MAIL of May 24th arrived at Madras on June 23rd, per Pottinger.

THE MURDER OF LIEUT. JOHNSTONE.—The trial of Khadir Khan, a sepoy of the 5th L.C., charged with the murder of Lieut. Johnstone, has been brought to a close at Secunderabad. The case, it appears, broke down. The Athenaeum says, "There was clearly no case against Khadir Khan, except the court were willing to shut their eyes to the most palpable contradictions and non-sequiturs. If he, indeed, be the real culprit, this trial is the best thing that could have happened to him."

THE COAST ARMY.—Our last issue contained a series of articles on the unfair treatment which in this war—the conduct of which every dictate of sound policy, and the plain indication of circumstances, urged should have been entrusted to the Madras government and Madras troops—the coast army have met with at the hand of the Supreme Government; we have no intention of recapitulating in this place the circumstances which have led to the feeling those articles, and others to be found in the present number, have attempted to embody; it is sufficient to assure our readers that they speak the sentiments of the great body of the officers of this Presidency. The universal topic of conversation here is the evident partiality systematically displayed towards the Bengal troops, which even at Burmah is beginning to produce its legitimate fruits, in soreness of feeling and whispered dissatisfaction. The Madras soldiers may repress, but they cannot utterly subdue, the vexation and annoyance inseparable from a position in the back-ground. — Athenaeum, July 9.

MR. J. B. NOZOR, of the Madras Bar, has proceeded to the Masulipatam collectorate, under engagement by the Madras Government, for the purpose of conducting the trials of the native officials under suspension on account of misconduct. Mr. Norton's fee is said to be a very liberal one. — Ibid.

COTTON-CLEANING MACHINE.—Major George Balfour, of the military board at this presidency, has submitted to the inspection of Government a Chinese cotton-cleaning machine, which he considers peculiarly adapted to the use of the ryots in cleaning cotton in this country. Government have ordered ten sets of the machine to be made up in the arsenal and forwarded to the collectors in the cotton districts, that their efficiency may be tried and reported on.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

LIEUT. C. A. WYATT, 37TH GRENADIERS.

Fort St. George, June 29, 1852.—The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to publish the following extract from a despatch from the Hon. the Court of Directors, respecting Lieut. Charles Atterbury Wyatt, of the 37th Grenadiers.

Letter dated 28th April, 1852, No. 31.

Military Letter to Court, dated Dec. 22, 1851, No. 140.—Par. 2. Request that Lieut. C. A. Wyatt, of the 37th Grenadiers, who absconded from his regiment while under arrest, may be struck off the strength of the army.

Par. 30. It appears from this communication, that Lieut. Charles Atterbury Wyatt, of the 37th Grenadiers, absconded from his regiment while under arrest, between the 29th and 30th September, 1851, and that up to the 25th November, 1851, he had not been heard of officially, although, as stated in the letter of the Adjutant-General of the army of that date, there were private rumours which "put beyond a doubt that the lieutenant has quitted India for some foreign land, and will never return to this country."

31. If, at the date of your receipt of this despatch, Lieut. Wyatt shall not have surrendered himself to the military authorities to be dealt with according to the Mutiny Act and Articles of War, we authorize you, in accordance with the recommendation of his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, to strike his name off the strength of the army from the 29th September, 1851.

Lieut. Wyatt not having surrendered himself up to the 10th June, 1852, the Governor in Council directs that he be struck off the list of the army from the 29th September, 1851.

MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS.

Fort St. George, July 9, 1852.—The following movements are ordered:—

BOMBAY.

ALLEGED GRIEVANCE.

Much excitement has been occasioned in Bombay by Government endeavouring to put in force an Act against the poor cultivators, of the existence of which they never seem to have dreamt till they felt its pressure. Until within these hundred years the island of Bombay formed at high water a group of four or five separate islands—the space between which was inundated and overflowed. About a century since powerful embankments were erected, connecting the various islands together and excluding the sea, the space previously overflowed now constituting a salt marsh for a time unfitted for cultivation. Washed by the rains and exposed to the air, the salt in process of time so far disappeared that the poor people residing around it were able to take small patches of it into rice-cultivation, and this harmless variety of squatting was for a time overlooked. As more and more of the land came to be taken in, Government laid a moderate tax on it in the name of foras, leaving the soil in the unquestioned possession of the tenants. In 1851 it was resolved that this state of matters should be altered. This wretched tract is about five miles in length, and from half to a quarter of a mile across; on the east it abuts on Bombay, and might be made valuable for building purposes—and to this a few wealthy natives, who have become proprietors, resolved to turn it. Of course it was clear that the proprietary of the soil was that of Government, as proprietors of the island, and that those who had occupied unchallenged for a century had never in reality had any right to the surface they cultivated; there was no bargain or arrangement of any sort betwixt them and the Government, yet use and sanction had accustomed them to consider the little rice-plots their own, on payment of the trifling tax hitherto exacted from them. In 1851 an Act was passed for opening up wells and cutting roads on the more valuable part of the foras land, by which a very small number of the forasdaras, as they were called, could ever be in any way advantaged; and for this it was provided that the holders should be very heavily taxed, and in return Government were to abandon all claims in the proprietary right of the soil—henceforth to be acknowledged as that of the forasdaras. In effect, this is equivalent to resuming the land altogether, for which but few will be able on the new terms to pay. The poor occupants have petitioned in vain, and as they have little wealth, weight, or influence, are likely enough to be refused all redress. The measure is said to have been obtained by the influence of certain wealthy natives to whom part of the foras lands about to be improved belongs, and who expect to be able to purchase on their own terms as much more as may be desired for building which cannot afford to pay from cultivation the tax imposed on it. The measure is a most odious and oppressive one, and for which there can no excuse be offered: it does not even benefit the public revenue.—Bombay Times, June 5.

THE LONDON MAIL of May 24th arrived at Bombay on June 19th, per Queen (st.) The subsequent mail of June 8th arrived on July 5th, per Auckland.

THE MURDER AT ADEN.—The Bombay Telegraph, noticing Mr. Herries' declaration, that hopes were entertained of speedily bringing to justice the Arabs who murdered an English officer last year, says the authorities have given up all hope. It adds, "To give some idea of the honour of sultans and other sovereign princes in Arabia, and the islands near Aden and the mouth of the Red Sea, it will be sufficient to mention, that two or three European artillerymen flogged one of them for stealing a penknife."

THE REVENUE SYSTEM.—Extract of a letter from Broach, dated 6th June:—"The riots are thriving famously under the remissions they obtained during the regime of the Vikramaditya of Broach, Mr. J. M. Davis, the present resident of Baroda. There is now but one drawback to their rapid rise in wealth and prosperity, and that is, that they have not as yet had the good fortune to obtain perpetuity of tenure at a fixed rent. 'The magic of property which turns sand into gold,' is wanting. If, instead of leaving it optional with government to apportion its demand according to the capabilities of the soil, and thus to raise or diminish the rent, as the case may be, at their will, the principle of a fixed charge not liable to increase or diminution, were established, the cultivators would no doubt flourish amazingly. 'Give a man the secure possession of a bleak rock, and he will turn it into a garden; give him a nine year's lease of a garden, and he will convert it into a desert.' It is, however, a matter of gratitude to find the policy of the British Government tending of late towards perfecting of possession on fixed terms."—Gazette, June 12.

TIGER-SHOOTING.—The following is from a letter from Nusseerabad:—"There has not been very much sport this season, owing to the quantity of rain that has fallen during the last three months. I hear from Neemuch that Rice, of the 25th, has only bagged six tigers since the hot weather set in. Last year the same sportsman, with Little, of that corps, shot no less than twenty-seven brutes of the same description. Lord and Lawri, of the 21st, have killed seven tigers this year. Major Dewar (of the Bengal Army) and Lieut. Sinclair have shot a like number. All the shikar parties have not yet returned from the jungles, either to this place or to Neemuch. One officer, young Elliot, of the 1st Lancers, was very near losing his life in March last. He and Rice, of the 25th, were following up a wounded tigress, when she charged at Rice, who hit her "right and left" with his rifle. This turned her off upon Elliot. The latter was somewhat flurried, I imagine. Be that as it may, the brute caught him by the elbow, and was dragging him away, when Rice caught up another gun and followed the animal. As soon as he got a chance he put two more balls into the animal. However, even this was not enough. Elliot was still being dragged off, when two more bullets from a third gun of Rice's caused the tigress to drop her intended victim. The latter's forearm is withered, I hear."—Telegraph.

SCHOOLS IN THE PUNJAB.—The Bombay Dyandodya supplies some interesting statistics of the extent of education in the Lahore division of the Punjab. The population is estimated by Mr. Montgomery, the commissioner, at 2,470,000, and the district contains four great cities:—

Languages.	No. of Schools.	No. of Scholars.
Arabic	166	1,103
Ditto for the simple reading of the Quoran	255	1,190
Persian	337	2,188
Sanskrit	76	1,311
Gurmukhi	83	546
Hindagi (Arithmetical)	109	2,252
Mixed, where different languages are taught	359	2,905
	1,985	11,500

These figures indicate that out of the number considered to be of the proper age to go to school, only three per cent. receive any education whatever. The larger portion even of these are Mahomedans, who from religious reasons pay far more attention to education than the Sikhs.

LIEUT.-COL. MIGNON.—The Poona Observer publishes an account of the death of Lieut.-Col. Mignon, 1st Bombay Fusiliers. He had been on a visit to a hill station, to fetch his family, and was riding in advance before their palanquins, to escape a squall, and it is supposed that, while crossing a ravine, his horse threw him, and he was swept away. His body was found next morning at the bottom of the river.

THE "CHRISTIAN," from the Clyde, laden with coal, was wrecked near the entrance of the harbour, misled by the Kennerly beacon. The beacon has since been ordered to be demolished by Sir Henry Leake. Either a light ship is to be placed in the neighbourhood of Kennerly Island, immediately, or some other means taken to war hips from approaching the reef where the Christian was lost.

ENSIGN MURRAY. The Bombay Times announces the death at Malligaum of Ensign George Murray the 11th N.I. The deceased and a brother officer went, about sunset, on the 16th June, to the "Dashwood Falls," in the river Moosa, to bathe, where he was accidentally drowned.

TRANSIT BY CAMELS.—We understand that a company is about being formed to establish a transit business, by means of camels, between Kurrachee and Mooltan. Parcels and packages of smaller size and weight going up by trotting camels, and reaching Mooltan in twelve days from Kurrachee!—Kurrachee Advertiser, June 23.

CEYLON.

THE LONDON MAIL of May 24th arrived at Point de Galle on June 21st, per Pottinger.

We have to announce the return of the Governor to Colombo, and the publication of a notice convening the Legislative Council on the 4th of August. The session is likely to be a very busy one, no fewer than twelve drafts of ordinances having been already published, embracing very extensive schemes of law reform, sanitary regulations, and the repeal of the export duty on cinnamon. Queen's House is rapidly advancing towards completion, promising to be a really handsome building; in the meantime the Governor occupies a hired residence in the Cinnamon gardens. Gen. Bainbridge has been sworn in a member of the Executive Council, and will of course occupy his place in the legislative body.

Particulars of a very interesting interview between the Governor and the Kandian chiefs have been published. The chiefs asked to have their marriage laws assimilated to those of the maritime districts, and prayed earnestly to have the curse brought on their country by arrack taverns removed. In the direction of the latter request the Governor has made large concessions, and he has promised his best attention to the first.

The Governor has published a minute on the subject of native ranks, hitherto confined to Government servants, and in the distribution of which much favouritism has been heretofore shown. The Governor proposes to extend the much coveted titles of modliar, mohandiram, aratchy, and so forth, to persons independent of Government, who may render service to the public in the shape of road-making, &c. Another minute from the pen of the Governor is a very stringent one on the subject of the vernaculars. Examinations hitherto have been loose, and the required standard low. Sir Geo. Anderson has run into the contrary extreme, and requires an examination which, if successfully undergone, would stamp the student as a first-rate Orientalist.

Considerable interest has been felt in the progress of a gladiatorial display in the Supreme Court between Queen's Advocate Selby, on the part of Government, and Mr. Richard Morgan, on behalf of the sureties of Capt. Price, the late dep. com. gen.

Much surprise has been created here by the publication of the rates of passage-money adopted by the Screw Steam Company. Unless they are reduced, it is not likely that many passengers will be diverted from the boats of the P. & O. Company.—Columbo Observer, July 10.

CHINA.

THE LONDON MAIL of April 24th arrived at Hong Kong June 5th, per Ganges. The subsequent mail of May 24th arrived at Penang on June 28th, per Malta.

In our last overland summary it was stated that the Kwangsi insurgents were left in active combat with imperialist troops, in the vicinity of Kwei-lin-foo, and that General Wulantai, the Tartar commander-in-chief, had been shot, and had sent to Canton for medicines to cure his wounds. Dr. Parker, to whom the application was made, offered to send one of his pupils to extract a ball said to be lodged in the leg; but the offer was declined, and a few days afterwards authentic intelligence was received that the general had gone upon his wanderings among the genii. On the 6th inst., twenty-nine days after the reported day of death, the body was carried in state to a temple in Canton, where, at last advices, the customary honours were being paid to it. About the same time that the death of Wulantai became known, a report arrived that the Imperialists were worsted, and that Kwei-lin was at last in rebel possession.

That the Imperialists were worsted, and that the whole of the city suburbs were destroyed by fire, there is reason to believe; and some parts of the city may also have been in their possession, but it is not asserted that the rebels are still there. A correspondent, writing as on the 9th inst., says, "The rebels kept possession for three days, and then evacuated, proceeding along the river, burning the houses, and plundering the people right and left—killing both male and female that crossed their path.
 In the Ping-loh district, 40 le from the city, they pitched their camp, and the Imperialist troops again took possession. The Tartar General Heang-ying did not allow the insurgents to remain quiet long, and succeeded in bringing them to an engagement when they were worsted and driven to Hing-on. The main army of the rebels, however, had been reduced by large bodies, who have proceeded to Hoo-quang and Hoo-nan."

But the difficulty of obtaining correct intelligence is still great, and though we have had a good deal of information, of various kinds, communicated during the month, there is but little we should like to put forth as substantial fact. One letter speaks of the capture of Wa-chin, one of the rebel chiefs "and the very man who styled himself King Tien-teh last year"— and gave the throne over to Fong-wang-san, contenting himself with the position of second king. "This," adds our informant, "is the most meritorious action the imperialist troops have ever performed in Kwangsi. Wa-chin will be sent to Peking for trial and execution—this news is very true—there is no mistake about it." But Tien-teh's capture has been reported several times, and yet it has turned out a mistake, so we will take the liberty of doubting the truth of what is now stated.

The imperial commissioner Seu has been superseded by Yeh, and has proceeded towards Kwei-lin-foo. The principal rebel-quelling commissioner Sae-shang-ha, has been recalled to Peking.

On the whole, affairs bear an alarming aspect, and it is impossible to tell what may come next. It is now too evident that this insurrection is different from the various risings that occurred during the reign of the last emperor.

The health of the troops in garrison at Hong-Kong is good—more especially the European portion.—Friend of China, June 22.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The intelligence from the seat of war, which is to the 1st of July, is by no means of a satisfactory character. No further movement of importance had taken place, but details of robberies, murders, and skirmishes show that, on a frontier of 100 or 150 miles, disorder and danger reign; and the latest reports give reason to fear that strong parties of active marauders had established themselves in the mountains and forests not far from the towns of Uitenhage and Port Elizabeth.

On the 22nd May, the enemy, in considerable force, attacked
 Mount Coke, a missionary station between King William's Town and East London, and succeeded in carrying off some cattle, killing and wounding 17 persons. On the 13th June, they captured five Government waggons, containing arms and ammunition, proceeding from Graham's Town to Fort Beaufort, under Capt. Moodie, with a detachment of 31 men, 7 of whom were killed, and 9 wounded.

On the other hand, success attended a combined movement of Gen. Yorke and Col. Eyre upon the camp of the rebel Hot-tentot leader, Uithaalter, on the Buffalo, which, after a smart affair, broke and dispersed the enemy.

The Governor Cathcart, whose head quarters were at Fort Beaufort, had announced, in a proclamation, his intention of marching into Kreili's country, on the 6th of August, and of establishing his head-quarters in that chief's "Great Place," across the Kei, and he had commanded all burghers capable of bearing arms to join him on the Umvazi river, and to take the field upon the old commando system, in order to bring Kreili to submission, "and thereby terminate the present tiresome hostilities."

Col. Eyre had been obliged by ill-health to quit the field.
 Major Hogge, one of the assistant commissioners for settling affairs on the frontier, died at Bloem Fontein on the 9th June, in consequence of a fever caused by exposure to wet at a meeting of chiefs in Mohesh's country.

This chief still pursues an equivocal policy. Affairs are, however, said to be brightening in the Orange River sovereignty, Pretorius having persuaded the Volksraad to confirm the compact between the war council and the Queen's commissioners. In Natal all was quiet.

The Cape Town Mail observes:—"The notion that nothing less than the utter annihilation of the enemy could restore peace, and the proclamation that the object of the war was their extermination, have retarded the close of the contest more than anything else; Caffres and Hottentots hear it again and again, that they must choose between continued resistance and their destruction. A commission of inquiry into all the causes of contest, sent out last year, might have saved Great Britain many thousands: a similar commission, even now, would be of the highest value."

The London Times, in its remarks upon the last advices, says:—"There is only too good reason to believe that the missionaries have in many cases, either through fear or sympathy withheld information and frustrated the exertions of our troops."

It has been found that, during the prevalence of the cholera, the magnet in the locality is sensibly affected, losing a portion of its power, and its vertical tendency being checked.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, August 17, 1852.

"WHAT is the result of the appeal made to the constituency of the country?" This is a question frequently heard, and not easily answered, at present. The calculations made in the journals, founded upon the presumed and even declared opinions of the new members, cannot be implicitly relied on; and if they could, the classification of opinions is inexact. The breaking up and dispersion of the great political parties have so far weakened the principle of combination, that the House of Commons would seem to be in a fair way of realizing the theory that all opinions throughout the country should be represented there. The nearer this point is approached, the more difficult is it to classify the members, especially when the shades of difference are fine, and melt into one another almost insensibly. The broadest distinction between politicians at the present moment is that which separates them into Protectionists and Free-traders; but there are Protectionists who profess to adopt all the doctrines of free-trade, and Free-traders who insist upon protection for British industry by fiscal improvements and a new adjustment of the incidence of taxation.

In these circumstances, to attempt accurately to fix and define the numbers of which the respective bands of Ministerialists and Oppositionists will consist, though readily accomplished on former occasions, would be impracticable now. The utmost that can be done is to approximate to the truth, or to speculate upon probability.

From the best computation we can make, after considering various published statements, it would appear that the ~~present~~ Ministerialists, or Derbyites, as they are termed, number about 286; that the "Liberal" party, including Russellites and Whigs, with the advocates of extreme political views who are expected to concur in opposing a Derbyite administration, amount to about 310. This would leave 58 Peelites, Liberal-Conservatives, and neutrals, who, as they held aloof from the late Ministry as well as from the present, must be regarded as a distinct section, sufficiently strong, in the nearly-balanced state of the two other portions of the House, to make either scale preponderate in a division.

The pure Derby party, though it has acquired by the general election a clear gain of 39 members, is numerically weaker than the party,—or rather the sections that might coalesce as a party,—in opposition. In this state of things, their tenure of power would be dependent, in a great measure, upon the neutral or doubtful members,—the band of 58,—and the degree of assistance rendered by them will be determined by the policy the Ministry shall pursue upon those questions which disunited the elements of the great Conservative party. If the Earl of Derby, in the true spirit of the pledge he gave, shall frankly avow that the verdict of the country has ratified the policy of the late Sir Robert Peel, upon which his measures shall henceforth be based, he will not only be entitled to the support of the followers of that great statesman, but there can be no serious obstacle to a fusion of the most distinguished amongst them with the present Ministry, to which such a union would impart the strength always acquired from public confidence. The commercial and fiscal questions are the only ones respecting which there can be such a discordancy of opinion as should prevent a reunion of the Conservative party; and it has been confessed by the more candid of the Ministerialists,—nay, even by some members of the Government,—that those questions are now settled, and ought not to be reopened.

But in estimating the political strength of the present Cabinet,—that is, its ability to carry its measures through the House of Commons,—it is necessary to analyze the composition of the adverse party, who can hope to displace their antagonists only by the sincere co-operation of the whole body of their supporters, upon which it is not at all probable that they can reckon. In the 310 members given to the "Liberal" party are included at least 50, representing Irish constituencies, who are far more hostile to a Whig than to a Derby administration. Deducting these, we reduce the 310 to 260; and this number comprehends such men as Sir James Graham, Messrs. Cobden, Bright, and Gibson, as well as new members whose principles are rather assumed than known. Considering the "Opposition" party as distinct and homogeneous, it can hardly be estimated at more than 250, which, if better cemented, would be unable to confront a compact ministerial band of 286.

In looking at the incidents of the late election, it is remarkable how few betoken any very strong feeling in the country, which is sometimes almost convulsed during such an operation. Full one half of the places represented have returned the same members as served in the last Parliament. The contests have been comparatively few. About 61 Ministerialists have displaced "Liberals," and about 22 of the latter denomination have occupied the seats of Ministerialists, the balance in whose favour being, as we before stated, 39. The rejection of Sir George Grey, and other less distinct indications, show that Whiggism, or rather that form of it embodied in the late ministerial party, has sunk in public esteem. The exclusion of Alderman Salomons, who has individually done nothing to forfeit the favour of his late constituents, but, on the contrary, has incurred much expense and risk to vindicate the principle he was chosen to assert, seems to demonstrate, in conjunction with the waning popularity of Baron Rothschild, that the Jew question is losing ground. The non-return of Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Anstey, and one or two others, who figured as "bores," or as persons whose manners did not quite harmonize with an English legislative chamber, is creditable to the good sense and good taste of the constituency, though it is possible that their qualifications may have in reality little to do with their ill-success. The Maynooth question does not appear to have exercised so potent an influence in the elections as was anticipated; yet it has not been without its effect in some places. It is worthy of note, that none of the present Ministers have been unseated.

With the exception of Ireland, the elections have been conducted with a tolerable degree of order and sobriety. The excitement has been great in certain places; but unseemly exhibitions of it have been confined chiefly to loose and disorderly non-electors, who resort to a nomination or a declaration of the poll as they do to a fair or a fight, in order to enjoy the fun. In Ireland, scenes have taken place which call loudly for the interposition of the Legislature, to check not only the violence of the lower classes upon these occasions, but the intemperate language of the Roman Catholic clergy, some of whom, instead of endeavouring, if they mix in these contests, to mitigate the ferocity of their ignorant flocks, strive to inflame it.

OUR last publication contained a report of one of those cases to which public attention cannot be too jealously directed, because, whilst, on the one hand, they deeply concern the interests and the progress of Christianity; on the other, they involve the rights of our native subjects in India, the recognition of which in all matters regarding their religious creeds is one of the bulwarks of our authority. We refer to the case of the girl Sayee, at Bombay, the facts of which are these:—

It appears that this girl, or woman (for she is nearly fifteen years of age), is the daughter of a native, of the Maratha caste, named Wittoo Sutwajee, who is employed by the mission of the Free Church of Scotland as a teacher in one of the Marathi schools conducted under the superintendence of Dr. Wilson of Bombay. She had been brought up in these schools from her infancy, and resided with her father in a house in Colabah, where his school is kept. On the 26th of May, a party of men, twenty-five or thirty in number, of the Maratha caste, entered this house, and carried off the girl by force, threatening to kill the father if he interfered. With the assistance of the police, he traced the party, recovered his daughter, and, accompanied by the Rev. Hormusjee Pestonjee, a Parsee convert, placed her in the Native Girls' Boarding School, in Girghaum, Bombay, belonging to the mission, in order that she might be educated as a Christian. The grandmother of the girl obtained a writ of habeas corpus, calling upon Dr. Wilson to produce her in the Supreme Court of Judicature, where she accordingly appeared.

The joint affidavit, upon which the writ was issued, of Gazabae, the grandmother, Govind Narayan Bhut, a Hindoo priest, and Suddoo Ramjee, a Hindoo inhabitant of Bombay, set forth that the father of the girl had ceased to observe the customs of his caste and religion; that he had by threats and force prevented his daughter from adopting the usual signs of a Hindoo girl of her class, and wished to compel her to profess the Christian religion, to which she was averse; that when she was removed by her father and the police, she wept and struck her forehead, and that she told the Hindoo priest that she was afraid to remain with her father, because he ill-treated her, and wished to compel her to turn Christian.

In his return to the writ, Dr. Wilson stated that the girl had never been detained in the school against her will; and that it was with her own free will and consent that she was placed in the Boarding School, which she was at perfect liberty to quit. The affidavits of Hormusjee Pestonjee, and of Mrs. Seitz, the female superintendent of the Boarding School, testified to the same facts, and the latter added that, the day after her reception into the school, Sayee informed her that "she was persecuted by her people because she wished to be a Christian, and that she hoped God would afford her protection."

When the girl was questioned by the judge, in his private chambers, in the presence of her father, grandmother, and friends, the counsel on both sides attending, she declared that she had never been ill-used by her father; that it was her own wish to embrace Christianity, and that, being at liberty to go where she pleased, she chose to go with him.

In this case, there is so little room for doubt, that it would, perhaps, have puzzled the Hindoo priest to suggest a reason why the Court should have come to a different decision, or why Wittoo Sutwajee should have been deprived of his daughter. In the case of Lutchmee Ummal,* the hesitation and apparent reluctance of the wife to return to her converted husband afforded some pretext for the opposition of her relatives to their re-union. Here no ground whatever existed for an interference that would have at once thwarted the inclinations of the child and the authority of the parent.

EMIGRATION and other remedial measures,—including employment,—are gradually relieving the country of the superincumbent weight of pauperism. With the number of paupers, that of street-beggars has sensibly diminished, at least in the metropolis, and the latter class would be reduced in a more rapid ratio if charity, as it is often mis-called, were administered to casual claims with caution and discrimination. There are no greater pests of society than the idle and dissolute who subsist upon its morbid sympathies, intercepting the bounty which the rich might employ in assisting the struggles of the industrious, and too frequently wringing from the honest and kind-hearted poor their hard earnings.

But whilst native proletarii are happily becoming scarcer we seem to be threatened with an invasion of a still worse class of beggars, in the shape of Asiatics,—out-caste Hindus, lank-haired Malays, and mongrels of all degrees,—who are beginning literally to infest us. A dark complexion in rags operates with peculiar force upon certain sensitive temperaments, and when reinforced by a wild salaam in a solitary place, appeals sometimes to another sentiment than that of pity. Most of our readers have probably noticed various individuals of this character wandering about in town and country, and have wondered (as we have done) whence they came, and by whose culpable negligence they have been cast upon our shores.

Unfortunately, the evil does not end in their being so many unnecessary accretions to the stream of pauperism in England, which has enough to do to keep the current free from the rills that strive to join it from Ireland. Some of these men are not merely disgusting objects, but mischievous and dangerous ones. About two months ago, a case was brought before one of our police courts, in which it appeared that a black Mahomedan beggarman,—described in the report "as a peculiarly revolting object, his head being covered with long matted hair, and the covering upon his limbs being tattered and filthy in an extreme degree,—had captivated the affections of a pretty English girl of twenty-three, "the daughter of a gentleman resident in London," and she had actually cohabited with this loathsome being, in a miserable den, for two months.

The subject has, however, pressed itself upon our notice in consequence of a more recent and more serious occurrence. On the 29th ult., at the Worship-street police-court, a Hindu beggar was brought up to answer an outrage offered by him to a respectable unmarried lady, whom he had met in the broad day, walking with her sister in a lane leading from Hackney Downs to Stoke Newington, and who was prevented from perpetrating the violence he attempted only by the screams of the ladies, which brought a man to their aid. It turned out, in the course of the proceedings, that this ferocious fellow had been five or six times actually punished for similar offences, and, when about to be taken to prison, it required the joint efforts of several officers to force him into the vehicle.

We have little doubt that many instances of this kind have occurred which the natural delicacy of the sufferers, and their repugnance to disclose the facts to the world, have concealed from public notice; but if the case we have just referred to were the only one, it furnishes abundant reason for the interference of the authorities, with the view of clearing the country of these men, and of checking their immigration hither. When the East-India Company were a trading body, they took precautions against this evil, by furnishing a place of lodging, under proper surveillance, for their Lascar seamen until they could be returned to their native land; and there can be no good reason why some provision of this kind should not be enforced upon ship-owners. It is the just boast of England that it is an asylum for the unfortunate of all nations; but this hospitality is not to be extended to the offscourings of every society, some of which could gladly send us specimens of humanity to whom our prisons would be palaces, bread and water a luxury, and the treadmill a recreation. When we see our native street-hawkers, who desire to earn an honest penny, flying in alarm from a policeman, who looks complacently upon a Lascar vending tracts, the spectacle does not quite square with vulgar notions of justice, to say nothing of protection to British industry. But when females cannot walk in the suburbs of this city, in broad day, without the risk of indignities like that to which we have alluded, it is high time that these excretions of Oriental nations should be indiscriminately removed from a country which they encumber; and if the law is not adequate to the purpose, that it should be made so.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

The perusal of an article in your last paper, on the degree of responsibility imputable to the Government for the condition of agriculture in India, has induced me to send you the following report of a speech made by the late Mr. O'Connell, on the 26th August, 1840, at a very numerous public meeting at Manchester, convened in order to form a "British India Society." I took this report at the time from one of the London daily papers, and have preserved it ever since, as a specimen of the audacious misrepresentations which might be ventured, only twelve years ago, even in England, upon the subject of British Indian rule:—

"Mr. O'Connell declared there never was a country so mis-governed as India; he defied either ancient or modern history to produce such a system of grinding misery and oppression. The Government, he said, had not even left the poor salt to their porridge. India could produce cotton, rice, indigo, in abundance; but the Government interfered and would not allow their cultivation, and compelled the people to produce that poisonous drug opium. The ancient chiefs of India took, as land-tax, one-sixth of the produce; the Mahomedan princes took one-fourth; but the English Government took the biggest half. A young man, whose friends had patronage, was sent to India, and he had the power to fix what should be the proportion paid by the natives; and the more he made, the more likely he was to be noticed by the Government. India was the most productive country on earth; it would bring forth three crops a year; yet the ruthless Government had interposed, and turned that heaven into a chaos of wretchedness, misery, and starvation. One famine had succeeded another from 1762 to 1837,—the latter was still raging,—one of which swept off three millions of human beings." (Here arose a cry of "Shame.") Mr. O'Connell continued: "Murder, I say, for it is to be attributed to British misrule; their warehouses were full of food, and yet the people were left to starve."

Of the 2,000 or 3,000 persons present, not one individual said a word in contradiction of these impudent falsehoods; on the contrary, they were hailed with cheers. Amongst the persons who surrounded Mr. O'Connell was Mr. George Thompson, then employed in "lecturing" upon the "misgovernment of British India."

I am, Sir, &c. &c.,

ANTI-CHARLATAN.

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

THE BURMESE WAR.

Supplement to the London Gazette of the 16th of July.

India Board, July 16, 1852.

The following despatches have been received at the East-India House:—

Rangoon, Head-Quarters, May 24, 1852.

Sir,—The Governor-General having expressed some anxiety about the south part of Arracan, as being in the neighbourhood of Bassein, I resolved, as soon as I could conveniently leave Rangoon, to take a detachment, and personally visit the place. On expressing this intention to Commodore Lambert, he, to my very great pleasure, said he would accompany me. I fixed on the 17th May, and had a detachment warned to be ready to embark on that morning, consisting of 400 of the 51st King's Own Light Infantry, 300 of the 9th Madras N.I., 67 Madras sappers, and a serjeant and 6 gunners of the Bengal artillery. The whole party was placed under the command of Major Errington, of the 51st light infantry.

The Commodore appointed three fine vessels to carry the troops, the East-India Company's steam frigates Sesostris and Mozuffer, and the Tenasserim, with a smaller steamer, the Phulo, carrying the naval brigade and marines of H.M.'s frigate Fox.

We cleared the Rangoon river on the afternoon of the 17th, and on the next evening anchored off Negrais Island, leading into the Bassein river. At daybreak the next morning, the flotilla weighed, and we ascended that most beautiful stream for sixty miles, which, at four o'clock, brought us in view of the defences, of about a mile long, of the city of Bassein: we had passed some new stockades, one at, and the other south of, Naputa, a few miles below the town, which were not armed; but these consisted of one extensive stockade, with several hundred men in it, fully armed, and with cannon. The enemy looked at us, but did not show any disposition to molest us. The flotilla arrived at the left of their position, a strong well-built mud fort, armed with cannon and men. This we passed within two hundred yards, and so in succession all their defences for nearly a mile, till the Tenasserim, with the Commodore and myself on board, anchored opposite a golden pagoda, centrally situated within the defences. The steamers anchored in succession, without bringing down the fire of a single musket.

The admirable position taken up by the steamers induced me to order the immediate landing of the troops. The enemy appeared so completely surprised and paralyzed by our approach, that I gave orders not to fire unless fired on, and to take possession of the pagoda. Nearly all the men of H.M.'s 51st Foot got on shore under the pagoda before a shot was fired. Capt. Latter, my interpreter, accompanied Capt. Darroch with a company of the 51st on shore, and landed on the extreme right of the works, opposite a traverse covering a gateway; and there a parley was held between Capt. Latter and some Burmese on the walls, which brought on the first discharge of musketry, killing a serjeant and wounding two men. This fire was taken up, ran down the works, but soon ceased.

At this time Major Errington made his advance on the pagoda, and carried it in most gallant style, the 51st Light Infantry maintaining nobly the character they had ever commanded by their courage and distinguished conduct in the field.

The contest that stamped the operations of this remarkable day with a brilliant conclusion was the attack on the mud fort, most scientifically built and of great extent, which could only have been constructed under a disposition* that commanded the labour of its subjects in the short time they had been about it. It was not entirely completed in its details within. The storming party under Major Errington proceeding to the left of the Burmese works, accompanied by Lieut. Rice, of H.M.'s frigate Fox, and Lieut. Ford, of the Madras sappers, came upon this mud fort fully garrisoned and well armed. The attack was most determined, as was the defence obstinate. It was bravely stormed, but with the consequence of Major Errington and several officers and men being severely wounded. Lieut. Ansley, with a small detachment of the 9th Madras N.I. shared in this contest; he was severely wounded, and the corps proved itself to be as good as it looks, and it is one of the nicest corps I have ever seen; its gallantry and devotion on this occasion claiming the admiration of all who witnessed it. The whole affair was over a little after six o'clock.

While these operations had been going on, the Commodore had claimed the services of Capt. Campbell, of the Sesostris, and his men, in destroying a large stockade on the opposite bank of the river; they drove off the Burmese, fired the stockade, and took six guns.

I am informed from several sources that the enemy suffered very severely in the contest in the mud fort.

In having the honour, as well as the gratification, of reporting to the Governor-General in Council the possession of this important station, I will observe that, from every indication of preparation going on, the Government of this country intended to make it a most powerful place, and to repair the loss of Rangoon by establishing Bassein as their mart of communication with this country, as well as a powerful position to keep in subjection the Pegu population, so decidedly and ever our friends, and also to maintain a threatening attitude towards the south of Arracan. By leaving Bassein to itself, I should have been giving it back to the soldiery just driven out, as the defences had been built and put into the improved state I have described by 5,000 men from the upper country, commanded by a man of reputation. To secure it, I have left a garrison of two companies (160 men) of the 51st Light Infantry, and 300 men of the 9th Madras N.I. These will be reinforced by an officer of artillery and half a company, with two 9-pounder guns; the garrison now possessing two 12-inch howitzers. These, with two months' rations, will leave this on or about the 28th inst. Major Roberts, of the 9th Madras N.I., will proceed in the same vessel to take command of Bassein: he is an experienced and excellent officer.

I consider that in a few weeks the Burmese soldiery of the upper country will have returned to their homes, meeting with no sympathy from the Pegu population, and the Pegu soldiers themselves are already with their families; so that the garrison I have left could, in a military point of view, be withdrawn in six weeks, and it will then remain with the Government of India to decide whether it will hold during the war this very important place. If so, further arrangements will be very necessary. Major Fraser, the commanding engineer, should visit it: a very little expense will make it a secure position. The barracks-houses the soldiery are now in are excellent, and well built of wood. Fresh meat can be had, as the population of the place are coming under our protection in great numbers. I may here remark, that that most admirable officer and clear-seeing man, my most respected late commander, Sir A. Campbell, attached great importance to the holding of Bassein.

After passing two clear days in arranging for the stability of the detachment to be left there, on the morning of the 22nd, the flotilla, with the exception of the Sesostris, which remains, weighed at daybreak, and reached Rangoon on the 23rd May, after an absence of only seven days.

To Commodore Lambert, and to this combined expedition, the Governor-General in Council owes all that professional ability and unremitting exertion could accomplish towards success, to which they so largely contributed. The East-India Company's steamer Proserpine, Commander Brooking, arrived twenty-four hours after the place was taken; but even so, his activity was not lost, for he and his vessel went off the morning before we weighed, and destroyed the stockade that I mentioned to have passed on the way up the river.

Major Errington, of H.M.'s 51st Light Infantry, who commanded the detachment of troops embarked for Bassein, who principally directed this detachment, and who fought this detachment, deserves the particular thanks of the Governor-General in Council. I have great pleasure in forwarding his report of the operations for the perusal of his Lordship in Council. I beg the best consideration of Government for Capt. Rice and Lieut. Carter, of the 51st Light Infantry, and for Lieut. Ansley, of the 9th Madras N.I., all three severely wounded at the assault of the fort, and also for Lieut. Ford, of the Sappers and Miners, on the same occasion, for Lieut. Rice, of H.M.'s frigate Fox, who commanded the naval brigade, and who was severely wounded whilst particularly distinguishing himself in the attack of the fort. It has been brought to my notice that Mr. Duncan, the second officer of the East-India Company's ship Tenasserim, at the head of a party of men of his ship, behaved most gallantly upon the same occasion. To Capt. Darroch, of the 51st Light Infantry, and to Capt. Latter, my interpreter, thanks are due for their gallantry in forcing the traverse, and entering at the gate on the right of the enemy's position. Lieut. Craster, of the Bengal Engineers, also merits thanks, and the plan of Bassein, which I enclose for the Governor-General's inspection, will prove his professional competency. To Lieuts. Elliott and Nightingale, with the marines of H.M.'s frigate Fox, and to Capt. Campbell, of the East-India Company's frigate Sesostris, I beg your Lordship in Council's kind consideration. To Dr. McCosh, and the officers of the medical department, thanks are particularly due.

The naval part of the expedition, both sailors and marines, supported the character that has ever been theirs, of undaunted courage.

I have been considered wanting sometimes in not more particularly naming corps or individuals; but in this peculiar warfare of constant assaults on well-armed and strong positions, often well defended, it has been the noble emulation of all to be first into the enemy's works. It was in such an effort of ambition that that fine and gallant young officer, Lieut. Doran, of the 18th Royal Irish, fell, pierced with four balls, far in advance of his proper post; indeed, I might fill my report with names, were all to be individualized.

I now beg particularly to bring to the notice of the Governor-General in Council Major Boulderson, of the Madras army, the deputy judge-advocate-general of the force, who on this occasion accompanied me, and filled the two posts of assistant adjutant and assistant quarter-master-general to the expedition, as I could not move from their important duties at Rangoon Adj. gen. Mayhew nor Quarter-mast. gen. Allan. The major has been of much essential service to me in various ways, and the judicious manner in which he posted the pickets after the capture of Bassein, in that wilderness of houses and jungle, tended to the perfect security of the force. Capt. Chads, my aide-de-camp, never leaves me, and always makes himself particularly useful.

Since my last report, nothing worthy of note has occurred at Rangoon. The town is increasing in importance by the crowds of natives who daily come in, with their families and goods, as is the case throughout the neighbourhood, but especially at Kemmendine, which is as large a place as Rangoon.

The conduct of the troops is excellent, and their health is improving daily since the rain has set in.

H. GODWIN.

P.S.—When recalling the omissions I have been unaware of in my despatches Nos. 1 and 2, it has occurred to me that I have not done justice to Capt. J. J. Wood, of the 18th Royal Irish, who on the 14th of April commanded his corps, during the storm, into the Great Pagoda, Lieut. col. Coote holding at the time a separate command, that of the storming party. I should feel greatly obliged by the notice of the Governor-General in Council of this deserving officer, who is of long standing.

Major A. C. Errington, H.M.'s 51st regiment, to Lieut. gen. Godwin, C.B.

Off Bassein, May 22, 1852.

Sir,—The operations being concluded, I have the honour now to lay before you a report of the assault and capture of the strong stockades erected by the enemy at Bassein, by the troops under my command, on the 19th inst.

The East-India Company's steamers having anchored in succession at about half-past four, P.M., in front of Bassein, a signal was made for the troops to land. This was effected in a very short time, and the ground occupied was an open space running along the river in front of the stockade. The work was full of armed men, and several guns were in position. I formed the troops in line.

The whole force had not landed when a fire from the enemy was opened upon us. This was a signal for the troops to advance, which was done in the most gallant style; the stockade was surmounted, the chief pagoda gained, and the enemy were driven in every direction. Considering the sharp fire that was opened upon us in this gallant attack, our loss of killed and wounded was small.

Having formed the troops in the pagoda, companies were sent out by your orders in different directions to disperse the enemy.

A most important duty still remained to be performed. The enemy's stronghold, a fortified position to the south of the town, was still unmolested. A company of H.M.'s 51st, under Capt. Rice, and two of the Madras N.I., under Capt. Borthwick, were selected to assault this position. I accompanied this detachment myself, in order to be an eye-witness of what I knew would be a most daunting operation. I halted the party for a few minutes on the road, as Capt. Borthwick had not come up, where it was joined by a few seamen and marines, under Lieut. Rice, Royal Navy, by a party of Madras sappers, with ladders, under Lieut. Ford, and by a subdivision of the 9th N.I., under Lieut. Ansley. As it was getting late, I decided upon not waiting for the remainder of the 9th. Taking a circuitous route, we came out in the rear of the stockade, in an open space, which afforded us a distinct view of this formidable position. I here detached Lieut. Ansley, with his party, to the right, to attack in reverse the north-east side.

Our further progress was impeded by water and low thick jungle, obliging us to take another direction, which brought the party out upon the brick road leading straight up to the north-east angle of the road. Upon opening the position, and when within fifteen yards of it, a severe fire of musketry, guns, and jingalls, was opened upon us by the enemy. I was struck in the groin, which disabled me at once. Lieut. Rice, Royal Navy, whilst bravely leading on his men, was shot through the hand. Capt. Rice, H.M.'s 51st Light Infantry, whilst gallantly leading his company up to the assault, was shot through the lower part of the neck; his place was gallantly taken by his subaltern, Lieut. Carter, who, followed by his men, was the first on the parapet. He was struck down by a musket-ball, and rolled over the exterior slope, but still insisted upon being carried into the work. Lieut. Ansley, of the 9th Madras N.I., and Lieut. Ford, Madras sappers, mounted the parapet in the most gallant manner, the former receiving a wound through the right hand. The enemy now gave way in every direction, followed by the victorious troops under the command of Lieut. Ford.

Thus, in forty minutes from the time the troops landed, the whole of the enemy's works were in possession.

In conclusion, I beg to bring to your notice the noble conduct of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers of all arms, who took place in the assault, and the cheerfulness and sincerity with which every individual appeared anxious to perform his duty.

I beg to enclose a list of the killed and wounded.

Commodore George R. Lambert, R.N., to C. Allen, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India.

H.M.S. Fox's Boat, at Bassein, May 20, 1852.

Sir,—I request you may be pleased to inform the Governor-General of India in Council, that the Lieut. General commanding the forces having communicated his wish to make an attack on the city of Bassein, I placed a squadron of four steamers at his disposal for this service.

On the morning of the 17th inst., Lieut. gen. Godwin, C.B., commander of the forces, embarked in the squadron with 400 of H.M.'s 51st regt., 800 of the 9th regt. Madras N.I., 60 sappers and miners, the royal marines, and a detachment of seamen with a field-gun from H.M.S. Fox. I left the naval force at Rangoon in charge of Commander Tarleton, with the Fox, and went with my boat to the Tenasserim, in which steamer I hoisted my broad pendant, and put to sea at two o'clock in the afternoon with the steamers named in the inclosure marked A. The Lieut. General accompanied me in the Tenasserim.

On the evening of the 18th, we anchored off the island of Negrais, at the entrance of the Bassein river, where the Pluto joined us. I had sent her on from Rangoon a day previously, as her small power could not have enabled her to keep up with the steam frigates. At daylight on the 19th, the squadron weighed and proceeded up the river, the Pluto, from her light draught, being ahead, showing the soundings. The Tenasserim led, followed by the Sesostris and Mozuffer, at half a cable's length distant. At a few minutes after four o'clock in the afternoon, the fortifications of Bassein appeared in sight, consisting of a very extensive mud fort, and a long line of stockade on the left bank, on which the city stands, and a strong stockade round the pagoda, with a brick parapet fronting the river. Then, in an admirable position on the right bank, stood a very large stockade, mounting several cannon.
